TAX PRIVILEGES FOR FOREIGN COMPANIES EXTENDED

OW230906 Beijing XINHUA in English 0853 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 23 (XINHUA) - Two tax incentives to foreign companies doing business with China have been extended for another five years, the Finance Ministry announced today. Ministry provisions offering tax cuts in two types of business deals, which were introduced in 1983 and which were to have expired last year, have now been extended until the end of 1990. A ministry official said the move was aimed at attracting more foreign funds to China.

Firstly, foreign businesses signing credit and trade contracts with Chinese companies over the next five years will continue to pay income tax at a rate of 10 percent (half the normal rate) on all interest earned on loans, funds advanced and deferred payments during the contract periods. And foreign leasing companies providing equipment and components to China through leasing deals signed during this period will also continue to enjoy the same tax cut on profits made from rental fees during the contract periods. Other 1983 provisions on tax reductions or exemptions on interest earned from China by foreign businesses did not stipulate time limits, and remain in force, the official added.

REAGAN URGES RESULTS AT STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE

[Text] Washington, January 21 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said today the United States should seek concrete results at the Stockholm Conference on Security and Disarmament in Europe, which resumes January 28. Reagan made the remarks while meeting with Ambassador Robert Barry, head of the U.S. delegation to the Stockholm conference.

In a statement issued after the meeting, Reagan expressed satisfaction with the progress made during the last round of the Stockholm discussions, saying that "an accord with important implications for the overall East-West relationship can be achieved there this year." Reagan said that he and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev agreed at the Geneva summit last November that the two countries would work together and with others at the Stockholm conference. "If the Stockholm conference is successful, it can help to lower the barriers which now divide Europe artificially East from West, thereby making the threat or use of force less likely," he added.

"If the Stockholm conference is successful, it can help to lower the barriers which now divide Europe artificially East from West, thereby making the threat or use of force less likely," he added.

Thirty-five nations, including the United States, the Soviet Union, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Warsaw Pact and some non-aligned nations, will take part in the Stockholm conference. The coming session of the conference will last until July 18.

NATO REACTION FAVORABLE TO GORBACHEV PROPOSAL

[Text] Brussels, January 17 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikahil Gorbachev's arms reduction proposals which would see a complete nuclear disarmament by the year 2000 have been received favorably by NATO. "NATO welcomes all proposals that can contribute to arms reduction," a NATO spokesman said Thursday. He said the proposals "Will be very closely studied when they are formulated at the proper place -- the negotiating table at Geneva."

Arms control negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union resumed Thursday in Geneva.

The spokesman added that U.S. negotiators are in constant touch with NATO allies and that NATO's position regarding the proposals will be determined after they are thoroughly studied and discussed.

France To Examine Proposal

[Text] Paris, January 17 (XINHUA) -- France will carefully examine the new Soviet disarmament proposals outlined by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev Thursday, but the idea of total disarmament is not a new one, French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas said today. Gorbachev's plan calls for a 50 percent reduction of nuclear arms by both the United States and the Soviet Union within five to eight years and the complete elimination of the world's nuclear arsenal by the year 2000. The plan was announced to coincide with the opening of the Geneva arms talks between the Soviet Union and the United States.

The idea of complete disarmament has long been the subject of international deliberations, the French foreign minister said, yet up to now no accord has been reached on a minimum balance of forces, whether nuclear or conventional. Dumas pointed out the three conditions that would allow France to take part in an effective and verifiable nuclear disarmament process. These are: a substantial reduction in the imbalance of the nuclear arsenal between France and the two superpowers, correcting the present edge enjoyed by both the U.S. and the Soviet Union in chemical and conventional weapons, and finally, that no new weapons systems be built that could bring about a destabilization of deterrence and therefore of peace.

TRADE MINISTERS' MEETING ENDS IN U.S.

[Text] Washington January 18 (XINHUA) -- Trade ministers of Japan, Canada, the European Community (EC) and the United States ended a three-day meeting on Saturday agreeing on goals for new global trade negotiations. The ministers also called for a process to speed up the settlement of international trade disputes, according to reports from Coronado, California.

The meeting was designed to set the stage for a new round of international trade talks to be held under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). It was reported that all four ministers stressed the importance of new negotiations. "We need it to strengthen the system, we need it to fight back protectionism. We must send that message to those who are still hesitant," said Willy de Clercq, EC vice-president for external relations at a news briefing.

The last round of trade talks ended in 1979 in Tokyo. Although GATT members have tentatively approved a new round, many developing nations who are GATT members remain skeptical, fearing that advanced nations would use the negotiations to write rules which would allow businesses in advanced nations to make economic inroads into Third World economies and which would limit Third World exports to developed nations. The four ministers said the new GATT round must focus quickly on a plan for streamlining the dispute settlement process. They also agreed on ways to shield domestic industries from harm by foreign imports. In addition to the four-way talks, each party held individual sessions with each of the other four.

It was reported that both U.S. Special Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and EC Vice-President Willy de Clercq expressed their dissatisfaction with the Japanese trade imbalance and urged Japan to import more goods from other countries. But Japanese Trade Minister Michio Watanabe said that his government is doing all it can to open more Japanese markets.

PRC STATUS IN ASSISTANCE ACT TO BE CHANGED

[Text] Washington, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The United States has decided to remove China from the application of a discriminating section of U.S. Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. Section 620 (F) of the act provides that no U.S. assistance should be provided to "any communist country" and lists China and Tibet, part of China's territory, as ineligible for assistance.

In the "Foreign Assistance Determination: China" published in the U.S. FEDERAL REGISTER on January 15, 1986, Secretary of State George Shultz, who signed the document on December 10, 1985, said that "the removal of China and Tibet from the application of" the above-mentioned section "is important to the national interest of the United States." Asked by XINHUA whether the wording "China and Tibet" in the secretary's determination affects the U.S. position on the status of Tibet, a spokesman of the State Department replied: "No. We consider Tibet to be a part of China." "This has been the U.S. position for many years," he added.

XINHUA REPORTS SLOW PROGRESS OF U.S. BLACKS

[Text] Washington, January 21 (XINHUA) -- Black Americans are somewhat frustrated by the slow pace of progress in their lives while celebrating the first U.S. holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr. yesterday. Dr. King, a hero who was fighting for the U.S. blacks' right, was assassinated in 1968. Today, while some blacks are pleased with the dramatic gains, some still believe that racial discrimination is still strong in the country.

Although many blacks have painstakingly achieved in economic and scientific fields in the past few decades, 28.6 million blacks, 12 percent of the nation's population, still lag far behind whites in every measure of economic and social well-being in the country, according to U.S. newspaper reports. One third of the black people are below the poverty line. Among them, about 2 to 3.5 million are described by many U.S. sociology specialists as an "underclass" which seems beyond the reach of the existing social programs. Statistics released here recently show that black unemployment was 14.9 percent last December, compared to 5.9 percent for whites. For black teenagers, the rate was 21.6 percent, versus 15.9 percent for white teenagers.

The underclass blacks are concentrated in urban ghettos, such as the south Bronx in New York. Even the black middle class no longer live in the inner city in those U.S. metropolises, that is left almost exclusively to "the most disadvantaged -- people outside the mainstream, criminals, families with long-term spells of poverty and welfare dependency," said William J. Wilson, chairman of the Sociology Department at the University of Chicago.

BANK OF CHINA APPROVES TIES WITH FLORIDA BANK

[Text] The Bank of China has approved the request of Capital Bank of Miami, to enter into a direct correspondent banking relationship, the eighth such relationship to be approved with a U.S. bank and the first with a Florida bank.

The international department of the Bank of China has designated the Urumqi branch of Xiniang Uygur Autonomous Region to be the day-to-day Capital Bank corresponding branch of the Bank of China. Capital Bank is already working successfully with the Urumqi branch in financing a new 50,000-spindle, $40 million textile mill.

XINHUA NOTES TASS REPORTING ON PDRY CONFLICT

[Text] Moscow, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union today announced emergency assistance for the residents of Democratic Yemen, where a violent power struggle began January 13, the TASS news agency reported. The relief supplies, to be sent to Aden, the capital of the country, include medicines, bandaging materials, blankets, tents, baby food and other goods, the report said.

The assistance will be provided to the population, which "has suffered as a result of recent armed clashes in the country," TASS said. The official news agency did not specify which of the two warring factions would distribute the aid to people affected by the conflict.

The decision was made by the Soviet Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies "in the spirit of friendship and close cooperation characteristic of relations between the Soviet Union and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen," TASS said.

On January 13 when the conflict erupted, TASS in a report quoted the ruling Yemeni party's statement as saying "counterrevolutionary elements" had staged a coup aimed at murdering Yemeni President 'Ali Nasir Muhammad. But in reports since then, TASS has refrained from condemning either side in the Yemeni conflict.

SOVIET DEPUTY FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER DISMISSED

[Text] Moscow, January 22 (XINHUA) -- Vladimir Sushkov, a top Soviet foreign trade official, has been relieved from his post and charged with corruption, foreign embassy trade attaches said here today. On the same day, a spokesman of the Soviet Foreign Trade Ministry confirmed that Sushkov was no longer the deputy foreign trade minister. But the spokesman did not explain the reason for the dismissal.

Western sources said Sushkov had been arrested and charged with involvement in taking bribes from foreign businessmen. Sushkov, 65, had been a deputy foreign trade minister since 1974. Since 1976 he had also been the Soviet co-chairman of the Soviet-U.S. Trade and Economic Council, a group of private American businessmen and Soviet trade organization representatives formed to promote bilateral trade. A spokesman at the council's Moscow office also said Sushkov was no longer with the ministry or the council.

The council met in Moscow last December and was attended by nearly 400 American businessmen. Sushkov spoke at the meeting. Sushkov's discharge was seen as one of a series of steps now being taken by the Kremlin in its campaign against illegal activities in the economic sector.

SOUTH KOREA BLAMED FOR POSTPONEMENT OF TALKS

[Text] Pyongyang, January 22 (XINHUA) -- South Korean authorities are responsible for the postponement of the 11th Red Cross talks and the preparatory meeting for the third parliamentary talks between the North and the South of Korea, Red Cross and parliamentary delegates from the North said today.

Red Cross delegate Kim Chong-yul and parliamentary delegate Chon Kum-chol told their southern counterparts by telephone that South Korean authorities are ignoring the North's peace proposals and untiring efforts to promote the North-South dialogue by deciding together with the United States to go ahead with "Team Spirit-86," a large-scale military exercise. The North is "concerned and regrets" the obstacles placed in the way of the North-South dialogue by Washington and Seoul and the subsequent postponement of the talks. The planned joint military exercises demonstrate that the U.S. and South Korea disregard the value of the dialogue, the two delegates said, and the date for future talks will not be fixed until the end of the exercises.

The 11th Red Cross talks and the preparatory meeting for the third parliamentary talks had been scheduled for February 26 and 18 respectively. However, after the U.S. and South Korea decided to go ahead with the military exercises, the Red Cross, economic and parliamentary delegations of the North announced January 20 that the three sets of talks would be postponed until after the military exercise. "Team Spirit-86" is scheduled to run from February 10 to late April.

DPRK Statement

[Text] Pyongyang, January 23 (XINHUA) -- The Committee for Peaceful Reunification of the North side of Korea today demanded that the U.S. and South Korean authorities cancel the "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercises scheduled to begin January 10.

In a statement carried in a Pyongyang newspaper the committee said the joint military exercises are causing heightened tension on the peninsula and has broken down the North-South dialogue. It said that since the beginning of the year, the North has made efforts to continue the dialogue and defuse tensions. But, South Korea and the U.S. just responded with the provocative "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercises. "The Korean problem must be solved through dialogue and consultation", the statement stressed. It urged the South to cherish the dialogue for reunification and cooperation. The statement asks the U.S. and the South Korean authorities to give up their plan for "Team Spirit-86" to show their willingness for the success of the North-South dialogue and reunification.

SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER ENDS DPRK VISIT

[Text] Pyongyang, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze left here today for the Republic of Mongolia following a five-day official visit to Korea. During his five-day visit, Shevardnadze met with the president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Kim Il-song, and had talks with Korean Vice-Premier Kim Chong-nam.

Shevardnadze, according to the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY, told Soviet and Korean reporters yesterday that the talks focused on bilateral economic cooperation, trade, culture and international issues, on which they "reached unanimous agreement." Shevardnadze said he delivered a letter from Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to President Kim, inviting Kim to visit the Soviet Union. Kim also invited the Soviet leader to visit Korea, he added. The Soviet foreign minister said he was deeply impressed by the Korean trip, and expressed the belief that friendship between the two countries would develop further.

During Shevardnadze's stay in Korea, the two countries signed treaties dealing with the boundary of economic waters and on civilian travel between their two countries. A joint communique on Shevardnadze's visit to Korea will be issued later today.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 'KEY' TO SINO-JAPANESE TRADE

["Economic Commentary" by Wei Xiao: "The Key to Further Developing Sino-Japanese Trade"]

[Text] In examining the prospects for China's foreign trade at the beginning of this new year, the first country we would think of is Japan, our largest trading partner. And we place great hope on the further development of Sino-Japanese trade.

Since the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, economic and trade relations between the two countries have steadily improved. In 1984, Sino-Japanese trade increased by a big margin, amounting to $12.728 billion and accounting for 25.5 percent of our country's total foreign trade volume, an increase of 42.2 percent over the previous year. Of this, our country's export trade reached $5.354 billion, an increase of 20 percent over the previous year; and the import trade amounted to $7.37 billion, an increase of 59.6 percent over the previous year.

In 1985, Sino-Japanese trade continued to grow rapidly. It is expected to reach around $17 billion, an increase of about one-third over the previous year. However, in 1986, can we still maintain such a growth trend?

Generally, the development of Sino-Japanese trade has been smooth, and it has greatly benefited both sides and become an important sign of friendly cooperation between the two countries. Nevertheless, a trade imbalance problem exists between the two countries. In over 30 years of Sino-Japanese trade, China has had an unfavorable balance for more than 20 years. Over the last 2 years, this problem has become more and more outstanding. In 1984, China's trade deficit reached $2 billion; and in the first 9 months of 1985, amounted to $3.8 billion. It is estimated that China's trade deficit for the whole of 1985 might reach $5 billion. If this trend continues, it will not be advantageous to the healthy development of trade between the two countries.

Foreign trade should include both imports and exports, and only by exporting more can we import more. As the unfavorable balance in Sino-Japanese trade has reached a degree unbearable to China, the development trend in Sino-Japanese trade cannot be maintained. Just as Chairman Deng Xiaoping pointed out recently when receiving a Japanese delegation: "To develop permanently, Sino-Japanese trade should strike a balance," and "in international trade, it is acceptable if the unfavorable balance lasts only for 1 or 2 years; but it won't do for long."

The imbalance in Sino-Japanese trade has many causes. First, as the commodity structures of the two countries are different, the prices for the primary products exported by our country are low while the value added of the imported industrial products are high. Second, because last year we did not provide sufficient macroguidance for imports, some introductions were inappropriately repeated and the import of consumer durables grew too fast. Our country has adopted measures to resolve this issue. Third, the Japanese Government placed restrictions on some of our country's export commodities, thus obstructing the expansion of our country's exports to Japan.

Increasing exports of our country's commodities to Japan is the key to solving the problem of the imbalance in Sino-Japanese trade and realizing its stable and balanced development. To expand these exports, first of all, we should work out strategic plans for our exports to Japan and adopt correct policies and effective measures to ensure the smooth development of exports. At present, we should vigorously develop production and pay attention to raising product quality, extensively opening up export channels and strengthening transportation capabilities. We should strengthen our investigation and study of the Japanese market and constantly develop new commodities. It is also necessary to work out specific policies and measures to encourage exports, use imports to promote exports, and combine technology with trade. We should guarantee the normal export of traditional commodities, bring out our strong points, and expand the export of textile products and other light industries to Japan. Recently, it has been necessary to continue to expand the export of petroleum and coal to Japan. Over the long run, we should also gradually change the commodity structure of our exports to Japan and increase exports of finished goods, semifinished goods, and products with high value added.

Meanwhile, we hope that the Japanese Government, and industrial and commercial circles, will actively cooperate with our country and expand its imports of Chinese products. It is hoped that the Japanese Government will further open up its markets and remove its irrational restrictions on the import of Chinese goods. It is hoped that the Japanese Government will encourage the import of Chinese raw silk, silks and satins, rice straw and rice straw products, as well as fresh fruits, meat, and so on. We hope that Japanese enterprises will transfer their production and management technologies to China and assist and coordinate with China in developing its industrial finished product exports. The increase in China's ability to pay will directly result in the expansion of Chinese markets for Japanese export commodities. Undoubtedly, this is advantageous to the people of both countries.

We hope that, on the basis of the four principles of "peace and friendliness, equality and mutual benefit, mutual trust, and prolonged stability" for developing relations between China and Japan, Sino-Japanese trade and economic and cooperative relations will achieve a more healthy and sustained progress.

JAPANESE CORPORATION BOOSTS TRADE WITH PRC

[Text] Beijing, January 19 (XINHUA) -- The Nichimen Corp., one of Japan's nine largest commercial firms, signed trade contracts worth seven hundred million U.S. dollars with China in 1985. This marks a 15 percent increase in contract value over the previous year's, according to the latest issue of BEIJING REVIEW.

Nichimen ranks first among Japanese commercial firms in its import volume of kerosene for aircraft and cotton fibre from China. The corporation's imports of Chinese goods also include crude oil, garments, chemical products, soybeans, fodder, ducks, mineral products and timber. Its exports to China cover complete sets of equipment, machinery, electrical appliances, iron and steel. In 1985, China suffered a huge trade deficit with Japan. But, Nichimen maintained a balanced trade of imports and exports with China. In order to strengthen its trade contacts with China, the corporation will appoint a chief representative in charge of the business arrangements in the Chinese mainland and Hong Kong. The Nichimen Corporation began trade with China in 1953.

JAPAN SIGNS TRADE AGREEMENT WITH PRC 22 JAN

[Text] Tokyo, January 22 (XINHUA) -- China and Japan today signed a trade agreement by which China will export to Japan 8.8 million to 9.3 million tons of oil and 2.7 million and 4.1 million tons of coal every year from 1986 to 1990. Japan will export to China equipment, construction materials and technological expertise. Liu Xiwen, the Chinese representative and Ryuichi Kawai the Japanese delegate reached the agreement after a consultative meeting on long-term trade, the seventh held between the two countries. The two sides also signed a summary agreement which will be considered equal to the Sino-Japan long-term agreement signed in 1978.

SHANGHAI MARINE COURT IMPOUNDS JAPANESE SHIP

[Text] Shanghai, 20 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to a report by a local newspaper, on 19 January, the Shanghai Marine court impounded according to law the 10,000-ton Japanese ship (Yusuki) Pioneer, which belongs to Japan's Tanaka Enterprises Ltd, because the ship had damaged a wharf at Beilun Port, Ningbo Prefecture.

On 30 December 1985, the Japanese ship (Yusuki) Pioneer, which was then berthed at Beilun Port, repeatedly struck the ore wharf because its anchor was slack, seriously damaging the approach piers. After the accident the Ningbo Port Office took legal action against the (Yusuki) Pioneer in the Shanghai Marine Court on 5 January 1986. After investigating the accident, on 10 January, the court approved the Ningbo Port Office's application demanding that Japan's Tanaka Enterprise Ltd provide a guarantee. The court ordered Tanaka Enterprise Ltd to provide 57,822,400 yuan to the court as a guarantee. The order also said that the (Yusuki) Pioneer could not leave port unless the guarantee was provided. If the ship failed to provide the guarantee on time, the Shanghai Marine Court would impound the ship. Because Tanaka Enterprise Ltd refused to provide the guarantee on time, the Shanghai Marine Court impounded the (Yusuki) Pioneer according to law on 19 January 1986.

The ore wharf at Beilun Port, Ningbo is the ore transfer wharf of the Shanghai Baoshan Iron and Steel Corporation. The wharf is a 100,000-ton deepwater wharf designed and built by China during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Production involving the loading, unloading, and transporting of ore at the wharf has stopped since the the wharf was damaged. As a result, Ningbo Port has suffered enormous economic losses, and raw material and energy supplies for the Shanghai Baoshan Iron and Steel Corporation and some other enterprises have also been seriously affected.

CITIC INCREASES INVESTMENT IN HONG KONG BANK

[Text] Hong Kong, January 22 (XINHUA) -- An influential Chinese corporation announced here today that it is taking further steps concerning its investment in a Hong Kong-based bank which has financial problems. The Beijing-based China International Trust and Investment Corporation (CITIC), with its Chairman Rong Yiren, a famous Chinese entrepreneur, announced that it has appointed two companies as joint financial advisors in relation to the discussions taking place concerning its investment in the Ka Wah Bank Limited.

CITIC announced earlier this month that it was to become the majority shareholder of the Ka Wah Bank, one of the Hong Kong-based banks which attract funds from Overseas Chinese. This move is seen here as a contribution of a Beijing-based firm to stabilizing and promoting Hong Kong's banking.

The two advisor-firms are CCIC Finance Limited, a Chinese, Japanese and American joint venture, and China Investment and Finance Limited, a joint venture of CITIC and the Royal Bank of Canada. A CITIC official revealed that the corporation will entrust some law advisors to study its investment into the Ka Wah Bank from the legal viewpoint.

MCDONNELL DOUGLAS OPENS HONG KONG REGIONAL OFFICE

[Text] Hong Kong, January 21 (XINHUA) -- McDonnell Douglas China, a subsidiary of McDonnell Douglas Corporation, one of the world's largest aerospace and information systems companies, opened its regional office here today amid traditional Chinese "lion" dancing. According to Gareth Chang, president of McDonnell Douglas China, the American corporation considers the Asian-Pacific region, and in particular the People's Republic of China, vital to realizing the full and rapid growth of its international business.

McDonnell Douglas signed a near one billion U.S. dollar worth aviation co-production agreement last April with the Shanghai Aircraft Industrial Corporation and the General Administration of Civil Aviation of China. The signed agreement called for the purchase of 26 McDonnell Douglas MD-80 twin-jet passenger aircraft, with 25 of them to be assembled in Shanghai. The Shanghai factory has also built landing gear doors for MD-80s since 1979. Eighty percent of the landing gear doors for MD-80s used worldwide are now built in Shanghai.

This major development of the Chinese mainland is said to lead to McDonnell Douglas China's decision to expand its operations in this region and base the heart of its regional operations in Hong Kong. Anyhow the corporation would choose Hong Kong as its regional office even without this development, Gareth Chang said. He considers Hong Kong as a very good observation post for what has happened in the Asian-Pacific region. One third of the corporation's commercial aircraft are now sold to this region.

HONG KONG PLANS AIRPORT FACILITIES EXTENSION

[Text] Hong Kong, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Hong Kong Government did have plans for improving and extending the facilities at the Hong Kong international airport, Financial Secretary John Bremridge said here today.

He said plans included a major extension of the passenger terminal building; construction of flyovers; extension of both passenger and cargo aircraft apron and parking areas; and a major modernization program of equipping the air traffic control services with advanced electronic radar, display and radio navigation facilities, to optimize runway utilization.

Hong Kong's international airport at Kai Tak has a capacity of handling 12 million passengers a year at present. When a five-stage expansion program is completed by 1988, the airport's passenger handling capacity will be increased to about 18 million a year, according to Trevor Oliver, assistant director of the Civil Aviation Department. Currently, 32 scheduled airlines are operating around 1,000 services a week to and from Hong Kong -- linking it directly with 70 major world cities, with no-stop services to 40 of them.

MARCOS REPORTEDLY MAY POSTPONE VER RETIREMENT

[Text] Manila, January 21 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos may not let General Fabian Ver, chief of staff of the Philippine Armed Forces, to retire before the scheduled February 7 presidential election as he announced to do so a week ago.

Speaking at a forum jointly sponsored by three businessmen groups here today, Marcos said it is not easy to find a successor to Ver, and there are so many things to consider. But on January 14, Marcos said Lieutenant General Fidel Ramos, deputy chief of staff, may replace Ver.

On the country's economy, Marcos reaffirmed his "firm commitment to free market," saying that private enterprise and initiative are the keys to the country's economic recovery. He said this is his first concern if he is elected anew the president. He assured that there will be no favored sectors or interests in the country's economic life. He also promised the businessmen that there would be no new taxes. Other measures he would take, he said, included the intensification of anti-smuggling drive, the passage of an anti-dumping law and support for the export sector.

MALAYSIAN BUSINESSMAN DETAINED IN SINGAPORE

[Text] Hong Kong, January 22 (XINHUA) -- Leading Malaysian businessman and politician Tan Koon Swan was taken into custody Tuesday night by Singapore authorities, according to Malaysia national news agency (BERNAMA). Tan was a major share holder in the Singapore giant Pan-Electric Industries group which is a hotel, property and marine salvage conglomerate that owes 175 million U.S. dollars to more than 30 banks and which went into receivership at the end of November last year. He was detained following investigations into the financial affairs of Pan-Electric Industries by the government commercial investigations department after the rupture of a negotiation between Tan and the creditor bank to resolve the crisis last month.

Pan-Electric Industries went into receivership on November 18 last year owing near 200 million U.S. dollars, triggering a crisis which closed the Singapore and Kuala Lumpur stock exchanges for three days. Then the creditor bank entrusted a company with taking over its property to avoid aggravating the crisis. Tan was elected president of the Malaysian Chinese Association (MCA) on November 24 last year. MCA is Malaysia's second largest political party that and a leading member of the ruling national front coalition.

BEIJING RADIO ON AFGHANISTAN PROBLEM, PART 2

["International Current Events" program; second of three-part series on Afghanistan entitled: "Just What Is the Current Situation on the Afghan Battlefield?"]

[Text] To control Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has sent into Afghanistan 120,000 modern troops and stationed 30,000 more troops along the Afghanistan-USSR border. Using modern weapons such as airplanes, tanks, artillery, missiles, and napalm bombs, the Soviet aggressor troops have killed 1.1 million Afghan people and forced 4-5 million people to flee their homes and become refugees. However, instead of subduing the Afghan people, the Soviet aggressor troops' ruthless suppression of them over the past 6 years and more has invoked increasingly stronger resistance by them, which has left the Soviet Union in a dilemma.

The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has set a precedent for its armed interference in a nonaligned country of the Third World, and the Afghan people's anti-Soviet struggle has also served as an example for Third World countries to have the courage to resist the Soviet Union, a superpower. World history has time and again proved that a big power can never be successful in conquering another nation using power politics and armed force. The Soviet Union's experience in Afghanistan is another proof of this truth.

The Afghan people, who have a glorious tradition of resisting foreign aggression, will never be subdued by a foreign enemy. On three occasions since the 1830's, British colonial troops attempted to invade Afghanistan, but they were driven out by the heroic Afghan people on all three occasions. Although the aggressors today are modern troops of a superpower, the Afghan people remain indomitable and dare to fight against the powerful enemy. Moreover, it has become a trend today that people the world over want peace and oppose war, and they will never allow a hegemonist to tyrannize other people.

As a just cause enjoys abundant support while an unjust cause finds little support, the Afghan people have become increasingly determined in resisting the Soviet invaders. They have repeatedly emphasized that they will fight the Soviet aggressors to the end, until their last drop of blood is shed. We can see from the changes on the Afghan battlefield over the past 6 years and more that the Afghan resistance forces are unconquerable antiaggression forces and that the Soviets will never be able to realize their aggressive ambition.

When the Soviet Union began to intrude into Afghanistan, they sent into the country huge manpower and material resources, intending to take over the entire country within a few weeks. Unexpectedly, however, the Soviet aggressor troops have encountered the Afghan people's increasingly stronger resistance, and what was intended to be a war that could be won quickly has become a protracted war. Today, the Soviet aggressor troops can only control some large cities and major communication lines in Afghanistan, whereas the rural and hilly areas, which represent 70 to 80 percent of the country, are under the control of the Afghan resistance forces, which include over 30 guerrilla groups with more than 100,000 soldiers who have been fighting the Soviets in most of the nation's provinces and regions.

Tempered in war over the past several years, the Afghan resistance forces' ability to conduct guerrilla warfare has continued to improve, and they have withstood the tests of the Soviet Union's powerful military pressure. In 1985, in particular, the Soviet aggressor troops launched several major offensives against the Afghan guerrilla forces in an attempt to destroy the guerrilla bases and annihilate the main guerrilla forces.

In some offensives, the Soviets mobilized as many as 20,000 troops. Confronted with the enemy's powerful offensives, the guerrillas scattered and took cover in areas surrounding the enemy and then launched surprise attacks against the enemy from all sides forcing the enemy to retreat. As soon as the enemy began to retreat, the guerrillas blocked the way with skirmishes and won more victories. In this way, they inflicted on the enemy more than 30,000 casualties and a loss of over 100 tanks and trucks in the major offensives of 1985. Thus, each major Soviet offensive invariably ended in defeat.

Over the past 6 years and more, approximately 15,000 Soviet aggressor troops have been killed in Afghanistan. The aggressor troops have also lost 480 helicopters and over 1,500 tanks and armored vehicles. In addition to attacking the enemy in the countryside and the hilly areas, the Afghan guerrilla forces have also attacked the heavily guarded capital of Kabul, some provincial seats, and even the Soviet aggressor troops' bases and the Soviet Embassy.

The Afghan guerrilla forces' conditions for battle and their weaponry have continued to improve. Today, all the guerrilla forces have their own bases, and some have a fair amount of submachineguns, antiaircraft guns, mortars, and antitank rockets. In some mountain passes and bases, which are targets for bombing by enemy planes, the guerrillas have also built antiaircraft bastions, forming a fairly powerful antiaircraft network that can stop the enemy planes from doing as they please.

The guerrilla forces, which used to act separately, have gradually started to operate with concerted actions. In May 1985, the seven major Afghan resistance organizations formed a united Islamic league of Afghan mujahidin so that their cooperation could be fully coordinated at home and abroad. In resisting the Soviet aggressor troops' major offensives, some guerrilla forces have fought in coordination, displaying their combined strength.

The Karmal regime propped up by Soviet bayonets is highly unpopular, and since the foundation of its rule is very frail, it will immediately collapse should the Soviet Union withdraw its support. The Soviet people at home are also opposed to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In particular, the people in the central Asian republics, inhabited mainly by national minorities, have voiced their opposition to the invasion of Afghanistan. They simply do not want to become cannon fodder of aggression. The Soviet aggressor troops' atrocious slaughter of the Afghan people has also caused passive fighting, and some have defected to the guerrillas and turned their guns on the Soviet aggressor troops.

Internationally, the notorious Soviet occupation of Afghanistan has been a target of worldwide condemnation. On 14 January 1980, within a month of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, an overwhelming majority of members of the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution demanding that the Soviet Union withdraw all its troops from Afghanistan immediately and unconditionally. As of 1985, the UN General Assembly had adopted seven similar resolutions. Likewise, some international organizations and conferences have also denounced the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and an increasing number of international organizations and personages are providing humanitarian assistance to the Afghan people.

The Soviet Union is a major military power with a population of more than 200 million. Over the past 6 years and more, it has spent more than $10 billion in Afghanistan, but it still cannot subdue Afghanistan, a small country with a population of less than 20 million. Facts have proved that the Soviet Union will never be able to reverse this situation even if it continues to send more troops into Afghanistan.

CHEMICAL INDUSTRY MINISTER ENDS BANGLADESH VISIT

Meets With Ershad

[Text] Dhaka, January 18 (XINHUA) -- President Hussain Mohammad Ershad said he was happy to learn that the current second session of the Bangladesh-China joint commission held here was very fruitful. The president made the remark here this morning when he received Chinese Minister of Chemical Industry Qin Zhongda, who arrived here on January 16 at the head of a 10-member Chinese delegation to attend the three-day joint meeting beginning yesterday.

Qin congratulated Bangladesh on its recent discovery of coal deposits. He expressed China's willingness to cooperate with Bangladesh in the further exploration of coal deposits and in making feasibility studies of coal-related power projects. The president and the Chinese minister also discussed possibilities of Bangladesh-China cooperation in building village infrastructure, including road systems, in Bangladesh with the aid of Asian Development Bank and other international financial agencies.

China and Bangladesh held their first joint commission meeting in Beijing last September. After the current session which ends tomorrow, Qin is scheduled to take part in inaugurating a China-aided chemical fertilizer factory and to visit Bangladesh's largest seaport of Chittagong.

[Text] Dhaka, January 23 (XINHUA) -- The second session of the China-Bangladesh joint commission has agreed on several programs for cooperation in the fields of trade, science and technology. This was announced by Chinese Minister for Chemical Industry Qin Zhongda at Dhaka airport today before departure for home after attending the session between January 17 and 19.

During his stay in Bangladesh, the Chinese minister visited a paper mill, a synthetic rayon factory, the construction site of a river bridge near Dhaka to be built with Chinese aid. He said he was very much impressed by Bangladesh's economic progress.

Qin Zhongda came here on January 16 at the head of a Chinese Government delegation to the session. The two countries held their first session in September 1984 after the joint commission was set up in 1983.

SUDANESE DELEGATION RETURNS HOME FROM PRC

[Text] Khartoum, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Sudanese senior delegation led by Muhammad Tawfiq Khalil, member of the Sudanese Transitional Military Council and chief of General Staff of the Sudanese People's Armed Forces, returned here last night by air after a ten-day official visit to China.

The Sudanese chief of General Staff said that his visit to China is successful. He said, during the visit, Chinese leaders met members of the delegation and held friendly talks with them on the further development of relations between Sudan and China. He said that the delegation had signed agreements and protocols on culture, economy and trade with China. Tawfiq Khalil said that all the members of the delegation had pleasant time in China. "Although the weather in Beijing was very cold, all of us felt warm in our hearts," he concluded.

GCC OFFICIAL ON RELATIONS WITH USSR, U.S.

[Text] Kuwait, January 22 (XINHUA) -- Secretary General of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) Abdalla Bisharah blamed the Soviet Union for its cold and careless stand towards the formation of the GCC, ARAB TIMES reported here today. Speaking at a meeting of Gulf diplomats in Riyadh yesterday, Bisharah said that the Soviet Union did not try to understand the new situation in the Gulf area after the establishment of the GCC, but followed its traditional method, and observed the GCC suspiciously from a distance.

Bisharah pointed out that the Soviet Union was initially "sensitive" toward the GCC because five of the six member states did not have diplomatic relations with it but had strong relations with the United States, and it was also annoyed by the GCC stand to its presence in Afghanistan. Bisharah recalled that relations between the Soviet Union and the GCC states were developed in 1985 in the wake of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the UAE and the Soviet Union and between Oman and the Soviet Union. But he said that the Soviet policy towards the GCC has not changed and he believed the Soviet Union would develop relations with individual members rather than the GCC as a body. He said that the Soviets were also working to remove Western influence in the area.

Commenting on the U.S. stand towards the GCC, Bisharah said the U.S. realised that the GCC states did not agree with Marxism and other ideologies, and benefitted from its historical relations with GCC states. This is why the U.S. supports the establishment of the GCC and is interested in knowing about the GCC policies in all fields. It also accepts dealing with the GCC as one organisation. Bisharah said that the U.S. relations with the GCC suffered from its stand towards the Palestinian cause and by its support of Israel. Bisharah stressed that the GCC policy was to avoid the area being linked to U.S. strategy and also not to give an opportunity for the Soviet Union to enter the area with its fleet.

YOUTH FEDERATION DELEGATION VISITS GHANA

[Text] Accra, January 19 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese youth delegation led by Yu Wentao, deputy secretary-general of the All China Youth Federation, left here this morning for Niger. This was the first visit paid by a Chinese youth delegation to Ghana in the past twenty years. The delegation was accorded a cordial and friendly welcome and reception by young Ghanaians.

The delegation came here at the invitation of the Ghanaian National Youth Organization Committee (NYOC). It held talks with members of the Standing Committee of NYOC. Both sides expressed the hope that their relations and cooperation could be further strengthened. During its week-long stay here, the delegation was received by Ghana's Provisional National Defense Council (PNDC) Secretary for Youth and Sports Amarteifio, PNDC Secretary for Greater-Accra Region Thompson and PNDC Secretary for Eastern Region Agyekum. The delegation also met leaders of various youth groups in Ghana and talked with Ghanaian young people from all walks of life.

AMNESTY DECLARED IN PDRY AS FIGHTING CONTINUES

[Text] Addis Ababa, January 22 (XINHUA) -- According to a report by an Ethiopian news agency, Democratic Yemeni President 'Ali Nasir Muhammad, who claims control of the country, has declared a general amnesty for hardline Marxist rebels who surrender. But diplomatic sources in the region report that rebel forces are gaining ground and fierce fighting is still ragins in the capital city of Aden.

The unconfirmed Ethiopian news report said that the amnesty was declared on Tuesday by President Nasir at the end of a meeting of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Yemeni Socialist Party. It quoted a spokesman of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (PDRY) as claiming that with the exception of some mechanized units, most of South Yemen's Armed Forces were supporting the president's amnesty appeal. President Nasir, who visited Ethiopia last weekend, had earlier been driven f rom Aden by hardline Marxist rebels led by former Defence Minister 'Ali Ahmad Nasir Antar and ex-president 'Abd al-Fattah Isma'il.

The report quoted the president as saying that except for the central areas of Aden, the war-torn nation is under the "legitimate control of the Yemen Socialist Party and Government." It further added that the president had warned all rebels not to ignore his appeal, or "appropriate measures" would be taken. However, Aden radio, which is now controlled by the rebels, has announced that the country is returning to normal, under their control, after a fierce struggle for supremacy which began ten days ago in this small, embattled Arab nation. However, according to Arab and Western diplomatic sources in Sanaa, the capital of neighboring North Yemen, the situation is the strife-torn country remains uncertain. According to these diplomats, the rebels were gaining more ground in the provinces and Aden, while President Nasir was now operating from his home province of Abyan, east of Aden.

Foreign nationals evacuated from Aden have reported bodies littering the streets and press reports put the casualty toll at up to 9,000 people. In London, the British Defence Ministry said as many as 600 foreigners are awaiting evacuation, as rescue operations have been hampered by renewed fighting. Over 3,000 foreign nationals have already been brought out to the east African port of Djibouti in a multinational rescue operation started a few days after fighting broke out between the two rival factions on January 13.

NICARAGUAN DELEGATION BEGINS CHINA VISIT 18 JAN

Meets Economic Minister

[Text] Beijing, January 20 (XINHUA) -- Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, conferred with Dionisio Marenco, advisor of the Nicaraguan president and minister of planning and budget, here this morning. They exchanged views on the use of the interest-free loan provided by the Chinese Government to Nicaraguan Government. The loan, decided during the Nicaraguan party and government delegation's visit to China last December, will be provided in the form of goods.

Minister Dionisio Marenco arrived here January 18 at the invitation of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. His delegation is the first high-ranking delegation sent by Nicaragua to China since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries last December.

Meets Yao Yilin

[Text] Beijing, January 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met the first high-ranking Nicaraguan Governmental delegation to visit China here today. Led by Dionisio Marenco, minister of planning and budget and advisor to the Nicaraguan president, it is the first such delegation to visit China since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries late last year.

Yao said China supports the struggle of the Nicaraguan people in safeguarding their national independence. He said China hopes for increasing trade between the two countries on the basis of mutual understanding.

Expressing satisfaction with the trip, Marenco said the establishment of diplomatic ties is beneficial for the furtherance of a many-sided relationship between the two countries. He said the two countries will set up their respective embassies soon. This will help promote their cooperation and Nicaragua's exports to China, he added.

WAN LI URGES SUPPORT FOR SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY

[Wan Li speech delivered 16 January at the national conference to exchange experience in doing local scientific and technological work: "Strengthen Support in Science and Technology, Develop Town and Township Economy"]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jan (XINHUA) -- At the end of last year, the central meeting on rural work had made plans for rural work in 1986, which were reflected in Document No 1 issued by the central authorities. Soon after the document was made public, the State Scientific and Technological Commission and the China Association for Science and Technology immediately held a joint meeting to study and implement the requirements of Document No 1 of the central authorities on science and technology and mobilize the scientific and technological front in the country to serve rural economy. This is necessary and also timely.

At this meeting, the leading comrades from the State Scientific and Technological Commission and the China Association for Science and Technology and representatives from various localities summed up their experience in popularizing science and technology in the countryside and discussed measures on how to implement the Document No 1 of the central authorities. Comrade Fang Yi delivered a speech on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council. Comrade Du Runsheng and Comrade He Kang also delivered speeches. All these speeches were good. I completely endorse these speeches. Everyone is quite clear that developing the national economy with agriculture as the foundation reflects not only an economic law but also a law of nature. It is our party's long-term and steadfast strategic principle. In developing agriculture and the entire rural economy, we must rely on policy and science. In regard to our present situation, strengthening support for science and technology and developing town and township economy is of even greater significance and is a more pressing need. China has 800 million diligent and intelligent peasants. Once armed with modern science and technology, they will become a tremendous productive force. On this issue, I would like to express some of my views for your consideration.

First, in developing rural economy, we badly need science and technology.

Right now the political and economic situation in China is excellent. This is one of the best periods since the founding of the nation. Recently, several leading comrades at the central level delivered reports at the conference of cadres of central organs on the current political and economic situation and on the situation in reforming the economic structure. It is hoped that the comrades in the field of science and technology will earnestly study and master these reports in close connection with the actual situation.

Over the past few years, the rural economic situation has been fine. The enthusiasm of the 800 million peasants is higher than ever before. This is a major event able to influence the overall situation and stabilize the situation in the whole country. China has already scored tremendous achievements in carrying out rural reforms. Naturally, success in completing the first step in rural reforms does not indicate completion of those reforms. The new system has just been established, while the old one is still functioning. As the new system replaces the old, it is inevitable that there are still things incompatible in the superstructure. We need to solve this issue as our second step of reforms and gradually improve our new system. However, there is one thing we must reaffirm; that is, the peasants' enthusiasm suppressed by the "leftist" ideas in the past has already been whipped up under the guidance of the correct policy of the central authorities.

In the past 5 years, the total output value in agriculture has increased by 10.8 percent every year, while the annual rate of growth from 1953 to 1980 was only 3.5 percent. The total 1985 output value in agriculture reached more than 370 billion yuan, marking an increase of about 67 percent over the 1980 figure. The amount of grain available for each person in the country approaches the world average level. The amount of cotton available for each person in the country in 1984 was about 12 jin. The problem of supplying the people with enough food and clothes -- a worrisome problem that has existed over a long period in Chinese history -- has been basically solved. In spite of a decrease in grain production in 1985, the production of economic crops continued to increase on a large scale, the total product of society in rural areas and the peasants' per capita net income continuously increased, and the whole rural economy remained flourishing and prosperous. All this has further proven the effects of the reforms and filled the rural cadres and the broad masses of peasants with full confidence and determination to carry out reforms and attain the goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production.

The tremendous developments in agriculture and in the entire rural economy over the past few years cannot be separated from the arduous long-term struggle and the selfless spirit of nearly a million scientific and technological personnel, particularly those in the field of agriculture. We should show our respect and appreciation for their hard work and tremendous contributions. The current issue is: In continuously developing the favorable situation in the countryside and further promoting the rural economy, to rely only on our efforts in engendering peasants' enthusiasm in general is no longer enough. We must arm peasants with science and technology. Only by strengthening our support in science and technology will it be possible for us to score new and even greater developments in promoting agriculture and the entire rural economy, This is key to further development of the rural economy.

In our world today, science and technology play a decisive role in the survival and development of society. All economic, political, and cultural development relies on the development of science and technology. If we cannot master and make use of advanced science and technology in organizing social production and the people's livelihood, we will be unable to keep pace with the march of time.

After initial reform measures, our rural economy has indeed become open and lively; the role of science and technology in raising economic results has daily become more significant; and peasant enthusiasm and consciousness in relying on science and technology have become higher and higher. The rural areas are a vast world where the peasants are yearning for science and technology and where scientific and technological workers and various scientific and technological departments can give full rein to their ability and skill. A host of facts has fully borne out the fact that when the peasants' enthusiasm is combined with science and technology, a new situation immediately emerges, not only in rural economic development but in scientific and technological work as well. Across the nation, many comrades are still not quite clear why modernization of science and technology is the key to the four modernizations and why revitalization of the rural economy relies on science and technology. We are quite sure that in localities where commodity economy is relatively more developed and where the cultural and scientific level of cadres and masses is relatively higher, the need for science and technology there is more urgent. For instance, in the coastal areas of southeast China, as well as in some interior regions where commodity economy has been relatively more developed, they are willing to pay great sums to buy technology or hire talented people; they have tasted the fruits of science and technology. But there are also cadres in many areas and departments not quite aware of this fact. I hope they become more farsighted; become more aware of the important role of science, technology, and management; attach importance to the vital role of knowledge and talented people; and take concrete action to fulfill this work well, for revitalizing the rural economy would otherwise be only empty words. Of course, the development of various localities in our country is very uneven and some localities do have difficulties in fostering or hiring talented people. But we must help them solve the problem.

Second, science and technology must serve the reform of rural production structure and revitalization of the rural economy.

In March last year, the central authorities issued a solemn call to the nation's 14 million scientific and technological personnel to mobilize the millions of cadres in science and technological circles in applying available scientific and technological achievements to economic construction. It is general orientation. I think that in responding to this call of the central authorities, our comrades in the scientific and technological circles should direct their full attention to the vast world in the countryside.

The "Spark Plan" proposed by the State Commission of Science and Technology has made a good start showing that the leading organs of scientific and technological work have extended their field of vision to the rural areas and shifted their attention to the task where demand for science and technology is the greatest and most urgent and where economic results are most promising. We have stressed daily that departments in charge of work in various fields and leading organs must strive to meet the needs of planned commodity production; they must "change course and form" in their operational guiding ideology and work method. But I think the "Spark Plan" precisely means a "change of course and form" or at least a good start. The central authorities have fully affirmed the "Spark Plan," and I hope everyone will do a good job and achieve concrete results in this plan. I hope the State Commission of Science and Technology; the China Association for Science and Technology; the State Commission of Science, Technology, and Science for National Defense; the research departments in the various ministries and commissions; and various universities and colleges will join forces and make contributions in revitalizing the rural economy. The county-level organizations must pay special attention to organizing and coordinating the work of popularizing science and technology.

The plan for introducing science and technology to the rural areas and spreading the "sparks" of science and technology across the country is proposed against a historical backdrop when rural reform has taken another step forward. There are currently two tides: the first is the need to transform science and technology, introduced to the rural areas, into a real productive force, and the second is the need to find new outlets for the enthusiasm of millions and millions of peasants bursting forth during the reform of the rural production structure. The converging of these two tides is bound to add splendor to the second step of the rural reform and bring about bright prospects.

Science and technology serve rural economy and social development. Our task remains arduous and pressing in this respect. Therefore, we must pay attention to the key issues and put in all our efforts. From now on, we should attach importance to the following three points for a fairly protracted period:

1. Efforts must be made in strengthening our scientific and technical measures in agriculture. The central authorities have already pointed out: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China's grain output must move one step up from 800 billion jin and maintain the level of 800 jin per capita. This is an arduous task which must be fulfilled. Efforts must be made to increase material supplies. However, our reliance on this alone is not enough. We must also rely on science and technology, raise per-unit output, improve the varieties of grain crops, promote intensive farming in grain production with highly developed agrotechnology, encourage skilled peasants to carry out farming in fields sown for grain crops, and gradually realize modernization in agriculture. We also need science and technology to serve the diversified development of animal husbandry, aquatic production, fishery, and forestry. In accordance with the results of investigations for dividing farming zones in various counties, scientific and technical departments must be called upon to make contributions to establishing commodity base areas; promoting the development of diversified economy; improving varieties of fine crops; preparing fodder; preventing epidemic diseases and natural disaster; processing, storing, and transporting farm and sideline products; keeping food fresh; and rendering other services.

2. Efforts must be made to arm town and township enterprises with science and technology. China's towns and townships have witnessed tremendous developments over the past few years. By the end of 1985, more than 60 million people worked in the town and township enterprises throughout the country with their total annual production value reaching 230 billion yuan, which accounts for approximately half of the total product of society in the countryside. The rise of town and township enterprises has initiated the process of rural industrialization with Chinese characteristics. At the same time, it has also greatly promoted the development of the crop pattern. Our experience over the past few years proves that by making use of industrial developments to help agriculture, areas where town and township enterprises are well developed strengthen the foundation for agricultural modernization and enhance their capabilities in resisting natural disasters. The situation in Jilin last year is a good proof. Right now, as far as the whole nation is concerned, town and township enterprises still badly need technology and qualified people. Their productivity is still not high and problems exist on how to make good use of the environment and natural resources and improve economic results and social benefits. Developing town and township enterprises is the only way to rejuvenate China's rural economy. Those who work in the fields of science, technology, and education have the undeniable duty to arm town and township enterprises with science and technology and train technical and managerial personnel for such enterprises. If they can do this work well, they have really done good deeds.

3. Efforts must be made to help science and technology become an "accelerator" in changing the outlook in poverty-stricken and backward areas. Not long ago, I read a report: "Explore and Study the Jixi District of the Taihang Shan and Spread the Single Spark of Science and Technology Over the Mountainous Areas." The report said: Hebei Province has organized scientific and technical personnel to go deep into the Jixi District of the Taihang Shan and help develop the district with science and technology. It has brought about profound changes in a few years. The per capita income in 1982 was only 60 to 70 yuan. It increased to more than 300 yuan in 1985, 4 to 5 times more than the 1982 figure. The poverty-stricken mountainous area has become a well-to-do mountainous area. This example indicates that relying on science and technology to change the outlook of a backward district is much better than the measure of achieving the same goal through relief work alone. The Taihang Shan belong to an old liberated area. If the Taihang Shan are able to use science and technology to eliminate poverty within a short period, it will also be possible for other localities such as the Jinggang Shan, the Dabie Shan, and the Yimeng Shan to achieve the same goal by doing their work well in developing their areas with science and technology. All these localities are old liberated areas where people had made tremendous contributions to the revolution and rendered meritorious services. The party Central Committee is extremely concerned over these places. However, we must improve our measures in helping them. In the past we invested a great deal of money in pure relief work. We have not achieved much. From now on, we must change this measure. That is, we must provide help in science and technology, fully exploit local natural resources, take the path of promoting diversified economy and overall developments, and create new wealth for the whole society, and then turn such wealth into a commodity. In this way, we will be able to help the various localities gradually become richer. Therefore, in solving the issue of helping old, newly developed, remote and poverty-stricken areas to eliminate poverty and become well-to-do, we must also rely on policy and science. To make science and technology become an "accelerator" constitutes work of a creative nature at present. We must let the State Scientific and Technological Commission and the China Association for Science and Technology take the lead in organizing forces in all fields in implementing their measures by stages and in groups and carrying out such work conscientiously and meticulously.

Third, special attention must be paid to the question of training qualified personnel in rural areas.

In general, the areas and peasants which become more prosperous sooner than others have a salient feature; that is, they have succeeded because of their "intelligence" and do not merely rely on intensified physical labor. As regards those areas that are economically backward and are thus far unable to resolve their food and clothing problems, a very important factor other than natural conditions and other reasons for their present state is the acute shortage of qualified personnel. This is also the case with some poor households. Their educational level is generally lower than that of others. We may say that illiteracy and sheer ignorance of science are linked with backwardness and poverty. This is more apparent after the system of contracted responsibilities based on households with remuneration linked to output has been put into practice. In the days to come, our rural reform will develop in greather depth, and so the work of making a success of training qualified personnel and raising the level of scientific knowledge and general education of the vast numbers of grass-roots cadres and peasants will become even more prominent and important in the process of adjusting production structure and developing village and town commodity economy. Many of our grass-roots cadres in rural areas lack new knowledge and technical expertise. If we let them lead the broad masses of peasants in developing the rural socialist commodity economy and in achieving modernization, they are certain to meet with many practical difficulties. Despite an earnest desire to do so, their ability would fall short of their desire.

Development of the rural commodity economy requires qualified personnel, and emergence of large numbers of qualified personnel requires certain kinds of environment and conditions. Rural party committees and governments at all levels must pay close attention to science and education, attach importance to the work of training rural grass-roots cadres, and encourage the promotion of science and technology as well as general education in the countryside. It will be very hard to promote the building of the two civilizations in the countryside if we do not improve the level of scientific knowledge and general education of the grass-roots cadres and peasants. At present, there are more than 100 million senior and junior middle school graduates in the rural areas of the whole country. This is an enormous resource of qualified personnel. It is imperative to give full play to their role in the rural modernization program. We must see to it that through the popularization of science and technology and professional training, some of them become backbone scientific and technical workers and backbone managerial personnel in rural areas. Grass-roots cadres for townships, districts, towns, and enterprises must also be selected from among them.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, if we popularize and apply the presently available scientific and technological achievements in the vast countryside, we will receive enormous economic and social benefits, let alone the numerous new discoveries and inventions that might appear during this period. Having undergone an intensive change through reform, rural areas are more capable of absorbing new technology with less restrictive and trammeling factors. This is a favorable condition at present for application and popularization of new technology in rural areas. However, the key to introducing technological achievements to rural areas and starting a prairie fire there with "a single spark" of science and technology lies in the availability of qualified personnel. Without large numbers of qualified personnel at various tiers and in various fields and thousands upon thousands of backbone peasant-technicians, a "single spark" would hardly ignite a fire in the vast countryside.

I hope that those in the scientific and technological circles and those working in the educational field will coordinate their efforts in training qualified personnel so as to work together in contributing to the development of the village and town economy. In addition to going personally to the countryside to organize the work of applying and popularizing new technology, there is another task of great importance that our comrades in the scientific and technological fields may undertake; that is to actively unfold the work of training qualified personnel in rural areas in coordination with the educational circles under the leadership and with the support of the local party committee and government.

In the past few years, this has been done and initial results have been achieved in many localities. In Shandong, Hebei, Anhui, Shanxi, and Heilongjiang Provinces, the associations for science and technology have cooperated with the departments concerned in training rural scientific and technical workers and conducted multiform technical training at various layers covering a number of disciplines among educated youths. This has enabled many people to learn and master practical technical skills, each in one or two fields, and to find new ways to develop their production work. Quite a few have become specialized households, and some have become technical experts. Facts have indicated that the abundant rural intelligent resources, once developed, will play an inestimable role in enlivening the rural economy and promoting the building of the socialist spiritual civilization in the countryside. Those in the scientific and technological circles and those working in the educational field can really do something in their work to train qualified rural personnel and to explore the treasure house of rural intelligence.

Our scientific and technical workers possess a high degree of sensibility and consciousness toward the call of our times. With this plus their spirit like that of the foolish old man and their careful planning, they are surely able to make giant strides in stepping up the work of using science and technology to support and develop the village and town economy. As long as the 800 million peasants have grasped modern science and technology and the modern way of production, a sound foundation will be laid for our rural socialist modernization, and our great objective will be realized step by step as expected.

ECONOMIC CRIMES DISCUSSED AT NPC COMMITTEE MEET

[Report: "He Ying Comments on Too Much Leniency in Handling Economic Crimes"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At a group meeting during the 14th Session of the Sixth NPC Standing Committee, Standing Committee member He Ying said that we achieved much last year in cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field. But crime still thrives in the economic field. It seems we have not been strict enough but have been too lenient and too generous in handling criminal cases of this kind. Economic crimes of a serious nature with evil consequences must be severely dealt with. This will not interfere with reform, openness, or the effort to enliven the economy.

He Ying said that in cracking down on criminal activities in the economic field, procuratorial and judicial organs must be resolved to smash various networks of special relations and protection, be bold in struggle, and strongly promote the practice of playing fair and having a clear conscience.

In the past 2 days, Standing Committee members have discussed reports given respectively by Zheng Tianxiang, president of the Supreme People's Court, and Yang Yichen, procurator-general of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, on cracking down on serious economic crimes.

Standing Committee member Liu Jingji held that enterprises, institutions, and party and government organs cause the greatest harm when involved in crime, and there should be regulations governing their punishment.

Standing Committee member Mei Yi suggested that important cases must be thoroughly investigated, dealt with seriously according to the law, and also made public.

Standing Committee member Hou Xueyu, a well-known ecologist, said that in order to do a good job in reform, we must crack down resolutely on serious criminal activities in the economic field and realistically solve the problem of "substituting fines for punishment" existing in the current crackdown. Procuratorial organs are not assured of funds for their overhead and are even short of money for handling cases. This is very abnormal. The State Council must give great attention to this matter.

Standing Committee member Zheng Boke asked: Is the law now too lenient by providing no capital punishment for swindlers? Should the matter be reconsidered?

Cai Liangchen, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of Fujian Provincial People's Congress, admitted that in cracking down on criminal activities in the economic field, we must emphasize important cases, which are serious, involve large sums, cause great harm, have great repercussions, and can play a substantial role in educating people. He said that Fujian Province had on file 183 important cases under investigation last year, which accounted for 38.6 percent of the cases of economic crime being investigated; this showed an increase of 90.6 percent over the preceding year. The settlement of these important cases resulted in 150 million yuan recovered as stolen money and 8.26 million yuan recouped as economic losses. This was warmly hailed by the masses of cadres and people.

CRIMINAL CHARGES CAUSE DISMISSAL OF NPC DEPUTIES

[Text] Three deputies to the National People's Congress have been dismissed after criminal charges were brought against them, LEGAL NEWS reports.

The newspaper said that it had learned from the 14th meeting of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (NPC), which ended yesterday, that the three deputies, Zhu Pingchou of Jiangsu Province, Huang Hantao of Hubei Province, and Li Nengyong of Guizhou Province, had been recalled for using their power to profiteer, harassing women and violating state policies.

Zhu was reported to have harassed several women by using his power for protection. Huang took advantage of his affiliation with NPC to profiteer by re-selling autos and steel. He gained an illegal profit of 12,000 yuan ($3,600). Li was reported only as having violated State policies.

The paper said the dismissals of the three deputies were approved by the people congresses of the three provinces upon proposals of recall made by voters.

The exclusive report said that a very bad influence was cast among the local people by the three deputies and their dismissals were in accordance with the country's constitution, which ensures the right of recall for the voters.

Participants at the 14th meeting of the NPC Standing Committee discussed various issues with special attention to the need to crack down on economic crimes. A deputy from Beijing said cases of splitting illegal profits by collectives and asking for illegal commissions are very hard to deal with. Another deputy urged the government to look into the fundamental reason for big economic scandals. He asked how there could be a single black market deal in the exchange of hard currency amounting to several million yuan. Many deputies said the crackdown on economic crimes has not been effective enough to curb the unhealthy trend, the paper said.

FOREIGN TRADE TOPS $59.2 BILLION IN 1985

[Text] Beijing, January 22 (XINHUA) -- China's imports and exports totaled 59.2 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, an increase of 19 percent over 1984 and of 56.6 percent over 1980, a government official said today.

Huang Wenjun, a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, said preliminary figures showed imports and exports for the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-85) totaled 229.37 billion dollars, doubling the foreign trade of the previous five years.

Imports last year climbed substantially -- 31.8 percent over 1984 -- to 33.4 billion dollars, while exports grew 5.7 percent to 25.8 billion dollars. Over the last five years, China imported 114.25 billion dollars in goods, slightly less than its 115.12 billion dollars in exports.

Huang attributed the increase in China's trade to government policies begun in 1979: opening to the outside world, invigorating the domestic economy and streamlining the system of foreign trade. As a result, he said, China's exports did not decline during the world economic recession and international trade drop of the early 1980s -- and in fact continued to increase.

During the Sixth Five-Year Plan period, China was able to cut its imports of major agricultural products such as grain, cotton, fats and cooking oils which it had long imported in large quantities. At the same time, imports needed to develop industrial and agricultural production greatly increased.

For instance, compared with the Fifth Five-Year Plan period (1976-80), imports of rolled steel rose 48.6 percent, raw chemical materials 150 percent, timber 640 percent, and chemical fertilizer 82.4 percent. Imports of advanced technology rose 60 percent. At the same time, in order to meet growing consumer demand and spur domestic markets, imports of pharmaceuticals, household electrical appliances and sugar rose substantially over the last five years.

[Text] Beijing, January 22 (XINHUA) -- China will strive to reduce its trade deficit with foreign countries and imports and exports during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-90), a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said at a news briefing here today.

The spokesman, Huang Wenjun, said it is necessary for all sides to make efforts in resolving the trade imbalance. On the one hand, China must improve the quality of its exports and provide more marketable goods. On the other, its major trade partners should take an active attitude to remove trade obstacles and expand imports from China. It would be difficult for China to keep its trade relations with such countries if t deficits were unchecked and expanded continuously, he added. He said China will import more commodities only after exporting more goods. This will be beneficial to both sides, he noted.

China's imports came to 33.41 billion U.S. dollars and exports, to 25.8 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, for a total trade deficit of 7.61 billion U.S. dollars.

Huang Wenjun said the total volume of China's trade with Japan amounted to 16.57 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, up by 30.2 percent over 1984. Of this, imports came to 10.47 billion U.S. dollars, and exports to 6.1 billion U.S. dollars; and with the United States, 6.42 billion U.S. dollars, up by 7.6 percent, of which imports came to 4.23 billion U.S. dollars, and exports, to 2.19 billion U.S. dollars. He also listed the trade figures with other nations -- with the Soviet Union, 1.9 billion U.S. dollars, up by 61 percent over 1984, of which imports came to 940 million U.S. dollars, and exports, to 960 million U.S. dollars; with Hong Kong region, 9.6 billion U.S. dollars, up by 7.2 percent, of which imports came to 4.35 billion U.S. dollars, and exports, to 5.25 billion U.S. dollars; with the European Economic Community, 6.9 billion U.S. dollars, up by 24.5 percent, of which imports were 4.97 billion U.S. dollars, and exports, 1.93 billion U.S. dollars. Huang Wenjun said China maintained trade relations with more than 170 countries and regions during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-85).

He said China will change the composition of its export commodities so as to reduce the trade deficit. It will export more finished goods instead of raw materials and primary products, and export more processed products. China will also increase exports of oil, coal, nonferrous metals, textiles, light industrial products and foodstuffs. China will also change the composition of import commodities, Huang said. The stress will be put on the import of software and key technological equipment.

Huang Wenjun stressed that China will control the imports of the commodities that it can produce. At present, restrictions have been put on the imports of commodities including color television sets, refrigerators, radio-cassettes, motor vehicles, foodstuffs, vegetables, cigarettes and alcoholic drinks.

HU YAOBANG, OTHERS SPEAK TO NUCLEAR SPECIALISTS

[By reporters Li Shangzhi and Yu Jiafu]

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jan (XINHUA) -- Party and state leaders Hu Yaobang, Fang Yi, Li Peng, Yang Shangkun, and Hao Jianxiu gladly came to the rear wing of the Huairen Hall in Zhongnanhai this afternoon and warmly shook hands with and extended their regards to 10 specialists who had contributed to the development of our country's nuclear industry. They had a discussion with nuclear specialists on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy in our country and asked the latter to give their regards to the workers and staff members in nuclear industry.

The leading comrades first had a group picture taken with the nuclear specialists. Hu Yaobang and Yang Shangkun shook Jiang Shengji and Wang Ganchang's hands and said: "Old comrades sit in the front row." When these two old specialists set among leading comrades, Li Peng and Hao Jianxiu still asked specialists Liu Xingzhong, Min Yaozhong, Huang Qitao, Yu Min, Lian Peisheng, Qian Gaoyun, Lu Dexian, and Sun Zuxun to sit in the front row. One of the specialists said: "Our revered Comrades Jiang and Wang represent us." Pictures were taken of them chatting and laughing.

During the discussion, central leaders fully affirmed the achievements made by the workers and staff members of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry in developing our country's nuclear industry. General Secretary Hu Yaobang said excitedly: Comrades in nuclear industry have made valuable contributions to the party, the state, and the people. Through their efforts, our country has successfully developed nuclear weapons and strengthened its defense capability.

Now our country has built a relatively integrated nuclear-industrial system and trained a contingent of qualified nuclear technicians. This is a tremendous achievement. The party Central Committee, State Council, Central Military Commission, and people throughout the country will never forget their historic and brilliant contributions. Hu Yaobang expressed his hope that personnel of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry will become skilled specialists, undertake a variety of projects, vigorously support civilian industries, and make fresh contributions to the development of civilian industries and socialist economic construction.

Comrade Li Peng said: Workers and staff members in our nuclear industry have built a relatively integrated system of nuclear industry through their own efforts over the past 30 years and more. The quality of our contingent of nuclear workers is good indeed. Although our nuclear technology is not quite advanced, there are not many countries in the world with a system comparable to ours.

Li Peng said: In promoting the drive for modernization in our country, our nuclear industry is confronted with the task of how to make peaceful use of nuclear energy in a better and more extensive way. The peaceful use of nuclear energy is our country's basic policy for the development of nuclear industry. There are broad prospects for nuclear industry in this regard, and the nuclear industry has great potential for civilian use. To help other industries, the nuclear industry should focus, among other things, on nuclear electricity generation. Although we have difficulty with nuclear electricity generation, we have already made some initial progress. In this regard, we should rely mainly on our own efforts while importing advanced technology from abroad.

Comrade Fang Yi said: We should maintain a contingent of research in nuclear industry and reinforce the study of peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Scientists and technicians of nuclear industry departments should establish contacts with universities and localities in order to ensure that their future will be bright.

Comrade Yang Shangkun and Hao Jianxiu spoke at the discussion. They confirmed the progress made on the nuclear industry front and expressed the hope that workers and staff members would make fresh contributions to the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

During the animated discussion, 10 nuclear specialists expressed many opinions and made a number of suggestions.

Present at the discussion were Jiang Xinxiong, minister of nuclear industry; Chen Zhaobo, vice minister of nuclear industry; Ding Henggao, minister in charge of the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission; Wu Shaozu, political commissar of the same commission; and Zhu Guangya, chairman of the Science and Technology Committee under the National Defense Science, Technology, Industry Commission.

HU YAOBANG, WAN LI WIN IN BRIDGE CONTEST

[Text] Beijing, January 13 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party and Vice-Premier Wan Li spent their leisure time in Wenjin Street Sports Club here Sunday, winning a bridge contest for veteran cadres, Chinese sports newspaper TIYUBAO reported today. The tournament, named "Strategies and Health", drew a total of 16 teams, including some retired party and government leaders. In the team-of-four competition, Hu partnered with Nie Weiping, a "Go" chess master, while Wan Li sided with Rong Ledi, 34, from the China Sports Service Company. The team ranked first with 72 victory points in group preliminaries and further won the title on 58 victory points in the four-team finals.

HU QILI STRESSES IDEOLOGICAL, POLITICAL WORK

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jan (XINHUA) -- Speaking at a recent meeting attended by students majoring in ideological and political education, as well as other relevant cadres of the Department of Social Sciences of the Beijing Iron and Steel Engineering Institute, Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, stated that ideological and political workers of the new generation must, first of all, be dedicated personnel who have the ambition to build a more vigorous and stronger China and are good at analyzing and solving problems from a Marxist position and with a Marxist viewpoint and method. At the same time, they must be proficient in the work of their own department and field.

The students graduated from college before enrolling in the speciality of ideological and political education. They have come from Beijing Iron and Steel Engineering Institute, Beijing Agricultural University, Beijing Chemical Fiber Engineering College, Heilongjiang Mining Institute, Anshan Iron and Steel Engineering Institute, and Maanshan Iron and Steel Engineering Institute. Should they pass the test after 2 years of study, they will acquire their second bachelor's degree.

Hu Qili spoke highly of the engineering colleges for sponsoring departments of social sciences and praised the students for their determination to study Marxism-Leninism and do ideological and political work after graduating from colleges of science and engineering. He said: Our cause has a great need for people who are knowledgeable in both political and professional work. The reason why Yuan Weimin could lead the women's volleyball team in winning games was because he was not only knowledgeable in his special field but was also socialist-minded in knowing how to do political and ideological work. He could not have won the ball games if he did not have a perfect mastery of volleyball skills and only knew how to read quotations after losing a ball game. Conversely, he could not have done his job well if he only knew volleyball skills and not Marxism-Leninism and ideological and political work. Ideological and political work is a very difficult job. This is because the human brain is a most complicated machine. In order to be a good party committee secretary, not only must one be familiar with its work, he must also understand people and society and have a firm conviction in communism. This cannot be learned from books alone. Attending college is just a beginning; being tempered in society is even more important.

Hu Qili pointed out: A college's ideological and political education must, first of all, emphasize study of basic Marxist tenets, without which there will be no theoretical basis. Modern and contemporary Chinese history should also be studied, otherwise one will be in the dark about Chinese history and the national situation. Second, the party's principles and policies, especially those about reform, should also be part of the curriculum. China is currently engaged in restructuring its economic system and in the process of a new Long March. This is a great project involving the fate of nearly one-fourth of humanity. The whole series of important documents, which the party Central Committee has drawn up since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee to deal with basic political, economic, social, and cultural issues, is a new addition to the treasure house of Marxist theories, and it should be studied earnestly. China will have contributed significantly to Marxism-Leninism if its reforms are accomplished successfully. Third, we should understand the various ideological trends in society by analyzing and studying them and, by making comparisons, improve our ability to differentiate among them. Fourth, we must attach importance to conducting social investigation, which can be carried out in Beijing and its suburbs and not necessarily in faraway places. Conducting investigation during holidays is even better.

WAN LI, LI PENG SPEAK ON MAYORS' WORK, ROLES

[By reporter Ge Daxing]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jan (XINHUA) -- In the past 2 years, 256 leading cadres of cities from all parts of China have attended the mayors' research class to study and discuss ways to organize and guide city planning, construction, and management and learned theory and scientific knowledge. Wan Li and Li Peng, vice premiers of the State Council, met today with students of the fourth research class, issued graduation certificates to them, and had discussion with them and responsible persons of departments concerned.

Wan Li said: City planning, city construction, and city management are a comprehensive subject. It includes knowledge of both natural science and social science. Mayors should study hard and constantly raise their leadership and management ability. He hoped that the mayors' research class will be held continuously and continue improving.

Wan Li said: In order to modernize the cities, an important thing is to strengthen the building of basic facilities. Our economic development centers on cities. If we do not do a good job in building basic facilities for cities, production, work, and people's lives will all be adversely affected. Many cities in our country have inadequate supply of water, electric power, gas, and heat. We must do our best to improve basic facilities for cities. At the same time, we should vigorously develop tertiary industry in cities. Enterprises, government organizations, and society should all make contributions to building cities for the people. As socialist mayors exist for serving the people, they should do more practical things in promoting building of material and spiritual civilization in cities.

Li Peng pointed out: The main tasks of mayors and city governments are to do a good job in planning, building, and managing cities. They should also proceed from reality and do a good job in environmental protection. At present, a popular situation prevails in which "plant managers are running the society." This situation should be corrected gradually. Various cities should increasingly care for things in the life of staff members and workers of new enterprises. City governments must not interfere too much in the internal affairs of enterprises. They should do their best to create favorable conditions for the development of production and to coordinate the work of various sides.

LI PENG NOTES METALLURGICAL PRODUCTION NEEDS

[By reporter Wu Jincai]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Jan (XINHUA) -- Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, called on the 3 million staff and workers in the metallurgical industry throughout the country to strive to fulfill the goal of 50 million metric tons of steel output this year.

In a speech to representatives at a national conference on metallurgy, Li Peng said: The metallurgical industry has scored remarkable achievements during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, increasing steel output by nearly 10 million metric tons, as well as raising economic efficiency. However, the industry remains a weak link in the national economy, and still falls far short of the needs of national economic development. Therefore, it is necessary to vigorously develop China's iron and steel industry.

Calling for the attainment of this year's target of 50 million metric tons of steel and increasing the steel output by a large margin during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Li Peng pointed out: In order to achieve this target, the metallurgical industry should further tap its potential by carrying out technological transformation, supplying complete sets of equipment, and expanding existing enterprises. He emphasized: In developing the metallurgical industry, it is imperative to rely on more updated technology. The improvement in China's computer technology, in particular, has created conditions for automation in the industry. Judging from the practical experience of the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex and the Capital Iron and Steel Company, this is an important way to conserve energy and lower material consumption.

Turning to the question of ore mines, Li Peng said: Large state-owned ore mines should be the main resources bases of the iron and steel industry. At the same time, it is necessary to encourage the masses to develop ore mining, thereby promoting the industry with large, medium-sized, and small ore mines simultaneously. It is also necessary to study practical plans for further harnessing the production enthusiasum of staff and workers of large mines, stimulate the development of small mines, and introduce measures for "mining by the masses, collection at fixed points, centralized selection, and smelting by the state." Li Peng added: It is a long-term policy for the iron and steel industry to utilize both domestic and foreign resources.

In conclusion, Li Peng called on the metallurgical industry to pay close attention to building spiritual civilization among its staff and workers, and improve the quality of the workers and cadres in order to secure a reliable guarantee for developing the industry.

QIAO SHI ADDRESSES POLICE PARTY MEETING

[Text] Comrade Qiao Shi, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and Secretariat and secretary of the Central Political and Legal Commission, yesterday afternoon pointed out at a work meeting of the party committee of the People's Armed Police Force headquarters: The People's Armed Police Force, an important armed force of the party and the state, is charged with important tasks in protecting state property and the property and lives of the people, and maintaining public order. To accomplish such important tasks, the armed police force must improve its party work style. The members of the leading body of the headquarters party committee should start rectifying their party work style immediately and set an example in this regard. Comrade Qiao Shi said: The party Central Committee is firmly determined to rectify party work style. Only by effectively improving this will the party committee of the armed police force headquarters be able to lead armed police units throughout the country in successfully accomplishing important tasks entrusted to them by the party and the people.

In his speech, Comrade Qiao Shi also called for running the armed police force strictly upholding and enforcing the letter of the law, and assiduously studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, party principles and policies, and knowledge of law in the course of rectifying party work style, in order to effect a fundamental turn for the better in party work style of the armed police force this year.

HU QIAOMU SPEAKS AT LANGUAGE CONFERENCE CLOSE

[Text] Beijing, January 13 (XINHUA) -- Standard Chinese written and spoken language and phonetic alphabets (Pinyin) that have been used since the 1950s will be further promoted and consolidated.

Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, believes this will serve to lay a good foundation for a big leap in the development process of the Chinese language in the future. Hu was speaking to language workers from across the country at today's closing ceremony of a national conference.

He explained that language, as a product of history, is due to progress gradually and in accordance with the need of history. It is true that the Chinese language has undergone a rapid development since the 1950s, but this was based on centuries of deliberations among the Chinese people and the endeavour of language workers, he said. "People can't expect such a historical change every day, or they would fail to maintain their achievements," Hu added.

China began language reforms in the mid-1950s, including simplifying 2,300 Chinese characters, popularizing a standard spoken language and creating a phonetic alphabet. Many people even suggested that Pinyin be used as a Chinese written language. While encouraging the suggestion, Hu also pointed out that this is a very complicated issue and painstaking efforts in language research, teaching and practice would be needed before a correct step forward could be possibly made. To simplify compiling dictionaries, encyclopedia and for writing computer programs to process Chinese characters, the State Commission on Language Planning will put a ban on more than 100 simplified Chinese characters made public in 1977. Effective measures will also be taken to stop wrongly used Chinese characters, said the officials from the commission.

TIAN JIYUN, CHEN MUHUA GREET CUSTOMS WORKERS

[By reporter Tian Chuan]

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jan (XINHUA) -- Forty-three advanced representatives selected from among 16,000 customs clerks working at the gates of the motherland won the honorable title of "advanced customs worker of the nation." They received red-color certificates to this effect at the Great Hall of the People today.

Among those attending today's commendation meeting were Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council; Chen Muhua, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor; and Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade. They presented certificates to the advanced customs workers and banners to 20 advanced collectives which had honorably earned the title of "advanced customs collective of the nation."

Among the advanced collectives and individuals, some had distinguished themselves on many occasions by braving rough seas in carrying out unremitting struggle against smugglers and dealers of smuggled goods. Others had worked for long periods of time at customs posts on the border of the motherland hit regularly by snowstorms and bitterly cold weather. Still others had been praised by people at home and by others coming from abroad for their enthusiastic service. They all presented a lofty image of the people's customs service.

In an address at the meeting, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun warmly praised the outstanding achievements made by these advanced collectives and individuals for the sake of the motherland despite difficult working conditions. He hoped that in the new year they would perform new meritorious deeds in customs reform, in actually "doing conscientious customs work and rendering good service," and in the struggle for fundamental improvement of party style.

ARMY PAPER OPPOSES PRIVILEGES FOR CADRE CHILDREN

[Text] JIEFANGJUN BAO on 24 December 1985 published an article entitled "Do Not Let Your Children Become Special Personages," written by Wen Xueliang. It says:

Today, many people complain about improper party conduct. They have expressed dissatisfaction over certain cadres who have let their children become special personages. Therefore, the mistakes certain leading cadres have committed in educating their children are not only questions concerning family conduct; they are also questions concerning party conduct. Thus, improving party conduct certainly includes the need to correct certain leading cadres' unhealthy practice of abusing their authority and letting their children become special personages. I believe that to prevent and combat the unhealthy practices of making cadres' children special personages we must do two things:

First of all, the cadres themselves should not spoil their childrer and treat them as if they are their private property. Instead, they should nurture their children in such a way that they will become successors of the revolutionary cause.

Second, people should not fawn on or flatter the children of cadres, nor should they give the cadres' children any special consideration.

If we can do these two things together, it will not be easy for someone to become a special personage.

XINHUA EMPHASIZES LIGHTENED BURDEN FOR PEASANTS

[XINHUA commentator article: "The Work of Lightening the Burden on Peasants Must Not Be Done Perfunctorily"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jan (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee and the State Council issued a "Circular Prohibiting the Indiscriminate Imposition of Quotas on Peasants and Collection of Fees from Them" nearly 3 months ago. Acting according to the requirements of the circular, most departments and localities have since thoroughly investigated such cases and taken effective measures in canceling a number of unreasonable quotas. Thus, excessive burdens on peasants have been lightened. This is the way to solve problems for the peasants, which gives expression to our party's fine tradition of being concerned about the weal and woe of the masses. That is why peasants have made favorable comments on it.

It should be pointed out, however, that some departments and localities have yet to take action in this respect. It seems as if they have only paid lip service to lightening the burden on peasants or turned this into a mere formality. This is a danger signal, and we must not let it go.

Why have those localities and departments failed to firmly act according to the arrangements made by the party Central Committee and the State Council? Why are they so irresponsible? Some comrades say they have not taken action in this regard because they have been too busy with their work. It may be true they have been busy, but it is wrong to say they have not had time to take care of this matter. No matter how busy localities and departments are with their work, they just cannot shift their responsibility to others or perfunctorily handle such an important matter as lightening the burden on peasants, a matter which has a bearing on the relationship between the party and the masses, between the cadres and the masses, and between the workers and the peasants, and on the development of rural reform and the rural economy.

No one should take an indifferent attitude to this matter, nor should one fail to concern oneself with it or grasp it.

Some comrades hold that quotas are now imposed on peasants for the purpose of doing something good for them, and that not a single imposed quota can be dispensed with. It should be realized, however, that when we do something good for peasants, we should do so according to their capabilities; this is a principle we must follow. If the burden on peasants is beyond their capabilities, the good things that are to be done for them may well harm their interests. In that case, the reasonable would become unreasonable. Therefore, inquiries should be made into doing good for peasants, and cases should be handled according to individual merit. Some should be maintained, and others canceled or reduced in scale.

Some localities have delayed lightening the burden on peasants because they are afraid of difficulties; they are afraid it is a complicated task, involving many departments and contradictions. Precisely because it is a difficult task, it is all the more necessary for leaders to firmly devote their energies to carrying it out. As long as leaders are firmly determined to lighten the burden on peasants and rely on the masses for suggestions, they can remove the obstacles in various quarters and find a way to solve this problem. Take Heilongjiang Province, for example. Earlier, in this province, the responsible persons of 26 departments and bureaus met at a working session convened by the governor. At that meeting, they each enumerated the quotas imposed by their respective departments on the peasants, and such quotas were collectively and individually checked. Then, measures to retain or cancel such quotas were taken at the meeting. Moreover, these measures were made known to the whole province by circulating a notice, and arrangements were made for government organizations to enact the measures in various parts of the province. This has made it possible for the masses to supervise the implementation of such measures. Heilongjiang Province has set a good example in meeting difficulties head-on and achieving good results in lightening the burden on peasants.

The party Central Committee and the State Council have raised the question of lightening the burden on the peasants every year over the past several years. In Document No 1, issued in each of the past 3 years, principles and measures were laid down in this regard every year. In addition, the "Circular Prohibiting the Indiscriminate Imposition of Quotas on Peasants and Collection of Fees from Them" was especially issued last October. There are orders and bans to follow in this regard, and we must follow them. It is hoped that, in localities where the problem of the excessive burden on the peasants has not yet been solved, leaders have a sense of urgency and take prompt action in meeting the peasants' needs and in solving this problem for them.

RENMIN RIBAO CRITICIZES DISCIPLINE PROCRASTINATION

[Article by Zhang Lizhou: "The Soft Tactic of Procrastination and the Hard Tactic of Contradiction"]

[Text] The saying that "the top has policies and the bottom has countermeasures" is a manifestation which shows that some cadres refuse to carry out the policies of the CPC Central Committee. No matter what countermeasures they adopt, there are only two kinds of countermeasures: One is the hard tactic of contradiction and the other is the soft tactic of procrastination. In recent years, the hard tactic of contradiction has become ineffective, because some cases of contradiction have been checked and those involved in the cases have been dealt with as a result of the intervention of the leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee. However, procrastination has not been paid attention to or, at least, not many cases of procrastination have been seriously dealt with.

In fact, the damage caused by procrastination is no less than that caused by contradiction. The cadres and masses do not have less hatred or dislike for procrastination than they have for contradiction. It seems that the trend of procrastination must be checked because procrastination is one of the malpractices giving shelter to other malpractices.

The trend of procrastination can also be seen in the process of implementing policies and carrying out reform. The trend of procrastination can particularly be seen in the examination of cases of violating discipline and in the straightening out of malpractices. In examining and exposing the cases of cadres violating the law and discipline, some areas were "too cautious" and procrastinated for a long time from beginning to end. Some areas procrastinated even for months or years without reaching any conclusions in the end. The responsible cadres and departments give many excuses for this: Some say that the cases are generally clear, but the details of the cases still need to be further investigated and examined; some say that although someone has made mistakes on a certain question, he has also done good things in the past, so he should not be punished without careful consideration; some say that although the cases should be dealt with, they should be dealt with cautiously because the cases concern a certain leading cadre; some think that the cases can be wound up, but they should not be dealt with immediately because the people involved in the cases are in poor health and are not in a good mood at the moment. There was repeated procrastination in some cases under the pretext of giving the "cold treatment." None of these excuses is convincing. The prerequisite for dealing with the cases is to investigate the facts and decide the nature of the cases. The key to dealing with the cases lies in properly handling the cases according to law and discipline, the nature and gravity of the cases, and the attitude of the people who are involved in the cases. We certainly oppose dealing with cadres without any specific evidence and without careful consideration. We oppose negating cadres because they have made a single mistake. However, we must remember: The law must be observed, enforcement must be strict, and law-breakers must be dealt with. And everyone must be equal before the law and party discipline with no exceptions.

The soft tactic of procrastination and the hard tactic of contradiction, though different in form, aim at the same thing and produce the same results -- refusal to carry out party policies, refusal to deal with malpractices, and sheltering those who violate the law and discipline. So, the soft tactic of procrastination can be said to be the soft tactic of contradiction or to be another form of the hard tactic of contradiction. However, under most circumstances, the former is "wiser," more ingenious, and more effective than the latter. This is the only difference between the soft and hard tactics. This is because applying the hard tactic of contradiction means running a risk, because if someone reports the case to the higher authorities and the higher authorities give instructions, he who violates discipline will naturally be dealt with and he who shields him will also be blamed. However, those who apply the soft tactic of procrastination are always safe and do not need to run a risk, and sometimes, can even give people an impression of "doing detailed and careful work." Even when the higher authorities investigate the case, they will only be blamed for "doing things too slowly," and will not be blamed for making serious mistakes. At present, on some issues, people cannot contradict the instructions of the higher authorities, but can procrastinate successfully. Can this be said to be a good example?

Some cadres prefer to use the soft tactic of procrastination rather than the hard tactic of contradiction in dealing with the party policies; there are loopholes in our party and leading organs of which they can avail themselves. Although the CPC Central Committee is determined to straighten out the malpractices and is strict and impartial in implementing the law and party discipline, and has been repeatedly trying to solve some problems, while implementing the party policies, some areas have always had serious problems, such as "there are assignments but no examinations," "there is much said but little done," and "there is a fine start but a poor finish."

When straightening out some malpractices, some areas were resolute and serious at the beginning, but as time went on, their work became relaxed, and their "temperature" dropped, and finally they became unaware of the malpractices. This situation has provided loopholes for some people, because those people think that if they can apply the tactic of procrastination until the trend is over, they will be safe. For instance, in the party rectification, some areas took the issue of some cadres occupying more residential area than they were entitled to as a "breach," and asked the masses to give their views on the issue; the cadres concerned also made self-criticisms. But when the party rectification was over, the issue was no longer mentioned, and the cadres still occupied the same amount of residential area. Since these kinds of people can benefit from the soft tactic of procrastination, other people will most likely learn from them. So we must resolutely straighten out malpractices and carry on the struggle through to the end so that those people will be unable to apply either the soft tactic of procrastination or the hard tactic of contradiction. This is the key to the fundamental improvement of our party style.

In order to strictly and impartially enforce law and discipline and crack down on malpractices, we must "paint a picture with two brushes at the same time: "We must not only dare to "defeat the hard tactic of contradiction" but also dare to "defeat the soft tactic of procrastination." We must seriously deal with not only those who disregard the law and discipline, stick to their old way of doing things, and openly contradict the policies of the CPC Central Committee but also those who overtly agree but covertly oppose or privately procrastinate to implement the policies of the CPC Central Committee. At present, we should clear up those old cases which are serious and for which we have had conclusive evidence, and strictly deal with the people involved in those cases so as to make people understand that our party organizations at various levels are powerful enough to deal with those who practice either the hard tactic of contradiction or the soft tactic of procrastination will find their chances significantly reduced.

PLA DEPARTMENT PROMOTES SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jan (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Staff Department made use of typical advanced examples to educate cadres and fighters, thus playing a significant role in improving party style and strengthening socialist spiritual civilization.

During the past year the department has vigorously strengthened socialist spiritual civilization and carried out extensive education on fostering lofty ideals, high moral standards and education, and a sense of discipline, thus effecting profound changes in the mental outlook of cadres and fighters in all units under its command. As a result, more than 110 advanced collectives and individuals in promoting spiritual civilization have emerged.

In December last year it organized 32 representatives from all fields of endeavor into 6 groups to report on advanced deeds in fostering lofty ideals, high moral standards and education , and a sense of discipline. They toured some 180 units under the command of the General Staff Department in north, east, south, northeast, southwest, and central-south China. They presented reports on more than 170 occasions with a combined audience of 140,000 people, winning wide acclaim from cadres, fighters, and comrades. After various tours, which lasted about 1 month, the reporting groups presented their final reports to various organs of the General Staff Department.

Making reports at the meetings were Yang Zailin, a student of the PLA Engineering School, who had been awarded the title of "land mine defusing hero" by the Central Military Commission for deactivating more than 30 land mines in the battle of self-defense against Vietnamese aggression; Ma Zhixian, a hospital nurse who cared for people while ignoring her own family for the sake of national defense; Liu Zhenxiang, a retired cadre who took the overall interest into consideration and stressed the importance of party spirit in streamlining and reorganizing the Army; and Liu Zhenpei, a staff cadre of the Institute of Topography, who worked hard in carrying out topographic work and scored outstanding achievements in doing scientific research. Their advanced deeds greatly educated the cadres and fighters.

Han Huaizhi, assistant to the chief of staff, made a speech at a meeting today. He said: To improve party style, we must help party members and cadres improve their world outlook and their outlook on life and educate them to foster lofty ideas and a sense of discipline. The leading comrades at all levels must be good at discovering, fostering, and cherishing typical advanced examples, and at making good use of such examples in educating fighters and cadres. By popularizing the typical advanced examples, we will be able to further develop the flourishing situation.

DEAD COMRADE MOURNED IN BEIJING 18 JANUARY

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jan (XINHUA) -- A ceremony to pay last respects to the remains of Comrade Yuan Renyuan, an outstanding member of the CPC and long-tested loyal communist fighter, was held at the auditorium of the Babaoshan Cemetery for Revolutionaries this afternoon. Yuan Renyuan died of illness in Beijing on 2 January this year at the age of 86.

Yuan Renyuan was a veteran comrade who joined the CPC in 1925, participated in the Baise uprising in Guangxi led by Deng Xiaoping and Zhang Yunyi, and served as director of the Political Department of the Second Column of the Red VII Corps. After the 2d Front Army and the 4th Front Army linked up during the Long March, he became political commissar of the XXXII Corps and struggled against Zhang Guotao's antiparty splittist activities. During the war of resistance against Japan, he served as director of the Political Department of the 359th Brigade under the 120th Division and as the special commissioner in Suide.

After the war of resistance against Japan, he held leading posts in the executive group of the Military Mediation Executive Commission and in the Jilin Provincial Government. Later, he successively served as vice governor of Hunan Province, vice minister of interior, secretary of the Qinghai Provincial CPC Committee, member of the Standing Committee of the Supervisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee, member of the Standing Committee and deputy secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, member of the Standing Committee of the Fourth CPPCC National Committee, and member of the Fifth NPC Standing Committee.

There were wreaths from Comrades Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian, Chen Yun, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Rongzhen, Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Hu Qili, Chen Muhua, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhaoguo, Wang Zhen, Bo Yibo, Song Renqiong, Wang Ping, Wang Shoudao, Wu Xiuquan, Liu Lantao, Xiao Ke, Huang Huoqing, Cheng Zihua, Wang Heshou, Han Guang, Wei Guoqing, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, Liao Hansheng, Yang Jingren, Yang Chengwu, Chen Zaidao, Huang Kecheng, Li Jingquan, Xiao Jingguang, He Changgong, and Fu Zhong; from the Central Advisory Commission; the Central Discipline Inspection Commission; the NPC Standing Committee; the CPPCC National Committee Standing Committee; the General Office of the CPC Central Committee; the Central Organization Department; the Ministry of Civil Affairs, the leading organs of Hunan, Qinghai, and Jilin Provinces; and the leading organ of Cili County of Hunan Province.

Comrade Yuan Renyuan's remains were surrounded by pine trees. Amid funeral music, some 500 persons stood in silent mourning in front of his remains. They included Xi Zhongxun, Hu Qili, Chen Muhua, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhaoguo, Wang Zhen, Bo Yibo, Wang Ping, Wu Xiuquan, Liu Lantao, Xiao Kei, Huang Huoqing, Cheng Zihua, Wang Heshou, Han Guang, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, Liao Hansheng, Yang Jingren, Yang Chengwu, Chen Zaidao, responsible comrades of the departments concerned of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, and Yuan Renyuan's friends.

While Comrade Yuan Renyuan was severely ill, he was visited in the hospital by Comrades Xi Zhongxun, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhaoguo, Wang Zhen, Bo Yibo, Song Renqiong, Wang Ping, Wang Shoudao, Wu Xiuquan, Xiao Ke, Cheng Zihua, Wang Heshou, Han Guang, Wei Guoqing, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, Liao Hansheng, Yang Chengwu and Fu Zhong. Comrade Xiao Jingquang assigned a representative to visit him in the hospital.

After cremation of Comrade Yuan Renyuan's remains, the urn containing the ashes will be placed at the Babaoshan Cemetery for Revolutionaries.

HU YAOBANG, ZHAO ZIYANG HONOR LATE NPC OFFICIAL

[Text] Beijing, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Communist Party and state leaders joined over 600 mourners today to pay their last respects to the late Vice-Chairman Hu Yuzhi of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress (NPC). Hu, also acting chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League and one of China's most prominent journalists, died of illness on January 16 at the age of 90.

Among the mourners today were party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Premier Zhao Ziyang. Wreaths were presented by Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian, Chen Yun, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Rongzhen, Ulanhu and Ye Jianying, as well as organizations of the party and government.

Born in Shangyu County of Zhejiang Province, Hu Yuzhi was a prominent figure in promoting China's progressive culture and publication. Before 1949, he took an active part in social activities against imperialism and reactionary forces. Especially in the years before and after the outbreak of the war of resistance against Japan in 1937, he started many publications to agitate national salvation.

Hu Yuzhi joined the Chinese Communist Party in 1933.

After the founding of New China in 1949, he served as editor-in-chief of the GUANGMING DAILY, head of the National Publishing Bureau, vice-chairman of the Committee for Reforming the Chinese Written Language, vice-minister of culture, vice-president of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, and chairman of All-China Esperanto League. He was member of the First, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth NPC Standing Committees and vice-chairman of the Fifth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference. The International Esperanto League, in a condolence message, described him as a "pioneer of China's Esperanto movement".

DENG LIQUN ADDRESSES DRAMA AWARDS CEREMONY 11 JAN

[By reporter Yin Hongzhou]

[Excerpt] Beijing, 10 Jan (XINHUA) -- Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, spoke at a ceremony to present the national "Golden Monkey Award" to outstanding children's radio dramas today. He said: Work concerning youngsters is the work of the whole party and society. Leaders and mass organizations at all levels should get involved in such work and render more good services for children.

Leading comrades Wang Ping, Liu Lantao, Huang Zhen, Huang Huoqing, Yan Jici, Lu Zhengcao, Ma Wenrui, and Rong Gaotang attended the awards ceremony at the Great Hall of the People. Also attending were over 500 representatives from various localities and children's representatives from the capital.

In his speech, Deng Liqun said: Most of China's 300 million children live in the countryside, on the frontier, and in small and medium-sized cities. They need interesting spiritual food to enrich their extracurricular cultural life. Due to limited resources, it is still difficult to build large numbers of children's stage or movie theaters and children's palaces. However, songs, plays, and stories aired via a small radio can develop the children's intelligence, exert a favorable influence on their character, and expand the scope of their knowledge. Along with the advance in broadcasting work and the popularization of the receiving equipment, the radio will become more powerful and have a more penetrating influence.

Deng Liqun emphatically pointed out: Since children are growing both physically and mentally, it is necessary to pay attention to strengthening their cultural life while improving their material living conditions. He called on children's writers and artists to create, in the noble spirit of holding themselves responsible to the country and the people, more and better movies, plays, TV and radio dramas, poems, paintings, and other forms of literary creation for children. He urged them to use various artistic images to help children understand the real meaning of life; enhance their ability to discern between truth and falsehood, good and evil, and beauty and ugliness; conscientiously resist the influence of bourgeois ideas and feudal remnants; and become a new generation of people with ideals, morals, general knowledge, and discipline.

NANJING AIR FORCE PARTY RECTIFICATION SUCCESS

[Text] Checkups conducted of party rectification work in Air Force units of the Nanjing Military Region at and above the regimental level indicate that party rectification has enhanced the sense of party spirit, spurred on the reduction-in-strength reorganization, and promoted the work of improving these units.

In undertaking party rectification, these Air Force units of the Nanjing Military Region have considered their actual situation and decided that the focal work is to rectify party style in leading bodies of corps, division, and regiments, and among leading cadres of these organs. In conjunction with the reduction-in-strength reorganization and considering the fact that some new unhealthy practices in society have found expression in their organizations, all units have carried out self-examination and compared what they have done with the established requirements.

For some time, a number of units have put money above everything, resulting in mistakes which violate the rules set by the higher authorities. The party committee of the Air Force of the Nanjing Military Region believes that though this problem has appeared in the departments doing specialized work, its root cause is attributed to leading bodies at various levels. Accordingly, the leading organs have made a positive effort to investigate and deal with the problem by dispatching work groups to these units. As a result, 14 companies and enterprise offices established against the central authorities' rules have been shut down, 13 kinds of business activities not permitted by policy have been stopped, and operations of 12 hostels and parking lots set up without approval have been suspended in the military region. In addition, the unhealthy practice of indiscriminate distribution of [words indistinct] in some units has been halted.

Party rectification has not only enhanced the sense of party spirit among cadres with party membership but has also brought progress in the work of reduction-in-strength reorganization in various units. A flight division completed the work of closing and amalgamating some of its organizations only 5 days after receiving the order for reduction-in-strength reorganization. This reorganization involved the transfer of some 300 people, and all of them were able to take the overall interests into consideration and to report for duty to their new units at the scheduled time. [Sentence indistinct]

Through party rectification, another flight division has firmly grasped the reform of training work. It has put into effect a system of [words indistinct] training week activity, which has produced quite successful results in solving the problems concerning training.

LIANG BUTING ADDRESSES SHANDONG CYL CONFERENCE

SK220742 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Text] The Shandong provincial conference of CYL delegates opened at the Nanjiao Guesthouse in Jinan on the morning of 21 January. The main tasks of this conference are to relay and implement the guidelines of the National CYL Congress and the sixth plenary session of the fourth provincial CPC Committee, to sum up and review achievements in the past 3 years, to study and define the tasks for 1986, and to readjust a part of the membership of the Shandong Provincial CYL Committee in line with the needs of the development of the current situation and in accordance with the four requirements for cadres.

Liang Buting, secretary of the Shandong Provincial CPC Committee; Li Changan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor; Jiang Chunyun, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Yang Xingfu, Zhou Zhenxing, Feng Lizu, Zheng Weimin, and Xu Shulin, members of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee;

Su Yiran, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; Li Farong, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; Li Zhen, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; and Ding Fangming, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, attended the opening ceremony. Song Qingwei, deputy political commissar of the Jinan Militan Region, attended the meeting to extend congratulations.

Comrade Jiang Chunyun spoke at the conference. He fully affirmed the achievements of the province's CYL committees in the various fields since the seventh provincial CYL congress. Comrade Jiang Chunyun said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the glorious mission of the broad masses of youths throughout the province is to vie to be new persons with ideals, morality, culture, and sense of discipline under the leadership of the party and the banner of reform, and to strive for improvements and perform meritorious deeds in an effort to fulfill comprehensively the Seventh 5-Year Plan and other tasks. This is the first year for implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We hope that the broad masses of CYL members and youths throughout the province will display the vigor of the Year of the Tiger and bravely shoulder the heavy tasks entrusted to them by history.

Comrade Jiang Chunyun said: It is very important to foster a new generation of persons with ideals, morality, culture, and a sense of discipline in the great practice of reform and the four modernizations. We should lead and help the young people to foster a correct world outlook and outlook on life, lead them correctly to understand reform and the practice of opening to the outside world, vigorously intensify and improve ideological and political work, and urge the CYL cadres to make self-improvements. The CPC committees and governments at all levels should care for and support CYL work. All walks of life as well as all trades and professions should contribute to creating conditions for the healthy growth of young people.

Comrade Liang Buting also said a few words to the young friends at the conference. He said: Only by closely relying on the leadership of the party and not deviating from the party for a single moment can the CYL committees truly represent the interests of young people. Furthermore, only by continuously strengthening the flesh-and-blood ties with the young people and daring to reflect and represent the will and demands of the young people can the CYL committees become good assistants of the party.

Comrade Li Changan also said a few words to the young friends. He said: Be faithful assistants of the party and be bosom friends of the youths.

In the afternoon, Lin Tingsheng, secretary of the provincial CYL Committee, delivered a report to the provincial conference of CYL delegates on behalf of the provincial CYL Committee. Attending this conference were a total of 300 persons. Among them were members and alternate members of the seventh provincial CYL Committee, responsible persons of the CYL committees of the institutions of higher learning in the various prefectures and cities and the provincial-level units, and representatives of advanced youths and collectives selected from various fronts.

GUANGDONG MEETINGS STRESS IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK200557 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 19 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 17 January and the morning of 19 January, the provincial leadership group for straightening out party style in the organs held report meetings of the provincial departments on studying the speeches of leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering and implementing the circular of the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on solving some serious current problems in organ work style. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Lin Ruo and Deputy Secretary Wang Ning made speeches after listening to the reports.

They said: As a result of party rectification and studying and implementing the spirit of the central documents, the provincial organs have solved some problems in party style and achieved some results. Party style is better than before. However, there are still many problems. We are very far from a fundamental turn for the better in party style. We must ceaselessly grasp this question in the future, and achieve practical results. We must start with the provincial organs and the leading cadres in straightening out party style and correcting unhealthy trends.

On how to specifically carry out this work in the new year, Comrade Lin Ruo said: We must first get a good grasp of education and training for the cadres, and fundamentally enhance the understanding of party-member cadres regarding the program of serving the people wholeheartedly. Secondly, we must conduct education in discipline. In the course of economic structural reform, powers have been delegated to the lower levels and restrictions on the enterprises have been relaxed, but discipline cannot be relaxed. While giving the enterprises decision-making powers and invigorating the economy, we must strengthen education in party spirit, style, and discipline, and step up discipline inspection work. We must deal seriously with those who refuse to mend their ways despite repeated admonition.

We must also put the party's democratic life system on a sound basis and seriously promote criticism and self-criticism.

HENAN'S YANG XIZONG URGES IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK210257 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 20 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Henan Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Xizong stressed in a speech to a gathering of provincial organ cadres on the afternoon of 20 January: The whole body of party-member cadres in the provincial organs must set an example for the province in straightening out party style. We must regard continuing to do a good job in party rectification and further straightening out party style as a major task for 1986 and get a thoroughly good grasp of it, so as to stimulate reforms and the building of two civilizations this year and enable the province's work to advance to a new level.

The gathering of provincial organs was held in the Henan People's Assembly Hall. Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Zhengwei presided. Yang Xizong delivered a speech entitled "Straighten Out Party Style, and Unite To Forge Ahead." He Zhukang, Zhao Di, Lin Yinghai, Zhang Shude, Zhan Jingwu, Dong Guoqing, Song Yuxi, Zhang Zhigang, Hou Zhiying, Song Zhaoshu, Yao Minxue, Han Jingcao, Zhang Chixia, and Hu Tingji attended, together with some 3,000 provincial organ cadres.

In his speech Comrade Yang Xizong first reviewed the fundamental and gratifying changes that have taken place in the province since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Yang Xizong said: There are still many problems in party style in the organs, and some of them are rather serious. There are indeed some rotten phenomena. In recent years some good documents have been issued and some good ideas proposed by the provincial CPC Committee and government and also by various departments on implementing the principles, policies, and instructions of the CPC Central Committee and State Council. However, quite a number of these documents and ideas have been implemented poorly. Often it is a case of just writing documents and discussing matters at meetings, but going no further than talking, without translating them into action.

Some units do their work in a superficial way. Some pass the buck to others when any problem crops up, afraid to take responsibility. They engage in bargaining over who is to handle a task, and delay solutions to problems for a long time.

Political liberalism is also rather conspicuous in the provincial organs. Some people do not study the central principles and policies and even ignore the intentions of the central authorities, find fault with them, and make irresponsible comments. They spread erroneous sayings based on their individual point of view.

Since last year, leading central comrades have repeatedly made truth-seeking evaluations of work since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and on the work of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee. They have fully affirmed this work. However, certain comrades pay no heed to this and continue to spread baseless rumors and slander; in some cases this has developed to groundless accusations, manufactured stories, and framing their comrades in pursuit of their own interests.

Some units are lax in organization and slack in discipline. They have not had an organizational life for a long time. Some people stress affections instead of party spirit and relationships instead of principles in employing people and handling matters. Instead of promoting great unity, they themselves draw demarcation lines according to their own views or by factions. They appoint acquaintances to official posts, organize their own crony groups and even praise some and look down on others, and draw some to themselves and squeeze out others.

There are many reasons for the existence of these problems. The negative consequences of the 10 years of Cultural Revolution turmoil cannot be completely eliminated in a short time. In the new historical conditions, the erosion caused by decadent capitalist and feudalist thought makes some people whose thinking was already unhealthy and stand unsound, forget the party's program, discard communist ideals, and bring capitalist concepts of value into the field of political life. For a time, our ideological and political work lagged behind the demands of practical life. In some units, the building of spiritual civilization has been relaxed, and their party leadership is weak and ineffective and dares not tackle unhealthy trends. They talk a lot of straightening out party style but do not do much about it. They are also weak and lenient in handling problems and cases that have already been brought to light.

Speaking on this question, Comrade Yang Xizong said: The provincial CPC Committee is responsible for the problems in party style in the provincial organs. We have lacked knowledge of this situation and the gravity of the problems, and our corrective and precautionary measures have been ineffective. We have not done enough in setting an example in some respects. In the course of straightening out party style in the provincial organs, in the future we welcome everyone's criticism and supervision of the provincial CPC Committee.

Comrade Yang Xizong called for resolute implementation of the central guideline on making resolute and sustained efforts in straightening out party style, correcting unhealthy trends, and eliminating rottenness. We must do a good job of this work in accordance with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's proposal to utter less empty talk and do more practical work.

He stressed: In Henan, correcting the party style must start with the provincial organs, including the provincial CPC Committee and government. In light of the province's realities, he stressed five issues:

1. Strengthen ideological education and ideological and political work.

2. ...y establish the idea that to lead is to serve. The leading organs must serve the grass-roots, and the upper levels must serve the lower levels.

3. Strictly enforce discipline and be strict in governing the party.

4. Put the party's life system on a sound basis and strengthen the party organizations' supervision over every party member.

5. Consider the overall situation, stress unity and practical results, and compare contributions.

Comrade Yang Xizong said: The provincial CPC Committee has decided to set up a leadership group for straightening out party style. Comrade Liu Zhengwei is head of the group and Lin Yingha, Zhang Zhigang, and Song Zhaoshu are the deputies. This group will be responsible for this work.

HUBEI COMMENTARY SUPPORTS SPECIALIZED HOUSEHOLDS

HK131212 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Jan 86

[Station commentary: "We Must Continue To Support the Development of Specialized Households"]

[Text] Over the years, the rise of rural specialized households has played an important part in developing commodity production in rural areas, invigorating the rural economy, and expediting the peasants' pace of attaining prosperity. However, new problems have emerged in the course of development and need to be solved by leading comrades at various levels through reviewing experiences and continuing to support the development of specialized households.

In order to continue to support the development of specialized households, we must first fully understand the status and role of specialized households in the rural economy. The CPC Central Committee spoke highly of the specialized households shortly after their emergence. It pointed out that the households were the representatives of advanced productive forces in the rural areas, were forerunners in achieving common prosperity shared by all peasants, and were activists following the party in carrying out the extensive rural economic reforms.

In 1985, the number of specialized households in the province totaled more than 253,000. By rationally readjusting the production structure, they actively engaged in circulation channels, gradually enlarged the scale of operation, and improved their economic results. Many of them extricated the poor households from their poverty-stricken state after attaining prosperity themselves. They helped the poor ones in the area of technology, funds and seeds. Thus, they developed into civilized households and new economic combines. Only this is the main stream of development for specialized households. Under no circumstances must we falter in our understanding of the overall status of the role of specialized households even when we know that some of them have committed crimes.

In order to continue supporting the development of specialized households, we must overcome ideological obstructions. Some people said that specialized households attained prosperity so quickly that they were unfavorable to the goal of common prosperity. This is of course one-sided thinking. Both the productivity and marketability of commodities of the specialized households are much higher than those of ordinary peasant households. Therefore, the increase of income completely conforms to the principle that anyone who works more can earn more. There is nothing wrong with the specialized households attaining prosperity quickly. On the one hand, we must uphold the policy of common prosperity and, on the other, acknowledge the differences of development and allow some people and areas to attain prosperity first. Only thus can it be favorable to social development. If we adopt the practice of egalitarianism, we shall dampen the development of production.

In order to continue supporting the development of specialized households, we must also comprehensively and completely implement the party's policies toward attaining prosperity. We must maintain the continuity of policies. In the course of conducting extensive rural reforms, we must encourage the specialized households to attain prosperity by working hard, but not by grouping together several households as a large one. While we allow some people to attain prosperity first, we must respect the will of the peasants. Based on the system of contracted responsibilities to household and in connection with the development trend, we should develop new forms of economic combines. We must not stir up the wind of communism or practice egalitarianism. Instead, we must adopt suitable policies for carrying out necessary readjustment, so as to help the poor attain prosperity. We must protect the legitimate rights of specialized households while preventing them from seeking profits through illegal means.

In other words, we must comprehensively implement the party's principles and policies, and support the specialized households development in a healthy way so as to promote an overall prosperity in the rural economy.

GUAN GUANGFU AT HUBEI COMMENDATION MEETING

[Excerpts] On 15 January, the Ministry of Railways, the province, and Wuhan City jointly held a meeting in Wuchang to honor two railway stations and three trains under the Wuhan Railway Sub-Bureau. The Hankou Station was named a civilized station by the Ministry of Railways. The Hankou Station and Trains No 37 and 38 of the station were respectively named a civilized station and civilized trains by the provincial CPC Committee and government. Trains No 245 and 246 and trains No 213 and 214 were named civilized trains by the Wuhan City CPC Committee and government. The Wuchang Station won third place in the third section of the 1985 national appraisal of passenger transport work in large railway stations and was commended by the Ministry of Railways.

Guan Guangfu, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Guo Zhenqian, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Wang Jie, secretary of the Wuhan City CPC Committee; and (Li Daqiang), secretary of the Zhengzhou Railway Bureau CPC Committee, attended the meeting.

HU JINTAO SPEAKS AT GUIYANG ENLARGED CPC MEETING

HK170849 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 15 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 12 January, at the closing session of the Fourth Enlarged Plenary Session of the Fourth Guiyang City CPC Committee, Hu Jintao, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out in a speech: Over the past 5 years, Guiyang City has been full of vitality and advanced amid reforms. In the next 5 years, the city will strive to stand at the province's forefront in the areas of developing productive forces, reforming the economic structure, achieving a fundamental turn for the better in both party work style and the general mood of society, developing education, and developing the intellectual resources.

Comrade Hu Jintao said: We should affirm that the 7 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are also one of the best periods experienced by the city since liberation. In other words, these 5 years are a period of vigorous development and advancement. The situation is manifested in the following areas:

First, because of the introduction of the system of contracted responsibilities with payment linked to output as well as the readjustment of production structure in the rural areas, the peasants living in the suburbs of Guiyang City became more enthusiastic about production, thereby promoting all-round growth in the rural economy.

Second, because of the implementation of the principle of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating, and improving: the practice of decentralizing the decision-making power to enterprises; and conducting in-depth development in urban economic structural reform, a large number of large and medium-sized enterprises were put under the jurisdiction of Guiyang City. Not only has this strengthened the economic power of the city, but is also favorable to strengthening the extensive economic links among the enterprises. All this has promoted a stable and coordinated development of the city's industry.

Third, reforms has also brought new vitality to Guiyang City. The city has preliminarily formed an open circulation system marked by state-run commerce, varied economic elements, varied circulation channels, and manifold styles of operation. The tertiary industry is rapidly developing.

Fourth, reform have promoted the development of productive forces, and have promoted an all-round improvement in economic results. In 1985, the city's gross industrial and agricultural output value was increased by 93.8 percent compared to 1980. Its financial revenues increased by 118 percent compared to 1980.

Comrade Hu Jintao said: We should also realize that though there has been rapid economic development, the city is rather poor among the cities of a similar type in the areas of per capita output value and national income. Though our reforms were started much earlier, we face the problems of making little progress and not being perfect. There are problems in urban construction and we have not put an end to the situation of having a poor state of basic urban facilities. There are also problems in party work style and the general mood of society. Under no circumstances should we change our understanding about the good situation just because of these problems. However, we must not neglect them. We must take a scientific and down-to-earth attitude and seriously solve them. We must develop the good situation and make progress while conducting in-depth reforms.

Comrade Hu Jintao pointed out: In the next 5 years, Guiyang City must strive to stand at the province's forefront. As summed up by Comrade Hu Yaobang, our tasks for the next 5 years are to grasp well both the economic structural reform and the building of socialist spiritual civilization, while continuing to grasp economic construction. We should improve the situation so that our undertaking of socialist modernization can develop in an all-round, continuous, stable, and coordinated way. In order to achieve the above goal, the CPC Central Committee pointed out sharply an important political task for the central organs; that is, they should take their noble mentality and fine work style as examples for the country. This call of the CPC Central Committee is not only a driving force for comrades of the central organs, but is also a profound education and encouragement for local cadres and party members. Leading comrades at various levels, as well as the party members throughout the province, should seriously study and understand the spirit and essence of the remarks of the central leading comrades. They should also respond to their remarks with actions.

Later, Comrade Hu Jintao put forward explicit requirements to Guiyang City in the areas of developing productive forces, reforming the economic structure, achieving a fundamental turn for the better in both in party work style and general mood of society, developing education, and developing intellectual resources.

YUNNAN'S PU CHAOZHU AT RALLY ON CORRECTING STYLE

HK161416 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 13 Jan 86

[Excerpts] This morning, the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee held a rally in the hall of the organs of the committee. In response to the call of the CPC Central Committee, it further mobilized and arranged for the work of correcting the work style of the leadership organs, of checking up on companies, and of investigating and dealing with big and serious cases.

At the rally, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu spoke about the problems of leadership organs correcting their work style and strengthening discipline. In his speech, Comrade Pu Chaozhu first affirmed the achievements scored by our province in investigating and dealing with big and serious cases, checking up on and consolidating all companies and centers, and solving the problems of leading cadres of party and government organs at and above the county level and by their children and spouses engaged in commerce and running enterprises, and the current several serious problems in the work style of organs since the meeting of county secretaries was held in October last year. He cited some typical examples, cases, and precedents, analyzed the pattern of crimes by a small number of criminals in the new situation, and reminded party organizations at all levels to heighten their political vigilance and further understand the importance and urgency of rectifying organs work style, correcting party style, and striving to do work in this aspect well.

Pu Chaozhu emphatically said: The Secretariat of the central authorities held a rally of cadres of the organs of the central authorities in Beijing. Leading comrades, including Comrades Yaobang, Jiyun, Zhaoguo, Shangkun, and Ziyang, delivered important speeches one after another. They called on the leadership organs to set an example in correcting party style. The demanded that the leadership organs of the central authorities set an example for the whole country with their own lofty spiritual outlook and excellent work style. The provincial CPC Committee has held that the speeches of several leading comrades of the central authorities are extremely important. They not only addressed the leadership organs of the central authorities but also made demands on the leadership organs at the provincial level and on the whole party. Whether the leadership organs at the provincial level have an excellent work style or not has a great bearing on whether a province does its work well or badly.

The leadership organs at the provincial level include the departments, committees, offices, and bureaus directly under the provincial CPC Committee and provincial government; the organs directly under the provincial People's Congress; the provincial CPPCC Committee; the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; and the organs directly under all people's organizations at the provincial level. They must all resolutely implement the instructions of the leading comrades of the central authorities, actively respond to Comrade Yaobang's call, and set an example for the whole province with their own lofty spiritual outlook and excellent work style.

Through the rectification of the work style of the organs, we must ensure that efficiency is enhanced and that we study hard, strictly enforce discipline, strengthen party spirit, and lead the people of all nationalities throughout the province to do well in grasping two important matters -- reform of the economic structure and the building of spiritual civilization. In accordance with the instructions of the central authorities, the provincial CPC Committee has further studied and made arrangements for the correction of the work style of the leadership organs:

1. With a solemn attitude, party organizations at all levels must organize the party members and cadres at and above the county level to study the speeches of the several leading comrades of the central authorities at the rally of the cadres of the organs of the central authorities. Through study, in conjunction with reality, we must further understand the importance and urgency of rectifying organs' work style and correcting party style. In the first phase of party rectification in the organs at the county level, it is necessary to regard the implementation of the circular of the General Offices of the central authorities and State Council as an important content of education in party spirit, of correcting unhealthy trends, and of simultaneous rectification and correction. Party organizations at all levels must be determined to rectify organs' work style and to correct unhealthy trends with a serious and responsible attitude, and not a careless and casual attitude, and with an attitude of adhering to principle and sparing nobody's feelings, and not an attitude of dodging and covering up contradictions. Rectifying organs' work style and correcting unhealthy trends is also a rigorous test of whether the party spirit of party organizations at all levels is strong or weak and whether they have combat effectiveness or not.

2. It is necessary to further strengthen leadership over the work of consolidation and checking up. CPC committees and party organizations at all levels must each organize a strong group to strengthen leadership over this aspect of work. They must also each have a vigorous work group suited to their tasks. It is essential to grasp this work at every level and to establish the system of responsibility for consolidation and checking up. When unhealthy trends seriously exist in a place or unit, and have not been eliminated and corrected over a long period of time, the responsibility of its CPC committee and secretary for leadership must be investigated and affixed. With a view to strengthening leadership, the provincial CPC Committee has decided to set up a leadership group for consolidation and checking up, with Comrade Li Xingwang as the head of the group and with Comrades Li Shuji, Liu Shusheng, Yin Jun, (Giu Chuangxiao), and (Jin Renqing) as the members. Under it there is a General Office with Comrade (Luo Jiguang) as its director.

3. It is imperative to investigate and deal promptly with the big and serious cases. On the basis of the important clues disclosed in the course of checking up, it is essential to organize special forces to conduct prompt investigation and to investigate the cases to the end without sparing anyone's feelings, no matter who these cases involve, how high their posts are, and how senior they are. People, including myself, the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee members, and the governor and vice governors of the provincial government, must unconditionally accept the supervision of all. In investigation, we must persist in seeking truth from facts.

4. It is necessary to use positive and negative typical examples to penetratingly sum up experiences and lessons and to conduct lively education in party spirit, party style, party discipline, and the legal system for the whole party. We must establish healthy trends and curb unhealthy trends. In the leadership organs, we must establish a good work style of enhancing efficiency, studying hard, strictly abiding by discipline, and strengthening party spirit.

5. Through conducting investigation and study and summing up experiences and lessons, we must strengthen the establishment of all necessary systems to prevent unhealthy trends.

At this morning's rally, a notice on the swindling case of the Kunming (Zhonghua) residential housing construction company was circulated.

Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Li Shuji presided over this morning's rally. Attending the rally were some 600 people, including He Zhiqiang and Zhu Zhihui, deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee; Li Xingwang, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; Yin Jun, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; Li Guiying, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Liang Jia, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; veteran comrades Gao Zhiguo and Sun Yuting; responsible persons of the departments, committees, offices, and bureaus at the provincial level, of universities, colleges, CPC committees, and party groups of people's organizations, and of all prefectural, autonomous prefectural, and city CPC committees; and the principal responsible persons of the Kunming City party and government.

XIZANG MEETING REVIEWS LEFTIST EXPRESSIONS

HK190347 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Jan 86

[Excerpts] In close connection with the reality of their counties, county and district cadres attending the enlarged meeting of the Qamdo Prefectural CPC Committee have set out the expressions of leftism, discussed the harm done by leftism, dug up the roots of leftism, and eliminated its influence.

(Li Guangwen), secretary of the Riwoqe County CPC Committee, said in his speech that the influence of leftism and the pernicious effects of the Great Cultural Revolution were mainly expressed in the county in the following ways: We have not been thorough in negating the Great Cultural Revolution and eliminating its vestiges. We have not been thorough in implementing policies concerning the people. We have not carried out thorough propaganda on the discussion on the criterion for truth, eliminating leftism, and on completely negating the Great Cultural Revolution. Some cadres are accustomed to viewing things and analyzing and handling problems by applying the viewpoint of taking class struggle as the key link, and are unaccustomed to new things and new demands. Some people are very worried that religious activities will affect the masses' production and livelihood and public order. They thus adopt the method of hampering and strangling such activities. There is a failure to attach importance to the use of written and spoken nationality language, and to bring into play the role of united front and religious figures, Tibetan intellectuals, and doctors of Tibetan medicine. Some people are impatient for quick results in work, copy the methods of the interior in a fashion divorced from raality, and end up doing some stupid things.

After several days of discussions, the participants said with feeling: The influence of leftist ideology indeed runs deep in every county and has done much harm.

Luo Gan, vice chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions; He Jihai, vice minister of commerce; and over 200 model public bath workers and barbers attended the meeting sponsored by the Beijing Federation of Trade Unions.

HEBEI COMMERCIAL UNITS CITED ON 'UNHEALTHY TRENDS'

SK221144 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 25 Dec 85 p 2

["Excerpts" of speech delivered by Bai Shi, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, at a conference to exchange experiences of commercial units in improving party style: "ENhance Confidence To Improve Party Style" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Correctly Understand the Situation Regarding Party Style

In order to enhance our confidence in correcting party style, we should, first of all, have a correct estimation of the situation regarding party style. With regard to the estimation of the situation regarding party style, there ar[illegible] phenomena. The first is paying sole attention to the severity of problems. Some peop[illegible] feel that there are increasingly more problems, and fail to see the achievements won [illegible] the past few years. This will result in a loss of confidence and doubts about the fu[illegible]mental improvement in party style. The second is paying sole attention to the excellent situation without noting problems or making a full estimation of the severity of problems. This will lead to a blind optimism, slackness of efforts, relaxed ideological and political work, and a failure to improve party style earnestly. These two phenomena are not only harmful but also incompatible with the actual conditions.

Marked changes have indeed taken place in our party style during the past few years. To name the major ones, first, our party reestablished the ideological line of seeking truth from facts. Some people excluded this from the realm of party style, and rarely regarded the truth-seeking way of thinking as a part of party style when they were talking about party style. Our party suffered from this problem for a long period of time, and the work style of not seeking truth from facts was once very serious. The ideological line of seeking truth from facts has been reestablished since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Second, the trend of reform is being created throughout the party. It is a very great change for us to discard conventions and carry out reform, exploration,and creation of the new. This is also a change of party style. Third, we have normalized inner-party life. What was the inner-party life like in the past? A patriarchal system, "one person alone having the say," and personality cult prevailed, and the system of democratic centralism was damaged.

At present, although democratic centralism has yet to be implemented successfully, the patriarchal system and the practice of allowing "one person alone to have the say" have been greatly changed, particularly in some high leadership strata. Fourth, a large number of leading cadres who dare to explore the new, go deep into the realities of life, and work selflessly has emerged throughout the party, and party and government leading bodies at all levels have achieved marked progress in becoming younger, better educated, more revolutionary, and more professionally competent.

However, we should also note the current serious problems. At present, there are some people, in particular, some leading cadres at every level, who fail to fully estimate the problems. They either cannot point out any problems or can only talk about them in a very superficial way. Why? Because they know too little about the problem or take them too lightly. Although there has been great improvement in party style during the past few years, we must know that the problems in party style manifest themselves differently in different periods, and that new problems in party style will crop up along with the changes in the objective situations of every period and therefore our work focus and orientation should also change continuously. We should not feel at ease and justified to see that old problems are solved, but should also note the severity of new problems. The CPC Central Committee has given repeated injunctions to ban unhealthy trends. Some of the unhealthy trends have been checked, but others, instead of being stopped, are further developed in the new situation. Some people concocted various pretexts to go abroad for sight-seeing, or seized every opportunity to tour everywhere. Some cadres who have certain authority, together with their children or family members, abused their power or privileges to seek convenience in various fields, and to do business to gain profits or embezzle. Some organs engaged in extravagant wining and dining and gave parties and presents; this practice has become increasingly rampant. Some organs and enterprises resorted to fraud and various other measures to undermine the interests of the state for the selfish benefit of their own small groups. As far as these problems are concerned, there are some new trends rarely seen in the past. In the past, people engaged in such unhealthy trends covertly and dared not make them known to others. But the situation is different now. We have found that the leading party groups, party committees, or party branches of some units discussed openly, at meetings, issues that clearly constituted violations of law and discipline, and made decisions that violated law and discipline. This merits our special attention. How could decisions in violation of party discipline and state law be made at party meetings? The party committees that did this were not only those at lower levels but also those at comparatively higher levels. Such serious problems and such corruption not only run counter to the socialist spiritual civilization but, in fact, go beyond the bounds of the spiritual civilization and morality in some cases, and have become open violations of law and discipline.

Such problems also exist in commercial units and the field of circulation. Some problems, such as asking for sales commissions and funds for giving convenience to others, are even more serious. Since the beginning of this year, some commercial units of our province have voluntarily handed over to the state or recalled such funds. This is good. Two units have already recalled more than 160,000 yuan of "sales commission" or similar funds. The sum was so large in just two units. Throughout the province, there are some 6,400 commercial units that exercise independent accounting, and many production and marketing units and units involved in circulation in other fields. Imagine how serious the problems can be! However, some of our comrades fail to see the severity of such problems, become accustomed to them, and even consider them a normal way of business. Some people say that economic results will not be improved without engaging in such practices. We can see from this how far our understanding lags behind.

The Relationship Between Improvement of Party Style and Success in Vocational Work

At present, some comrades also acknowledge the importance of party style and know the many problems with regard to it, but they think that party committees and discipline inspection commissions should take charge of this, and that administrative and vocational departments do not have to pay attention to party style, but need only carry out economic and other vocational work. Such an understanding is wrong. One of our province's successful experiences in improving party style is the fact that departments in all fields have paid attention to improving party style. However, some comrades hold that the efforts of these departments in improving party style means the efforts of their party organizations and discipline inspect organizations alone, and think that they do not have to pay attention to party style because they take charge of vocational work or because they are administrative leaders. Such thinking should be thoroughly changed. All fronts should regard improvement of party style as their own responsibility, because our stressing of the importance of party style involves a whole front, not just a few individuals, an improvement of party style is not just a task for party committees and discipline inspection commissions, but a common task for all fronts. When implementing policies, carrying out reform, inspecting work, and engaging in a series of tasks, leading cadres at all levels on all fronts, particularly party-member cadres, should not only carry out their vocational work successfully, but should also consider the work of improving party style,and the ways to enforce discipline strictly, improve systems, plug loopholes, and guard against various violations of law and discipline.

Some issues to Which Attention Should Be Paid in Improving Party Style

1. Focus should be defined and efforts concentrated to check unhealthy trends. At present, we should check the trend of arbitrarily sending personnel abroad; resolutely stop sight-seeing or disguised sight-seeing with public funds; strictly ban extravagance and waste, and giving of parties and presents; and strictly prohibit party and government cadres from seeking other illegal income besides their wages and the benefits granted by their organs, and the leading cadres of party and government organs, as well as their children and spouses, from abusing power and violating regulations to engage in business for profit. In addition, all fields and units should define their own focus in line with their specific conditions, and concentrate efforts to solve the major problems.

2. Leading cadres, leading organs, and leading departments should take the lead, because "if the upper beam is not straight, the lower ones will go aslant." The exemplary deeds of leading persons are a voiceless force. When they act properly, others will learn from them, and when they do not act properly, others will learn from them, and when they do not act properly, the more they speak, the more doubts others will have. There are four demands on leading persons who are to take the lead. First, they should correct their ideas, and clearly distinguish right from wrong with regard to unhealthy trends. Second, they should be clean and right themselves, and educate their family members and children to be the same. Third, they should be brave in tackling unhealthy trends. Fourth, they should resolutely overcome bureaucracy. At present, the reasons why some units have many problems and cannot solve them in a timely manner are that their leaders are bureaucratic, understand the situation in a superficial manner instead of doing their work thoroughly, and pay attention to increasing their economic norms alone to the neglect of the work in other fields. They do not know how their achievements were scored, and even show little concern about some fraud. Without solving the problem of bureaucracy of leading persons, it will be very difficult to solve many problems.

3. It is necessary to conscientiously investigate and handle cases, and strictly enforce party discipline and state law. The major reason why the many serious problems in party style cannot be solved for a long time is that many leading persons engage in more talk and do less work, do not conscientiously investigate and tackle the many problems, and fail to sternly handle many cases. An effective method to correct unhealthy trends is to investigate and handle them every day. When investigating and handling the unhealthy trends, every level should do solid work, make real efforts, and dare to cope with difficulties.

4. Serious unhealthy trends in a unit and failure to correct them in a timely manner show the dereliction of duty of its leaders, and they should be held accountable. Leading persons of commercial units should also hold responsibility for such serious cases as spoilage and loss of commodities. If we leave this problem unsolved, we will find it difficult to plug loopholes in the future.

5. It is necessary to pay attention to education, the symptoms of unhealthy trends, and day-to-day ideological and political work. Education is the foundation. It is necessary for us to have systems and to handle problems. However, the most fundamental thing is the people's thinking. Only when they have correct ideas can they build a great wall against corruption and degeneration, and promote a quicker improvement in party style.

SHANXI CIRCULAR ON IMPLEMENTING LEADERS SPEECHES

HK210511 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 16 January, the provincial CPC Committee issued a circular calling on party committees at all levels and all departments directly under the provincial authorities to seriously study and implement the important speeches of leading comrades at the meeting of central organ cadres. The circular pointed out that recently, the Central Secretariat held a meeting of central organ cadres, at which such leading comrades as Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Tian Jiyun, Yang Shangkun and Wang Zhaoguo delivered important speeches. They comprehensively analyzed China's good political and economic situation in recent years, China's remarkable progress in economic structural reform and improving the party work style. At the same time, they seriously pointed out the present problems in organ work style, the importance of correcting party work style, and the direction and methods of correcting party work style. They urged all party members and cadres of the central party, government and military organizations to take an exemplary role in this work.

The circular urged: First, the party and government organs at all levels must organize all party members and cadres to study seriously the important speeches of the central leading comrades. The units should study and discuss them simultaneously with reference to their experiences, so as to heighten their consciousness of correcting party work style. Second, party organizations at and above county level must attach great importance to the work of correcting party work style. The principal leadership of county CPC committees must personally handle the work. They must seriously improve the situation, make concrete plans and frequently check the situation. They are prohibited from paying lip service or acting perfunctorily. The leading cadres should resolutely take the lead in the work.

They should study the speeches and correct their mistakes simultaneously, seriously solicit opinions from the masses, and voluntarily correct their unhealthy tendencies, so as to play an exemplary role for the masses. In the work of correcting party work style, organs directly under the provincial authorities must set examples for the state as a whole.

Third, party and government organs at all levels must treat as the breakthrough point of correcting the party work style, the implementation of the spirit of Document No 57 issued last year by the CPC Central Committee and State Council offices. Units which are carrying out party rectification must take the six serious problems in organ work style as focal points in measuring themselves by the standards of the central authorities. Units which have carried out party rectification must review their situation and measure themselves by the spirit of the document. They should sum up their experience and really solve the problems. After solving the six serious problems, they should solve problems of bureaucratism, liberalism, indiscipline and irresponsibility among organs.

Fourth, we should perfect the regular activities of the party. Party and government organization, at and above county level, msut strictly follow party regulations, so as to regularize the political activities of the party.

SHANXI DEPUTY SUBMITS CENTRAL DOCUMENT TO CADRES

[Summary from poor reception] From 9 to 11 January, Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Wang Jiangong went to this work liaison point in (?Jixian) County to announce to 600 country, township, and village cadres the spirit of CPC Central Committee Document No 1 of 1986 and to study and discuss plans for country development with them.

"In announcing the spirit of the Central Document No 1 to the cadres of three levels, in connection with the state of rural reforms and production last year, Comrade Wang Jiangong focused on the new situation, tasks in rural work, and the questions of how to further achieve the correct economic position of agriculture, improve the conditions for agricultural production, strengthen the reserve force for increasing agricultural production, continue to carry out rural economic reforms in depth, help to transform poor areas, and strengthen leadership." He pointed out: "Taking agriculture as the foundation in developing the national economy reflects not only ojbective economic laws but also natural laws. We must unswervingly regard this as a long-term strategic principle. We must integrate 'no stability without agriculture' with 'no enrichment without industry.' The two stimulate and support each other; they do not isolate and exclude each other. It is with this viewpoint that we must discuss problems and decide on policies and measures." Industry and sideline occupations must supplement and nourish agriculture. While readjusting the production structure, we must correctly handle the relationship between grain production and diversified undertakings. We must achieve coordinated development in all sectors.

Wang Jiangong said the county should take advantage of its natural resources to enrich and promote a variety of diversified undertakings. The country should be transformed into a green treasure house. For this scheme, the masses should be fully mobilized in order to promulgate ideas and strategies.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ON RURAL RECTIFICATION

[Text] In his speech at the provincial conference on the township-level party rectification, which concluded on 20 January, Sun Weibun, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out that the strict management of party affairs must be focused on the straightening out of party style. In accordance with the guidelines of Document No 57 of the central authorities, leading organs and leading cadres should take the lead in straightening out party style, bravely manage and straighten out unhealthy practices, and bravely face difficulties. The party committees at all levels should place the straightening out of party style and the investigation and handling of cases as the main order of the day and persistently carry out the work for several years. Only by so doing can we successfully carry out the guidelines of the central call for straightening out party style resolutely and consciously.

Rural party rectification is carried out in three stages, roughly. Party rectification should be comprehensively carried out among town and township organs and the enterprises and establishments at the town and township level from the beginning of this year to June. Party rectification should be carried out among grass-roots enterprises and establishments in cities and towns from this coming May or June to the end of the third quarter of this year. The village-level party rectification should be carried out from next winter to the following spring.

The conference pointed out: Rural party rectification should be carried out in accordance with the principle of promoting and ensuring the development of reform and the economy. Most rural cadres in our province are good or fair except for the few with serious problems. We must seek truth from facts in handling cadres with problems and make efforts to maintain their initiative in handling their problems. Such practices as taking advantage of party rectification to criticize and attack somebody or establishing contacts with somebody to interfere with the progress of party rectification must be forbidden.

The conference pointed out: it is of extreme importance that rural party rectification enter a significant phase, which will be the largest in scale and the widest in range in the whole party rectification work. Thus, we must strengthen leadership over rural party rectification. The county CPC Committees should be responsible for the entire party rectification work, while leading cadres are assigned personal responsibility for the township party rectification. The township and town CPC Committees should specifically exercise leadership for the party rectification work with the guidance given by the cities and prefectures in order to ensure smooth progress of rural party rectification work.

Liu Chengguo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made specific arrangements for the party rectification work of the enterprises and establishments run by counties in various townships [words indistinct].

JILIN CPC MEETS ON COMBATING ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK180345 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 14 Jan 86

[Text] On the morning of 14 January, the leading group in charge of dealing blows to serious economic criminals under the provincial CPC Committee held a telephone conference. Wang Xianjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, called on CPC committees at all levels to conscientiously implement the guidelines of the meeting of cadres of the central organs and urged the leading organs at all levels to resolutely and rapidly check and handle major and appalling cases in an effort to deeply carry out the struggle against serious economic crimes and to promote a basic turn for the better in party style.

Comrade Wang Xianjin said: Since the provincial CPC Committee held the meeting on striking heavy blows against serious economic criminals at the end of last October, the CPC Committees at all levels have strengthened leadership over the struggle against economic criminals and taken fairly effective measures for handling cases. Thus, the pace of handling cases has been accelerated, and a group of serious economic criminals have received due punishment. A good situation in combatting serious economic crime has emerged. But we must not overestimate the province's achievements in combatting serious economic crime. At present economic criminal activities are still rampant. Economic criminals have used flexible tricks to engage in various criminal activities. Thus CPC committees at all levels must take effective measures for conscientiously strengthening leadership so as to strike heavy blows against serious economic criminals.

Comrade Wang Xianjin said: The general guiding ideology for the next step in the struggle against serious economic crimes is to conscientiously implement the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates and the meeting of cadres of central organs and to carry out the plan for concentrating time and forces on striking blows against economic crimes made by the provincial CPC Committee. The CPC committees at all levels should pay equal attention to dealing blows to economic criminals and criminal offenders, and list this work as one of the main agenda items in order to regularly discuss and carefully implement it. The leading party and government organs should further mobilize the masses to achieve the work of combatting economic crime. Special attention must be paid to checking and handling major andappalling cases relating to the leading cadres and office workers at or above the county level. We must bravely face difficulties and carry investigation work through to the end. Provincial-level party and government organs should set an example for the whole province and simultaneously educate the cadres and the masses to link the struggle against economic crimes to party rectification, the organizational system of counties and townships, and the dissection of sample cases in order to realize a basic turn for the better in party style, through this struggle, as soon as possible.

Also attending the meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial-level departments and members of leading groups in charge of dealing blows to serious economic criminals under the city, prefectural, autonomous prefectural, county, and district CPC committees.

DAQING OIL FIELD OFFICIALS ON FUTURE TARGETS

[Text] Daqing, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Daqing oil field, China's largest, is set to maintain its present output of 350 million barrels a year for another ten years, according to the oilfield's administration bureau. The oilfield has maintained its output of 350 million barrels since 1976.

"There are difficulties meeting the target," said Li Yugeng, director of the bureau. "But no difficulties are unsurmountable and the past experience will pull us through." He said that the oilfield has developed a whole set of technologies to stabilize oil output even under extremely difficult conditions and the technical force has grown mature. "In addition", he said, "we have found a number of smaller oil pools which will be tapped one after another."

LIAOWANG PROFILES SHENYANG MILITARY COMMANDER

HK160237 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 p 31

[Article by Li Yuezhu: "Liu Jingsong, Newly Appointed Commander of the Shenyang Military Region"]

[Text] I knocked at the door of Room 022 at the military region guesthouse in Shenyang, northeast China. A stout, healthy-looking soldier opened the door, took my hand in his firmly, and said, "Welcome! Welcome!" and enthusiastically led me to the sofa. This was Liu Jingsong, newly appointed commander of the Shenyang Military Region. The living quarters were ordinary, two rooms with a floorspace of 21 square meters. The inner room was furnished with a bed, a desk, and a chair, and the outer room with a pair of easy chairs and a dining table.

In July 1985, Chairman Deng Xiaoping of the CPC Military Commission issued an order appointing Liu Jingsong, Army commander, as commander of the Shenyang Military Region replacing former Commander Li Desheng. He did not bring his family and has lived alone in the guesthouse since he took office.

Looking at his smiling, frank, and honest face, I could not help bursting out with a question I had long entertained: "It is said that you are Marshal Liu Bocheng's son, is this true?"

Laughing, he said: "What nonsense! My 73-year-old father is called Liu Chunmei. He still lives in our old home in Hubei!"

Here our talk began. Commander Liu told me he was born into an ordinary peasant family in Shi Shou County, Hubei, on 5 July 1933. There used to be seven brothers and sisters in the family, but three of them passed away; now he has only two younger brothers and a younger sister, all of whom live in rural areas. Liu Jingsong joined the Army to defend the motherland when he was 18 and was assigned to study at PLA Infantry Academy No 7. The 3 years he spent at the military academy cultivated his quality as a soldier, which is regular and strict. He was a straight A student and received excellent scores in all 34 subjects but one. In the 31 years since his graduation, he has successively been appointed platoon leader, company commander, battalion commander, regimental commander, division commander, and Army commander; for 22 years out of the 31, he has been in the principal spots of those units. The units under his command were mechanized ones, which enabled him to become familiar with and to master the scientific knowledge of all major arms of the Army, such as infantry, artillery, and tank forces. He can drive a car and shoot a gun; he has experience in practical work as well as in office work. In the mid-1960's, he was given the chance to stand the test of war in aiding Vietnam resistance of the United States. On five occasions he rendered meritorious services, and on 21 occasions he was awarded with prizes. On numerous occasions he was priased as a pacesetter for cadres and activists by leading organs at all levels.

Liu Jingsong, 52 this year, is the youngest military region commander today. What characteristics can we find in him? They can be generalized as: unity, diligence, uprightness, and calmness.

According to Liu Jingsong: "Uniting one's colleagues is an indispensible quality of a leader. In order to do a good job in uniting one's colleagues, a very important point is to have the spirit of tolerance, modesty, and self-criticism. The ancient Chinese saying goes, a prime minister's heart should be large enough to pole a boat in; a leader should be just like that." In his military life, he has worked in coordination with scores of comrades-in-arms in organizing leading bodies, and he has never engaged in unprincipled disputes.

Liu Jingsong had only gone through junior middle school before he joined the Army; however he has been very diligent in his studies, working hard to make up for the inadequacies of his schooling. He has never had the chance to work with revolutionaries of the older generation such as Liu Bocheng, but he has seriously studied many of their works.

Looking aroung his living quarters, one finds books in piles everywhere on his bookshelves, desk, and bedside, which is enough to prove what hard work he has done to attain knowledge. There are books on politics, military affairs, economics, geography, history, and meteorology; ranging from "The Art of War" by Sun Zi of ancient China, to treatises on military affairs of various categories of today, from China's Zhu Geliang of China to foreign countries' Napoleon, George Washington, and De Gaulle. He reads widely, adopting the merits of various schools, incorporating diverse things, enriching his own treasure house of knowledge bit by bit. He has jotted down several million words of notes and data in his studies, written more than 10 academic theses on military affairs, and has published 7 or 8 articles in newspapers in the past 2 years.

Paying for it himself, he is now taking a college correspondence course run by a nationwide newspaper, majoring in national economic management. Recently, he took an examination in six subjects and passed them all, and he will graduate in another year. "The commander going to college" became the talk of the town for a time.

His personal experience concerning uprightness is still deeper. he said: "In the final analysis, the question of party style, the style of the Army, and the social atmosphere is a question of the 'style of the officials.' When the style of leading organs and leading cadres is upright, the whole social atmosphere will be brought along." Shortly after he was promoted commander of the Shenyang Military Region, he made an announcement to all cadres at and above the division level on four rules concerning his visits to army units: no accompanying at every level, no wine and banquet giving, no welcoming and seeing off ceremonies, and no gift giving in the form of native produce. One day in November, he was inspecting work in a certain unit. This unit was to be demobilized in the streamlining and reorganization program. Before dinner was served, a leading member of the unit opened a bottle of wine and said to the commander: "We will part soon. This is the first time you have been here as well as our last time to receive you. This bottle of wine is my personal property, and with it we shall express the honor of your company." But the commander answered: "I've set the rule myself, and I have to carry it out. I can't drink the wine!" Later, he returned to his mother school together with an ex-classmate, a commander of a certain combined arms army. Maotai was placed on the dining table. He stopped it and said: "Ex-classmates should all the more bring back old traditions. Let us take a picture in front of the school gate instead!" Thus a picture took the place of a bottle of maotai.

The commander has three children, but none of them has "benefitted" from his position. His wife is still a worker in a small, collectively-owned factory. Some people thought of transferring his wife to a better position, but he said: "Never mind! She is now more than 50. How long can she go on working? Let her retire when her time comes."

All outstanding generals, ancient and modern, Chinese and foreign, have had the quality and style of being composed, cool, and calm. Zhu Geliang was guarding an empty city, and his composed playing of a musical instrument made the enemy troops retreat 40 li. Facing the attack by Hitler's mighty army, Stalin remained composed and retreated again and again, but finally he launched a counterattack and took Berlin. When Mao Zedong led the Red Army in the Long March, he dealt wonderfully with Chiang Kai-shek on the 25,000 li march, and finally arrived in northern Shaanxi victoriously. All this has greatly inspired Liu Jingsong.

Over the past 3 decades and more, he has often taken these as examples, and set strict requirements for himself, tempering himself. He has tried his best to remain cool and composed no matter what happens, not being scared by some sudden occurrence and not being angered by any wrong done to him. He can remain calm and handle affairs with ease in emergencies or when facing some difficult problem.

Toward the end of the summer of 1985, an extraordinary flood took place in the Liao He valley. The situation was very dangerous. He took a helicopter and inspected the conditions of the afflicted areas, studying plans, and commanding more than 20,000 commanders and soldiers in the struggle to fight desperately against the flood and to provide disaster relief. They rendered meritorious service in defending the lives and property of the people.

In conclusion, I asked Commander Liu Jingsong what his experiences were in taking up the important post of commander of the military region? Commander Liu said: "Honestly speaking, I am neither a fool nor a genius. I do not have the so-called 'blue blood' which some people prize most, but I am determined to inherit the excellent tradition and style, to have the enthusiasm to devote to the modernization of our national defense, and to have the courage to overcome all difficulties."

Commander Liu mentioned three points concerning work from now on: First, it is necessary to lead the Army in resolutely implementing the series of strategic decisions of the Central Committee and the Central Military Commission.

Second, it is necessary to further strengthen the great unity between the party, the government, the Army, and the people in the northeast region, and to continue to fulfill the important task of supporting the construction of the state's key projects, so that the Army and the government and the Army and the people may merge into one in a series of important works involving the whole situation; thus their role in the four modernizations may be brought into play.

Third, it is necessary to grasp well the reform of the Army, so that all items of work may make progress with some breakthroughs, and the Army may genuinely become an important force in safeguarding the modernization of the motherland and world peace.

SHENZHEN TO STOP BUYING, CHANGING CARS

HK210229 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 19 Jan 86 p 2

["Special Dispatch From Shenzhen": "Shocking Number of Cars Purchased at Random; Shenzhen Announces Resolute Ratification"]

[Text] At the recently concluded cadres meeting on rectifying party style, which was called by the Shenzhen City authorities, the Shenzhen City CPC Committee and the Shenzhen City People's Government pointed out the need to correct the malpractices concerning the various types of small cars used by leaders at various levels, and announced that in 1986 the city's party and government organs at all levels and its enterprises and institutions will not buy any more cars.

It is reported that over the past few years, the number of nonproductive small cars in Shenzhen has been growing at a shocking rate. The leaders of some departments and units want very much to seek ease and comfort. They do not hesitate to use large amounts of foreign exchange to buy imported luxury cars. At present, the number of imported cars and jeeps owned by the units under the Shenzhen City authorities exceeds 6,600, more than double that allowed by the provincial and city authorities.

According to informed sources, many of these cars are used by unit leaders for transportation between their homes and offices. Despite the fact that the corporations under their leadership are losing money, many leaders buy cars with bank loans or with profits from the selling and reselling of foreign exchange. In one company group owned, almost all of its party committee secretaries, managers, and engineers each have a car. This company spends at least 700,000 to 800,000 yuan each year to pay drivers and to pay for gas and insurance. However, this company is losing money and can only pay its workers with funds allocated by the state. The manager of a certain company successively bought three cars in 8 months, each being more luxurious than the preceding one. Some people angrily said that the leading cadres changed their cars as often as the people change their clothes.

The Shenzhen City People's Government suggested that, although the work concerning the special zone requires the use of cars, the practice of freely buying and changing cars is intolerable, that this indicates the presence of a degenerate style in the party, and that it is necessary to rectify it.

AIR FORCE HOLDS TRAINING, ENGINEERING CONFERENCES

HK210453 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 21 Jan 86 p 6

["Special Dispatch From Beijing": "Air Force Steps Up Training of Recruits"]

[Text] The Chinese Air Force this year plans to reform the present training system, implement a triple training system (aviation school training, conversion training, and combat troop training), and pay close attention to the training of recruits. This news was disclosed at a recent Air Force training work conference.

From 3 to 10 January, the Air Force held a training work conference, a logistics work conference, and an aeronautical engineering work conference in Beijing and Xuzhou respectively.

The three conferences were presided over by Ma Zhanmin, chief-of-staff of the Air Force; Huang Yonggui, director of the Air Force Logistics Department; and Zhu Weibin, director of the Air Force Aeronautical Engineering Department, respectively. Leading cadres of the Air Force including Commander Wang Hai, Political Commissar Zhu Guang, Deputy Commanders Yu Zhenwu and Li Yongtai, Deputy Political Commissar Gao Xingmin, Chief-of-Staff Ma Zhanmin, and head of the Political Department Bi Hao delivered speeches at the conferences.

The training conference discussed training scheduled for 1986 and decided to do a good job of the following: First, reform the current training system, implement a three-level training system (aviation school training, conversion training, and combat troop training), and pay close attention to the training of recruits; second, strengthen the training of the combat forces so that they can become the "first" in fighting battles, as well as the vanguard in conducting training, and promote the training of the entire Air Force; third, enhance officers' training; fourth, improve the quality of training, achieve better results, and exercise effective control over training plans: and fifth, accomplish the tasks vigorously and ensure flight safety.

The logistics conference pointed out that despite reduction of funds, price increases, and arduous tasks in 1985, the Logistics Department ensured the supply of various goods and materials and made successes in all fields of its work, particularly in developing production. Ex-budgeted income totaled over 600 million yuan. The conference decided to do the following well in 1986, under the guiding principle of "doing a good job of our work even with less funds and personnel": First, reform the logistics management system, do a good job in streamlining and reorganization, and accomplish the task of ensuring supply: second, carry out reforms in various professional fields, increase income and decrease expenditures, vigorously develop production, and ensure that the living standard of the Air Force is improved; in the production of nonstaple food, the Logistics Department should first guarantee that each person can get an average of 7 qian of meat, fish, eggs, animal fat, and vegetable oil, 1 liang of bean products, and 1.1 jin of vegetable a day; third, do a good job of building the grass-roots levels and solve practical problems for the Army; and fourth, straighten out party style, strengthen ideological and political work, resist and eliminate unhealthy tendencies, and never take advantage of being in a favored position.

The aeronautical engineering conference pointed out that in light of the large numbers of outdated combat aircraft, accumulated quality problems of new aircraft, and short supply of air materials in 1985, the aeronautical engineering personnel made great efforts to strengthen scientific management over maintenance, carried out deepgoing reforms in the engineering field, and fulfilled the task of combat readiness training. The conference also set the following main tasks for 1986: First, continue to do a good job of reform in the engineering field focused on improving the quality of maintenance and achieving better results; second, strengthen the training of maintenance personnel and improve the quality of the ranks of maintenance cadres; and third, conduct ideological and political work well among the maintencance personnel so as to arouse their initiative, enhance their sense of responsibility, and ensure flight safety.

HUAN XIANG ON WORLD POLITICAL, ECONOMIC SITUATION

HK210953 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 6 Jan 86 pp 1, 4

[Report by correspondent Shi Ling: "Huan Xiang: "An Analysis of the World Political and Economic Environment Facing China's 5-Year Plan" -- first three paragraphs are SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO introduction]

[Text] East-West Relations Will Develop Peacefully

In the past year, the greatest change in the situation in international relations has been the change in East-West relations. The Geneva meeting between Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev held 6 weeks ago signaled that U.S.-Soviet relations had entered a stage of a limited easing of tension, in which both sides were working for new rules of competition in their confrontation. The new situation of confrontation and dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union will promote a rapprochement between Eastern and Western countries and the continued development of a multipolar world.

It Will Be Difficult for the West To Get Out of the Stage of Slow Economic Growth

Western countries are all beset by four major problems: readjustment of economic policies, production structure, and international economic relations; trade protectionism; debt; and the international monetary system. Before the end of this century it will be difficult for the economy of the capitalist world to get out of the stage of slow growth. The average growth rate in the 5 years ahead will be about 3 percent.

Handicapped By Foreign and Domestic Conditions, the Soviet Reforms Have Great Limitations

With Gorbachev the master of the Kremlin, there has been a turn for the better in Moscow's economic reforms and a new program of reform has been mapped out. However, handicapped by various foreign and domestic conditions, the economic reforms have great limitations. In theoretical terms, there have been no significant breakthroughs in this regard. The economic reforms still need a long process of practice and exploration.

Beginning in 1986, China's economy enters the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The 5 years of the plan are crucial for laying a solid foundation for China's economic take-off in the nineties. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, what world political and economic environment will face China's economic construction? On the occasion of ringing out the old year and ringing in the new, I interviewed in Beijing Huan Xiang, a famous specialist in international affairs and director of the International Studies Center under the State Council, and put to him the above question. Part of what the veteran specialist said follows:

Huan Xiang said: In the world political and economic situation in 1985, new developments were quite numerous, and will have a relatively profound impact on the situation in the coming 5 years. It can be said that world politics and economy in the years ahead are confronting a new era.

First, let us discuss the world political situation. The greatest change in world political relations over the last 1 or 2 years was the change in East-West relations; to be more specific, the change in U.S.-Soviet relations. Its main manifestation was the U.S.-Soviet summit held in November 1985. Comment on the summit varied from country to country. As I see it, the U.S.-Soviet summit talks have produced considerable results.

These are manifested in the restoration of U.S.-Soviet dialogue, which had been suspended for 6 years, and the ending of the strained and deadlocked situation in U.S.-Soviet relations, rather than the conclusion of an arms reduction agreement. It is unrealistic, in fact, to conclude any disarmament agreement through summit talks.

Judging from the present situation, the issue of disarmament is not merely a tactical issue but also an economic issue, and one of military strategy. Solving the problem of disarmament will take time. Therefore, we must not regard these U.S.-Soviet summit talks as fruitless just because no disarmament agreement was concluded. On the contrary, we must recognize the decisions made at the summit, which mainly involved three things: that the American and Soviet leaders would visit each other's countries the following year; that dialogue between the two countries on bilateral affairs should be intensified on a regular basis; and that U.S.-Soviet relations should be restored to the state they were in prior to their becoming strained, political and cultural exchanges should be strengthened, close economic and trade ties should be expanded, and economic sanctions imposed on each other should be lifted. All this indicates that U.S.-Soviet relations have relaxed to a certain extent. The relaxation is not merely in atmosphere, but has substantial content in which both the United States and the Soviet Union have begun to seek new rules for mutual competition through dialogue.

In the past, the competition between the United States and the Soviet Union was confined to rules set by the Yalta Agreement and two other agreements on nuclear weapons, which were violated 6 years ago. At present the two countries are working for a new set of rules for competition. Therefore, it can be said that U.S.-Soviet relations are now in a stage of seeking new competition rules. Present U.S.-Soviet relations can be summed up in two sentences: The previous, exclusively confrontational pattern, has changed to one of both confrontation and dialogue, with the stress on confrontation. And, as confrontation holds a dominant position, new rules concerning their confrontation should be worked out and both sides should abide by the new rules if they reach a confrontation. This indicates that U.S.-Soviet relations have entered a new stage of a limited easing of tension. The most important question at this stage is whether or not the United States and the Soviet Union can work out new competition rules calling for some compromise from both sides. By my estimate, to do so will take 2 or 3 years or longer.

The relationship of confrontation and dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union, formed at the summit, will promote the development of world multipolarization. The confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union, which means neither side is likely to discard the general objective of strategic contention, determines that neither side will make any major compromises on the question of strategic contention or maintain a strategic balance by weakening their own superiority; and also determines that both sides will have to seek support from their allies, because the United States cannot afford by itself to undertake such a big program as star wars and it will have to mobilize its allies to participate in it. This will make it impossible for the United States to maintain a world situation characterized by bipolar rule. On the other hand, the United States and the Soviet Union are trying to seek an easing of tension through dialogue. This will certainly encourage Eastern and Western countries to come closer to one another and make it impossible for the United States and the Soviet Union to preserve their bipolar rule. For this reason, I hold that in the years ahead there will be no "regression" to a bipolar world and, instead, a multipolar world will continue to develop.

Another achievement of the U.S.-Soviet summit, that is, that both sides expressed their willingness to seek new rules for preventing a tense situation from developing, will have some influence in alleviating and solving acute regional problems in the world. However, it will be very difficult to really find such limiting rules.

Judging from the developments mentioned above, although there are still a lot of problems in the world political situation, U.S. - Soviet relations and East-West relations in the coming 5 years will develop peacefully and there are unlikely to be any serious, tense situation or major wars. This will provide a sound world political environment for the construction of China and other countries.

Next, let us discuss the world economic situation. I shall divide the world into two major parts, the East and the West, and would like to discuss here mainly the United States and the Soviet Union.

The Western Economy Will Grow at a Slow Rate in the Coming 5 Years

How will the economy of the Western capitalist world actually develop? In my opinion generally speaking, the whole capitalist world has not, so far, moved out of the recession stage of a long economic cycle. The economy of the capitalist world began entering the stage of long-cycle development in the middle of the fifties. In the 2 decades from then until 1973, the economy of the whole capitalist world moved ahead fairly rapidly, with the outbreak of an economic crisis in 1973, the capitalist world's economy began to enter the stage of long-cycle recession. That situation has continued to this day. By my estimate, it will be difficult for the economy of the capitalist world to leave this stage before the turn of the century. In the 5 years ahead, the economy of the capitalist world will develop at a slow rate, averaging about 3 percent. The economic growth rates of most capitalist countries will be 2 or 3 percent. The economies of Japan and West Germany will expand at a rate of no more that 4 to 5 percent at best. If the United States achieves an economic growth rate of 3 or 4 percent, it will be considered quite good.

The economic situation of the United States is not fine. Two years ago the United States pursued an economic policy of financial relaxation and tightened money supply. On the one hand, it stimulated production by expanding demand and, on the other, it absorbed foreign investment by tightening financial credit, which in turn forced the exchange rate of the U.S. dollar and interest rates up to develop production. Such a practice was feasible because the United States had fairly solid economic, political, and military strength, enjoyed relative political stability, and thus won the trust of Western countries in its dollar. Consequently, large amounts of Western capital flowed into the United States, which benefited from the capital flow. However, high interest rates and the high exchange rate of a strong dollar have significantly affected the export of American goods and facilitated the import of foreign goods, causing hugh trade deficits with other countries and hampering the healthy development of the U.S. economy. This state of affairs cannot be changed overnight. For a period of time in the future, the problem of the U.S. dollar will remain the most important issue in the U.S. economy.

Taken as a whole, the Western economy is confronted with four main problems. The first is economic readjustment, of which readjustment of policies comes first. This is particularly the case with the United States. It should make policy readjustments on its high interest rates and high dollar exchange rate. How should such policy readjustments be made? First, all Western countries favor the use of the "soft landing" method, that is, reducing the rate of exchange between the U.S. dollar and Western countries' currencies by 20 percent over about 5 years. This method is definitely no solution to the problem of a high dollar exchange rate. It is very difficult to reduce the U.S. dollar exchange rate by 20 percent. Second, they favor readjustment of this production structure, which is aimed at restricting the development of traditional industries and developing new, rising industries.

Third, they favor readjustment of international economic relations. Since existing international economic relations have changed, and some new developments have emerged, they urgently need to be readjusted.

The second problem is trade protectionism. Trade protectionism will become more and more serious in the years ahead. Especially in the United States, because of the huge U.S. trade deficits with other countries, trade protectionist feeling will run higher. Trade protectionism is in contradiction to the international economic order established after World War II. This problem is hard to solve.

The "Baker" Package, an Utterly Inadequate Measure

The third problem is that of debt. The problem of debt involves both developing and developed countries. It has made the capitalist world realize the actual and potential dangers in regard to the problem. Over the last few years, measures taken to solve the problem of debt have failed to produce tangible results. The United States has now put forth the "Baker" package. However, being an utterly inadequate measure, the package will solve no problems. A fundamental solution of the debt problem is not very likely for quite some time in the future.

The fourth problem is the international monetary system. As an international currency, the U.S. dollar fluctuates in value. There is a potential for crises of currency fluctuations in international money markets. At present, the value of the U.S. dollar is high, but how long can it last? The value of the U.S. dollar will fall sooner or later. To avoid having the international money markets hit by drastic currency fluctuations, a currency with a stable exchange rate is needed. This is the long-term plan. However, there has been no good solution so far.

As far as Soviet economic reforms are concerned, since Gorbachev took office, there has been a new turn for the better.

Beset with difficulties at home and abroad, the Soviet Union has arrived at a new understanding that economic reform is the only effective way of rejuvenating the domestic economy, enhancing its economic strength, and contending with the United States for world hegemony. At present, the Soviet Union is making preparations for its economic reform, including the formulation of a new party program, with economic reform as its main content.

The Soviet Reforms Have Relatively Great Limitations

What are the prospects for Soviet economic reforms? As I see it, that is hard to say at present, because in terms of the present situation, the Soviet economic reforms have great limitations. First, the reforms are handicapped by domestic conditions. Since Gorbachev took office, there have been rapid personnel changes, but compared with his expectations regarding personnel reform, there is still a long way to go. Second, the reforms are handicapped by international conditions. Reform requires money, but the Soviet Union cannot ignore the "Strategic Defense Initiative" (called SDI for short) put forth by the United States. Moreover, to launch "its own Strategic Defense Initiative" also requires large amounts of funds. This will inevitably cause a strain on the funds available for reform. Third, in terms of theory, there have been no significant breakthroughs in reform. In the course of reform, the centralized planning management system is still adhered to and the economic factors of the market are excluded. This has hampered progress.

Although the Soviet Union has worked out a new reform program, this program is complex and faced with difficulties, so its economic reforms will still need a long process of practice and exploration. In the coming 5 years, Soviet economic reforms will not score achievements as great as expected. We must keep this point in mind.

Finally, Huan Xiang said: At present, all countries in the world are readjusting their economies. Although they differ in their choice of road, and in the methods they use, they have something in common; that is, laying stress on intensive economic development and on scientific and technological development. In the years ahead, scientific and technological development will become the most important factor deciding economic development. The role of science and technology has grown to the extent that they can promote economic and political changes in a country. In the next 5 years, every country in the world will gradually attach primary importance to scientific and technological development and take the road of intensive economic development. This is the economic and political trend of development of the countries of the present-day world, a trend that indicates a new orientation.

SRV, USSR AGREE TO INCREASE BILATERAL TRADE

[Text] Hanoi, January 12 (XINHUA) -- Vietnam and the Soviet Union agreed last Friday to boost bilateral trade in a bid to help Vietnam develop energy production.

Newspapers reported today that the Vietnamese vice chairman of the Council of Ministers Vo Van Kiet and his Soviet counterpart Nikolay Talyzin signed a five-year agreement on January 10 after their recent meeting in Hanoi. The 1986-90 agreement on bilateral economic cooperation, according to a communique published by the local press, predicts that trade between the two countries will be 1.7 times what it is today. The Soviet Union will help Vietnam develop production of petroleum, coal and electricity, while Vietnam, in turn, will provide the Soviet Union with more agricultural and light industrial products, including vegetables, fruit, tea, coffee and rubber, the communique said.

Diplomatic sources here believe that Moscow has agreed to double its aid to Hanoi with an offer of another 8 billion rubles in the next five years to maintain Vietnam's fragile economy crippled by the country's swelling defense budget. Meanwhile, Vietnam's party leader Le Duan has clearly stressed his country's desire for Soviet help. Vietnam needs Soviet assistance, said the general secretary yesterday while receiving visiting economy planning officials from the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon).

WRITERS INTERVIEWED BY OVERSEAS CHINESE DAILY

[Text] Washington, 19 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- A report from New York said that Chinese writers including Wang Meng, Lu Wenfu, Huang Qingyun, Luo Luo, and Jin Jianfan, who were attending the 48th International Writers' Conference, stated their view on matters of concern to people abroad at a symposium sponsored by the U.S. paper, the OVERSEAS CHINESE DAILY on 18 January.

Question: The foreign press says that the Chinese authorities concerned criticize or forbid some literature and art works and dramas. Is that true?

Lu Wenfu: Some people always take the old views of before the "Cultural Revolution" to look at the new changes in China's literature and art circles, and they interpret some different opinions on literature and art works as "criticism." There is a "time difference" in the minds of these people. It is already daytime in China, but some people abroad think that it is still night time. It will not do to see things as static.

Once some foreign news agencies reported that Zhang Xianliang's novel "The Other Half of Man Is Woman" was criticized in China. The fact is that BEIJING RIBAO just carried a 400-word reader's letter airing different views on that novel. At that time, WENYI BAO carried two articles in the same issue with different opinions. This was a normal discussion with different views in the artistic sphere, having nothing to do with politics.

Wang Meng: Feng Jicai and Zhang Xianliang are bosom friends. They are CPPCC members, but Feng Jicai also has different views on this novel. Can we say that Feng Jicai criticized Zhang Xianliang?

Question: Some people say that the Chinese Government examines the publication of every new book. Is this true?

Wang Meng: If the Chinese Government were to examine all works before their publication, it would be very difficult to solve the technical problem, let alone other problems. Now some 1,000 short stories, 100 medium-length novels, and 10 novels are published every month. If the Chinese Government were to examine them, it would probably become a readers' club. How could it find time for economic construction and diplomatic activities?

Question: Publication departments in the country have stopped publishing martial arts fiction this year. Why have they done this?

Luo Luo: Like other literature and art works, martial arts fiction may be published and circulated in China. In recent years, however, martial arts fiction ran rampant. This has not only brought about a shortage of paper and affected the printing of primary and middle school textbooks, but also caused the large-scale stockpiling of other works in Xinhua bookstores. So it is necessary to stop the publication of martial arts fiction for a time.

Wang Meng: In recent years, some problems have really emerged in the country's publication circles. Some publication departments pay attention only to the sales of works to the neglect of their contents. Others only look at the title of a work and contend for printing and publishing at the sight of, for example, the "Blood of an Affectionate Couple." Once a bookstore made a funny mistake. Originally, the bookstore was not interested in the "Collection of Ai Qing's Poems." Later it placed a large order for it as it mistook it for the "Collection of Love Poems."

As a matter of fact, most martial arts fiction does not have a high artistic value. I also read them, but just to while away the time. I believe that martial arts fiction will go out of vogue with the improvement of the nation's cultural level and aesthetic judgment.

Question: Hu Feng died nearly 6 months ago. Why is it that his memorial meeting was just recently held?

Luo Luo, who was once branded as a "Hu Feng element:" After Hu Feng's death, a ceremony was held to pay last respects to his remains, in which Hu Feng's relatives and friends took part. His memorial meeting was just recently held because his family did not agree with the wording of the memorial speech. Hu Feng was referred to as an outstanding literature and art critic in the original wording. Then it was changed to a "revolutionary fighter in China's modern literature and art," giving prominence to the word "revolutionary." This is an appropriate assessment. Now Hu Feng's memoirs and other works are being published and three volumes of his literature and art critiques have been published. Hu Feng's position in China's modern literature has been published. Hu Feng's position in China's modern literature has been affirmed.

Question: We are told that the mainland forbids the description of "sex."

Wang Meng: As for describing "sex," this is not a problem of whether the government forbids it, but a problem involving Chinese traditional concepts. Some writers endure great pressure when writing articles on "sex." The pressure does not come from Deng Xiaoping or Hu Yaobang, but from society and public opinion. I know China and writers well. The development of Chinese literature will, of course, not be smooth sailing.

USSR WARNED TO KEEP HANDS OFF PDRY WAR

[Text] Washington, January 24 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government, through its touch with the Soviet Union on the situation in Democratic Yemen, has warned the latter not to intervene in the civil war there, the State Department said today. Bernard Kalb, State Department spokesman, said that the United States has been in touch with the Soviet Union over the matter, and that in the U.S. view, there should be no military intervention in the country.

U.S. officials claimed that reports from Democratic Yemen had indicated that the Soviets were getting involved in the war there. Kalb also said that the United States was interested in the outcome of the fighting because of the location of the country. Democratic Yemen, located on the southern tip of the Arabian Peninsula at the mouth of the Red Sea, has no diplomatic relations with the United States. Reports from Moscow said today that the Soviet Union told foreign embassies there that it would not intervene in the fighting in Democratic Yemen.

'WAR PLANES' TO OPERATE OFF LIBYAN COAST

[Text] Washington, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Fighter planes from the U.S. Sixth Fleet will conduct flight operations off the Libyan coast between January 24 and 31, according to local press reports today. Reports cited Pentagon officials has saying the flight operations, conducted by warplanes from the U.S. carriers Coral Sea and Saratoga in international airspace over the Mediterranean Sea, "are sending Libya a strong message" that the United States will act against terrorism and "to test Libyan reaction."

Whether the aircraft carriers enter the Gulf of Sidra, which Libya claims as its terroritorial waters, depends on Libya's reaction to the U.S. presence, the officials said.

In August 1981, two U.S. fighters shot down two Soviet-made Libyan warplanes over the Gulf of Sidra. The incident led to the severing of diplomatic relations between the two countries. Tensions off the Libyan coast have increased since the two U.S. aircraft carriers entered the central Mediterranean earlier this month under the pretext that Libya was involved in the terrorist attacks on Rome and Vienna airports on December 27 last year. The United States has since threatened several times that it has not ruled out military action against Libya. "The carrier task forces were prepared for any confrontation with Libyan forces in the event Libyan warplanes challenge American aircraft over the Mediterranean or the Gulf of Sidra." U.S. officials said today.

CRUISE MISSILE TESTS CONDUCTED OVER CANADA

[Text] Ottawa, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The United States today conducted the first of four cruise missile tests scheduled this winter over northwestern Canada. Today's test of the unarmed missile was the fifth test over Canada under a five-year agreement signed in 1983 between Canada and the United States allowing up to six tests a year. The U.S. military chose northern Canada for the tests because it resembles the terrain of Siberia of the Soviet Union.

The missiles, launched from a B-52 bomber over the Beaufort Sea at 7:20 this morning, flew up the Mackenzie River, over the northeast corner of British Columbia, across northern Alberta and landed at an air weapons' test range north of Cold Lake, Alberta, four hours later. Canadian F-18 fighters were used to intercept the cruise missile. About 12 members from the Greenpeace organization demonstrated near the test range and four were arrested on a charge of blocking traffic. The test was delayed by one day due to mechanical problems in the carrier aircraft.

LI PENG MEETS CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Vice Premier Li Peng met a U.S. congressional delegation here this afternoon. The delegation is led by Robert Roe, chairman of the Water Resources Sub-committee under the Public Works and Transportation Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The visitors arrived here January 21 as guests of the Chinese people's Institute of Foreign Affairs.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SRV ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

[Article by Kang Hengzhen: "The War of Aggression Aggravates the Vicious Cycle in the Vietnamese Economy"]

[Text] Vietnam has occupied Cambodia for 7 years. People cannot help asking: Why was Vietnam, a small country whose economic strength has been seriously weakened by 20-odd years of war, wantonly pursued militarism and persisted in carrying out aggression and expansion? Does it really have a powerful economic pillar?

At the end of the war of resistance against the United States, the Vietnamese economy was weak. With the cities, industry, transportation, and agriculture devastated; factories operating below capacity; traffic suspended; and farmland lying waste, the people lived in poverty. They urgently needed rest to build up strength. However, the Vietnamese authorities practiced hegemonism in Southeast Asia. They unscrupulously dispatched 200,000 soldiers to invade and occupy Cambodia and pursued a war-time economic policy, thus tying the Vietnamese people to the war chariot and constantly aggravating the national economy. Heavy foreign debt, inflation, and a rampant black market have exacerbated the hardship of the people. Even the CPV Central Committee has had to concede that the current economic situation is very difficult and that the balance has been lost in many fields, particularly grain, energy, materials, finance, and currency.

There is an insoluble contradiction in the Vietnamese war of aggression between the rapidly expanding war and the deteriorating national economy. Vietnam's various armed forces are 2 million strong, including an Army of more than 1 million, and account for one-fifteenth of the population. This is rare in the contemporary world. Moreover, it has more than 200,000 soldiers fighting in Cambodia. All this has incurred huge military expenditures and seriously weakened Vietnam's material foundation. To meet the growing need for military consumer goods, the Vietnamese authorities have wantonly embezzled part of the means of subsistance that should have been issued to the residents. This has resulted in a serious shortage of goods and soaring prices. Meanwhile, they have desperately reduced social production accumulation funds and increased national defense outlay. Consequently, expanded production can not be regularly conducted in numerous localities and units. They have also conscripted into the Army outstanding technicians and laborers and even forced women and 16- or 17-year-old youths, who have not finished middle school education, to serve as cannon fodder, thus directly destroying the human resources for developing the national economy. The deteriorating economic situation has also resulted in the withdrawal of foreign businessmen and capital from Vietnam. Some justice-upholding nations have suspended trade contacts with, and economic and technological aid to, Vietnam.

Vietnam is rich in natural resources, such as coal, iron, chromium, zinc, lead, copper, tungsten, gold, and silver. The Hong Gai coalfield is also one of the biggest coalfields in Southeast Asia. However, what with capital shortage and backward technology, for a long time Vietnam has failed to develop and use its mineral resources. The use ratio of equipment in state enterprises is only 50 percent and the workers work less than 5 hours a day. In order to extricate themselves from this difficult situation, the Vietnamese authorities have increasingly leaned toward the Soviet Union and served as a pawn for Soviet hegemonism in Southeast Asia. The Soviet Union has also made use of Vietnam to further infiltrate Indochina. Ever since Vietnam invaded Cambodia, the Soviet Union has considerably increased its aid to Vietnam. Its annual economic and military aid total $1 billion each and sometimes its military aid comes to $1.3 billion. However, this support has failed to alter Vietnam's economic predicament caused by its war of aggression.

Vietnam has never had a department responsibile for the study of advanced military science and the design and manufacture of advanced weapons. The foundation of its military industry is fairly weak and its production capacity is very low. It is still unable to manufacture aircraft, tanks, heavy caliber guns, and other heavy weapons. It can only produce some light weapons and ammunition. However, their quality is poor and the output is small. The contradiction between the underdeveloped military industry and the growing military consumption by the Vietnamese troops is another insoluble one in the Vietnamese war of aggression. The Vietnamese Army chiefly relies on the Soviet Union to upgrade and replenish its weapons and equipment. The huge debts and foreign exchange payments have imposed a heavy burden on the national economy, which is on the brink of collapse, and aggravated the vicious cycle of the national economy.

In its war of aggression, Vietnam is also confronted with the contradiction between the growing grain consumption and the increasingly shrinking agriculture. The long-drawn-out war waged on a large scale has drastically increased grain consumption. Although the Red River Delta in the north and the Mekong Delta in the south are provided with favorable natural conditions, the conscription of able-bodied agricultural laborers, the shortage of agricultural capital, backward technology, and poor-quality machinery and equipment make it difficult to develop production. The greatest problem faced by Vietnam in its war of aggression is food. The grain shortage has also seriously affected the daily life of the armed forces. A Vietnamese Army classified document disclosed: "The main problem in Vietnam's current national defense is that the economic difficulties of the state, particularly the shortage of grain, have affected the daily life of the troops. Many cadres and soldiers are not contented with performing military service and there is a serious desertion phenomenon. A Vietnamese prisoner admitted: "I have never had enough to eat since I joined the Army. Now that I have been taken prisoner, I can eat my fill. This is really worth it."

By occupying Cambodia for a long time and constantly intruding into neighboring states, the Vietnamese authorities have pushed their economy into an inextricable position. With all the military aid, this is nothing short of "drinking posion to quench one's thirst."

HANOI'S DRY SEASON OFFENSIVE IN CAMBODIA DELAYED

[Text] Bangkok, January 23 (XINHUA) -- A rift between Vietnamese and Heng Samrin troops has delayed Hanoi's dry-season offensive against Kampuchean resistance forces this year, spokesman for the Thai Armed Forces Supreme Command Lt-General Wichit Bunyawat told the press today. A bitter dispute erupted recently between Heng Samrin in troops in Ko Kong and Vietnam's Division 339, the spokesman said. He added that the angry Heng Samrin soldiers later seized Vietnamese tanks and this prompted Hanoi to remove all Heng Samrin forces guarding Phnom Penh and replace them with 13,000 Vietnamese troops.

Vietnam's dry-season offensive normally begins in November. The spokesman also mentioned other factors hampering the offensive such as the low morale of Vietnamese and Heng Samrin forces and the poor economic conditions in Vietnam.

DK RADIO APPEALS TO SOVIETS ON WAR IN CAMBODIA

[Text] Beijing, January 16 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea today appeals to the Soviet people to help halt the Soviet backing of Vietnam in its war in Kampuchea and bring about an early solution to the Kampuchea problem.

The call was made in an open letter sent on January 14 in the name of the Kampuchean people to the Soviet people. The letter hopes the Soviet Union will stop any support, especially military assistance, to Vietnam so that the Kampuchean people can no longer suffer from the war. The letter says the people of the two countries have no dispute whatsoever and the Soviet people, as the people in the rest of the world, suffered from an aggressive war. Therefore, it adds, the Kampuchean people hope that the Soviet Union can stop its military supplies to Vietnam, which have not only brought calamities to the Kampuchean and Vietnamese people but put a heavy load on the back of the Soviet people and created a growing tension in Southeast Asia as well.

If the Soviet Union stops its supplies for Vietnam's war of aggression in Kampuchea, the letter says, the Kampuchea problem can be resolved immediately and the Kampuchean people can live in peace again and concentrate their energies on the rebuilding of their country. The letter says in conclusion that if the Soviet Government stops backing Vietnam, the Kampuchean people will request the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government to set up friendly relations with the Soviet Union in the diplomatic, economic, trade, cultural, scientific and technological fields and the Kampuchean people will have friendly contacts with the Soviet people in various forms.

CAMBODIA'S SIHANOUK ENDS GUANGZHOU VISIT

OW221844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1833 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] Guangzhou, January 22 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, ended his visit to Guangzhou and Shenzhen, and left by water for Zhuhai on the third leg of his tour of south China's Guangdong Province. Sihanouk arrived here from Beijing January 15. During his stay in Guangzhou and Shenzhen, the president toured a film studio and joint venture, and the Shekou industrial zone. At the Huanan Botanical Garden, Sihanouk planted a tree imported from Southeast Asia. He described the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone as an illustration of the success of China's open policy.

MORE RICE, CORN TO BE IMPORTED FROM THAILAND

[Text] Bangkok, January 23 (XINHUA) -- China and Thailand signed a trade agreement here this evening under which China will import an additional 80,000 tons of rice and 150,000 tons of maize from Thailand in 1986. Under an earlier agreement between the two countries, China was to import 120,000 tons of rice from Thailand this year. The new agreement was concluded to help solve Thailand's present difficulties in rice export.

The additional rice import by China demonstrated the intimate friendship between the peoples of the two countries, said Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Affairs Minister Sitthi Sawetsila while attending the signing ceremony. Cao Wantong, general director of the China National Cereal and Oil Export and Import Company, and Thai Deputy Commerce Minister Phairot Chaiyaphon signed the agreement.

PHILIPPINES' AQUINO OUTLINES SOCIAL PLATFORM

[Text] Manila, January 16 (XINHUA) -- Opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino today said that if elected president of the Philippines she would work for efficient utilization and equitable sharing of the ownership and benefits of land and try to solve the insurgency problem through dialogues.

Mrs. Aquino made the pledge while outlining a social policy for the country in Davao City, southern Mindanao in the course of her campaign in the country's second biggest island.

She reiterated today her land policy that land must first of all be used for food production to sustain the basic needs of the people. Referring to internal conflicts, she reaffirmed that if elected president, she would "immediately declare a cease-fire with the rebels and release political prisoners and thereafter enter into dialogue with the insurgents." She promised to work for the repeal of repressive laws and for the dismantling of economic structures which keep workers in a state of quasi-slavery. Workers comprise 30 percent of the country's population.

This is the opposition presidential aspirant's second major policy speech. The first one was made on January 6 when she spoke to a large group of businessmen and professionals in Metro Manila on her national economic recovery program.

Outlines Third Policy Program

[Text] Manila, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Presidential aspirant Corazon Aquino emerged today with her third policy program oriented to dismantle the 20-year-old Marcos administration. Speaking before the joint Rotary Clubs of Metro-Manila at the Manila Hotel, Mrs. Aquino said her program will gear the country toward "genuine democracy" through what she called simple and straightforward solutions -- to put an end to power concentration in one man, to guard against abuse and misuse of power and to punish misdeeds.

This is Mrs. Aquino's third policy program since her January 6 economic plan and January 16 social platform. The 52-year-old presidential candidate, widow of the late opposition leader Benigno Aquino who was murdered in August 1983 upon his arrival from the U.S., is running against President Ferdinand Marcos in the forthcoming presidential election scheduled for February 7.

Mrs. Aquino refuted Marcos' accusation that she is wavering on Amendment No. 6 of the constitution which authorizes the president to issue any decree he deems necessary. The bill must be eliminated, she said, adding however, that owing to the fact that the National Assembly will still be dominated by the ruling New Society Movement under any new leadership, she will be forced to use it to protect the people. The power will be used "only as a last resort and only to destroy itself," Mrs. Aquino asserted.

On national reconciliation and insurgency, Corazon said she will ask for a six-month ceasefire to redress the "legitimate grievances" of those who have resorted to armed struggle. General amnesty will be granted to all political detainees and "offenders who forswear the use of violence against the state," she added. The opposition candidate also promised that the new leadership, if elected, will try its best to eliminate graft and corruption. She said the issue of hidden wealth will not be allowed to die and it will be vigorously pursued by an investigating commission. Mrs. Aquino also reaffirmed that she would immediately set in motion process of retiring all over-staying generals upon her assumption of office.

BEIJING RADIO ON AFGHANISTAN PROBLEM, CONCLUSION

["International Current Events" program; third and last of series on Afghanistan: "How To Fairly and Rationally Solve the Afghan Issue?"]

[Text] The Afghan issue is a matter of concern for the whole world. The invasion and occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union not only trampled underfoot the independence and sovereignty of this nation and its status as a nonaligned country, and brought about unprecedented misfortune to the Afghan people, but also poses a serious threat to its neighbors, Pakistan, Iran, and China. Moreover, the Soviet move also poses a serious threat to peace in the South Asian region and in Asia as a whole. Therefore, people all over the world hope that the Afghan issue will be solved as soon as possible.

The crux of the Afghan issue is crystal clear: the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union. The key to solving the Afghan issue is the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Soviet troops from Afghanistan, as demanded in various resolutions of the UN General Assembly. Six years have passed since the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, but it has failed to subjugate the Afghan people. On the contrary, it has been bogged down in an inextricable mire. Internationally, it has become unpopular and isolated. The occupation of Afghanistan has become a heavy burden for the Soviet Union. An Afghan public figure commented that Afghanistan is like a bone stuck in the throat of the Soviet Union. While it cannot swallow the bone, it also refuses to spit it out, and the experience is, of course, hard to bear.

Under the circumstances, the best honorable way out for the Soviet Union is to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. There is no other way.

To extricate itself from the mire, the Soviet Union, while stepping up the encirclement and suppression of the Afghan guerrillas, has indicated willingness to seek a political solution to the Afghan issue. The so-called political solution put forward by the Soviet Union does not mean its voluntary, immediate withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. What it proposed is known as "guarantees before troop withdrawal." The Soviet Union said that it will withdraw from Afghanistan only after the international community has guaranteed an end to interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by foreign forces.

The day before yesterday, in our talk on why the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, we said that, to provide a pretext for its invasion, the Soviet Union fabricated the groundless charge that foreign forces were interfering in Afghanistan's internal affairs. By proposing "guarantees before troop withdrawal," the Soviet Union is clearly persisting in this groundless allegation. This shows that it has not the least sincerity in seeking a political solution to the Afghan issue. Since the Soviet Union put forward its proposal for a political solution, the world has been focusing attention on this issue and is watching every movement the Soviet Union makes. In the indirect talks between Pakistan and the Karmal regime of Afghanistan, the main topic discussed was how to politically solve the issue. But the Soviet Union directed the regime's representatives to set up obstacles to the solution of this problem. This shows the real intentions of the Soviet Union.

Presided over by Cordovez, personal representative of the UN secretary general, six rounds of indirect talks have been held in Geneva between Pakistan and the Karmal regime. "Indirect talks" means that representatives of both sides sat in separate conference rooms and spoke through Cordovez.

Pakistan is Afghanistan's eastern neighbor. Since the Soviet Union invaded Afganistan, Pakistan has been subjected to serious threats, and its airspace and border areas have been frequently violated and attacked. Meanwhile, Pakistan has, out of humanitarian considerations, accepted three to four million Afghan refugees who fled their homeland, and this has become a heavy financial burden. It is natural for Pakistan to be concerned about a political solution to the Afghan issue. Adhering to its principled stand from beginning to end, the Pakistan side has demanded that the Afghan issue be solved in the spirit of the relevant UN resolutions and has firmly rejected direct talks with the Karmal regime. This is because, if Pakistan agreed to hold direct talks with the regime, it would mean that it actually recognizes the legitimacy of this regime and, therefore, recognizes the legitimacy of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

However, the representatives of the Karmal regime, obeying orders from the Soviet Union, resorted to tricks to set up obstacles to the crucial question of Soviet withdrawal. The two sides held the first two rounds of indirect talks in June 1982 and 1983. During the period from June 1982 to June 1983, the Soviet official media issued statements or published articles reiterating the proposal demanding a guarantee before troop withdrawal. Adhering to this stance, the representatives of the Karmal regime also noted that the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan depended on whether an end to foreign interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs could be effectively guaranteed. This was, of course rejected by the Pakistan side.

Since then, the Soviet Union has adopted a tougher attitude. It has gone so far as to say that the question of troop withdrawal is a matter concerning the Soviet Union and Afghanistan and that no other country will be permitted to discuss the matter. During the third round of indirect talks held in August 1984, the representatives of the Karmal regime still refused to discuss the question of Soviet troop withdrawal.

The two sides held the fourth, fifth, and sixth rounds of indirect talks in 1985. During the talks, the Soviet Union changed its tough attitude on the question of troop withdrawal. It directed the representatives of the Karmal regime to accept negotiations on the question of troop withdrawal, but the Karmal side set up new obstacles by calling for face-to-face talks with the Pakistan side to discuss the question of Soviet troop withdrawal, an attempt to make Pakistan recognize the Karmal regime. This was, of course, again rejected by the Pakistani side.

It can be concluded from the six rounds of indirect talks that, although its plight in Afghanistan is worsening, the Soviet Union has no plans to withdraw its troops. Since the recent U.S.-USSR summit, there have been reports that the Soviet Union has indicated its willingness to find a political solution to the Afghan issue. Is this true? World public opinion has once again pointed out that the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan is the key to solving the Afghan issue. If the Soviet Union sincerely wishes to find a political solution, it should work out a timetable for troop withdrawal at an early date.

China and the majority of countries of the world have invariably advocated a political solution. To politically solve the Afghan issue, the relevant UN resolutions must be thoroughly implemented; Soviet troops must be unconditionally withdrawn from Afghanistan so as to restore to Afghanistan its independence, sovereignty, and its status as a nonaligned nation and to allow the Afghan people to solve their own problems without foreign interference; and the honorable and safe return of Afghan refugees to their homeland must be ensured. This is the only fair and rational way to solve the Afghan issue.

XINHUA VIEWS EFFORTS IN PAKISTAN-INDIA RELATIONS

["Round-up: Improving Pak-Indian Relations" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Islamabad, January 20 (XINHUA) -- The frequent official contacts between Pakistan and India in recent two weeks have given a new momentum to the normalization of relations between the two countries and have absorbed close public attention. The Pak-Indian relations have had a chequered history of both progresses and setbacks because of deep-rooted mistrust between the two South Asian neighbors.

Addressing a news conference in Islamabad today, visiting Indian Foreign Secretary Bhandari noted that the official discussions between India and Pakistan have reached "a higher level" and entered "a new phase". "Forward steps" are being taken towards their common objective to lay "a sound, stable and durable basis for the normalization of relations." The Indian foreign secretary and his Pakistan counterpart Niaz Naik during their discussions reiterated the resolve of both governments to take confidence-building measures with a view to establishing between them tension-free and good-neighborly ties. They agreed on the need of concluding a comprehensive treaty based on Pakistan's proposal for a no-war pact drafted in September 1981 and India's offer of a peace, friendship and cooperation treaty in March 1982. They will make new formulation for achieving a merged draft to be forwarded to both governments. The development may be regarded as an encouraging effort, though short of a substantial progress, in hammering out an agreed treaty.

There is apparently no difficulty for the foreign secretaries to give formal shape to an accord of not attacking each other's nuclear facilities, as agreed upon by Pakistan President Ziaul Haq and Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in New Delhi on December 17, last year. Bhandari's Pakistan visit is preceded by the trips of Indian Finance Minister Viswanath Pratap Singh and Defense Secretary S. K. Bhatnagar here starting on January 8. These major initiatives have been taken as confidence-building measures to help remove long-standing mistrust and misunderstanding between the two countries in pursuance of the agreement during the Zia-Rajiv meeting last December. Indian Finance Minister V. P. Singh's visit here, the first in 25 years, have sought to expand bilateral trade and economic cooperation. Pakistan Finance Minister Mahbubul Haq agreed to allow the private sector to import 42 items of Indian goods which were importable only by the government-run trading corporation of Pakistan in the past. Allaying public concern arising therefrom, Mahbubul Haq assured that national interests shall be safeguarded.

The talks on Siachin Glacier dispute, previously held at local commanders' level, have been upgraded to the defence secretary level. All these contacts have yielded positive results although some problems, including political and economic ones, remain unsolved. The two countries have carried on their dialogues and consultations in an all-round manner, which as Bhandari has put it, would prepare the ground work for and culminate in Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's visit to Pakistan.

Now that a new round of successive Pak-Indian official contacts have been conducted and this would be followed by their joint commission's sub-commission meeting early next month and a third session of the ministerial meeting between March and April in Islamabad. Observers here believed that these efforts, made after the first summit of the South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation members in Dhaka in December last year, conform with the aspirations of the two peoples, and contribute to peace, stability and development in the South Asian region.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SOUTH AFRICAN SITUATION

[Article by Zhongxiong: "Botha's Fraud of 'Internal Consulations' Collapses on Itself"]

[Excerpts] On New Year's Eve, P.W. Botha, head of the South African authorities, promised to work hard in 1986 to promote "the process of internal consultations," but at the same time explained that his government would on no account discard defending "the Christian concept of values and standards for civilization." These veiled words mean never to discard the brutal racial discrimination policy and rule by violence.

As expected, on the very same day as he made the promise, his "Law and Order Minister" Louis Le Grange proclaimed that 74 organizations were prohibited from holding any meetings in 30 administrative regions in the first half of 1986. On New Year's Day, the South African police shot dead three blacks. This seems to serve as an explanation for Botha's "standards for civilization." It is an ill omen for South Africa in the new year.

However, in their struggle, South African blacks are not so frightened as to prostrate themselves under Botha's "civilized" rule. As soon as the new year began, the masses of South African blacks held successive funerals and protest demonstrations, each greater and more violent in strength and impetus. Moreover, what merits attention is that more and more white peoole are joining the blacks in their struggle. This means that in the new year the South African people will wage more vigorous struggles for freedom and human rights. The attempt by Botha's racist regime to win people's hearts and to mitigate the struggle of the blacks by using the new trick of promoting "the process of internal consultations" will be of no avail, like its previous tricky schemes.

It is evident that if Botha really wants to solve South Africa's political problems, he must discard the apartheid policy and practices of brutal suppression and respect the basic rights of the 23.9 million black people before it is too late. First of all, Nelson Mandela should be released. Botha should hold consultations with Mandela and the African National Congress under his leadership on an equal basis. But what has Botha done in this regard?

Prison bars have failed to reduce Mandela's prestige and influence, and the practice of restricting Mrs Mandela's activities to designated areas has failed to prevent her from waging a staunch and unyielding struggle with the black masses. Any threat to Bishop Desmond Tutu would also be futile. Several months ago, Tutu publicly stated: "The terrible bloodshed is unavoidable" and "the patience of the blacks has been stretched to the very limit." He himself has always stood at the front of the struggle against the South African apartheid policy.

The fraud of "internal consulations" concocted by Botha has collapsed on itself. As soon as it came out, the fraud was exposed due to its own ugly record. Before the tide of the struggle waged by the broad masses of blacks, Botha and his kind, who are the most vicious, look more and more and more like dwarfs.

ZIMBABWEAN LEADER PRAISES RELATIONS WITH PRC

[Text] Shanghai, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Nolan Makombe, president of Zimbabwe's Senate, said today that his current visit to China had been most rewarding.

He told XINHUA before leaving here for Beijing today that bilateral relations were among the best in the world. This could be seen by their countries' frequent exchanges of visits. He hoped there would be even more exchanges between business leaders, engineers and agriculturalists.

Makombe said he had seen on his week-long visit, beginning last Saturday, that China's economic reforms were bearing fruit. This showed how China could look back into the past and correct mistakes to benefit the future. Zimbabwe and China, he said, shared similar views on southern Africa. There were now encouraging signs that black people in South Africa were rising up against apartheid. The liberation movement was developing, and nothing could stop the people of South Africa from freeing themselves. He accused South African authorities of using bandits to try to cut off Zimbabwe's rail and other links to the sea, in a bid to force the land-locked nation to ask for an outlet through South Africa. But, he said, Zimbabwe was a front-line state bordering South Africa, and was "ready to defend its independence and sovereignty". Makombe and his visiting party, who have been touring Hangzhou and Shanghai, leave Beijing to return home tomorrow.

IRANIAN LEADER EXPOSES SOVIET 'BLACKMAIL'

[Text] Tehran, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Iranian Speaker of Majlis (parliament) Hashemi Rafsanjani exposed Soviet blackmails levied on Iran but he said Iran didn't give in to them, according to ETTELA'AT daily today. Rafsanjani was speaking to the commanders of Iran's Air Force yesterday, just before a visit to Iran by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Kornienko scheduled for early next month.

Rafsanjani said: "The Russians had been certainly ready to give aid to us if we'd wavered from our principles." But he revealed that the Russians had wanted Iran to ignore the Afghanistan issue and to export gas to them almost freely just like the Shah did in the past. They also did other blackmails, he said. "Had we wavered from our firm stance and give in to the blackmails it was possible that a new way had been opened to us, but it would be unclear to where the way would lead us," the speaker said. The relations between the Soviet Union and Iran have been cool in recent years. But there are signs that their relations could be improved to some extent in the near future.

COMMENTARY VIEWS PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

["Short Commentary": "Bringing New Hopes for Peace in Central America"]

[Text] The foreign ministers of the eight countries of the Contadora Group and the Lima Group have met in Venezuela, adopted a declaration, determined to push ahead with peace negotiations for Central America, and set out explicit goals and measures toward that end. Under a situation full of obstacles to peace in Central America, the efforts made by the meeting of the foreign ministers of the eight Latin American countries has brought new hopes for peace in Central America.

Over the past few years, the Contadora Group has made quite a few efforts to resolve the clashes in Central America, and has held numerous meetings. However, for various reasons, it has failed to get the peace pact for Central America that it has put forward signed. Late last year, the nine-nation meeting attended by fully empowered representatives also failed to arrive at an accord because of internal differences and outside meddling. Certain countries called for a 5-month moratorium on negotiations, and thus the Contadora Group's peace efforts were once more halted. Under such circumstances, the ability of the Contadora Group to resolve the Central American crisis was questioned by public opinion, with certain Western news agencies even predicting that the Contadora Group's peace overtures were already "dying." Now, the meeting of the foreign ministers of the eight nations has demonstrated that the Contadora Group's peace overtures meet the interests and aspirations of the Central American people and enjoy widespread backing, thus testifying to the vitality of the Contadora spirit and the futility of those pessimistic allegations. Just as Consalvi, Venezuelan minister of foreign affairs, pointed out: "This meeting shows that, no matter how serious the difficulties, we will never stop our enthusiastic efforts." At the opening session, Olavo E. Setubal, Brazilian minister of foreign affairs, said: "Our task is to demonstrate to the whole world that the Contadora Group is making progress conscientiously with full vigor, and that it is an important factor in resolving the Central American crisis through diplomatic dialogues and negotiations."

We should not fail to see that since the Contadora Group's peace mediation activities bogged down, a disturbing and complicated situation has emerged in Central America. Just as the declaration of the eight-nation foreign minister's meeting points out: As the threat to Central American peace becomes increasingly serious, a diplomatic vacuum would be created in the region that might heighten the tension there. Hence it is necessary to instill new vitality into the Contadora-sponsored negotiations." The Contadora Group has long since clearly put forth the important principles that Central American issues should be freed from the orbit of East-West rivalry, that the right of self-determination of the people of various countries should be ensured, and that there should be no outside interference in a country's international affairs. This is the only correct idea for a fair and just solution to the Central American issues and is a concentrated reflection of the Latin American people's will and aspirations. The experience of the past few years has proved that the Contadora Group has already played an irreplaceable role in Central American affairs. Mediation by the Contadora Group has been indispensable to maintaining the current situation in Central America and preventing it from sliding into a crisis. Therefore, any attempt to stall the peace progress initiated by the Contadora Group will be unpopular.

At present, the Latin American people long for stability and peace. The peace efforts by the Contadora Group will not be made in vain. People believe that, with the energetic backing of the Latin American people, the group will press ahead with its peace process with even greater vigor and resolve, and no force can arrest it.

LIAOWANG PROMOTES ADVANCEMENT OF RURAL REFORMS

HK220801 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 p 4

[Forum: "Persist in Rural Reforms"]

[Text] In the past year, China's rural economic structural reforms were focused on the further reform of the rural economic management structure and the system for purchasing and marketing farm products. Through reforms, the scope of market regulation has been expanded and the industrial structure has been readjusted. This marks the second step of the rural reforms.

The reform practice over the past year has achieved marked results which find expression mainly in the following facts. The rural economy as a whole has become more dynamic and has continued to grow, thus providing favorable conditions for the development of the national economy and for overall economic reforms. The initiative of peasants throughout the country has been further aroused to increase production in light of market demands, and horizontal ties in the commodity economy have been strengthened. New developments have been made in the fields of forestry, animal husbandry, fishery, processing industry, and service industry, which previously were weak links in the rural economy, and the rural economy has made great advances toward economic diversification and coordinated development. Last year's total grain output was still close to the 1983 level, although some localities suffered serious natural disasters; the output of all cash crops increased with the exception of cotton, the output of which was decreased according to the plan. The gross production of society in the rural areas and peasants' total income rose substantially. All the above facts show that the policies for rural reforms are correct.

In order to meet the needs of the new situation since the adoption of the contract responsibility system in the countryside and to promote further development in the rural commodity economy in 1985, we changed the long-standing system of state-planned purchase and marketing of farm products and directly linked agricultural production with social needs. This was a major reform step. We can imagine what the situation might be if we had not taken this reform measure in 1985. Under one scenario, if we did not change the farm product purchase system and readjust the agricultural structure, peasants would have concentrated their resources on growing grain crops and reaped good harvests under favorable weather conditions. The state thus might not be able to purchase so much grain from peasants; a good harvest might make grain cheap and harm the interests of peasants, whose enthusiasm might then be dampened. But if the state purchased all the surplus grain from the peasants, state finances would have been greatly strained. On the other hand, if grain output decreased due to unfavorable weather conditions, and the production of cash crops did not increase because we did not take action to readjust the agricultural structure, the peasants would not have been able to increase their incomes and their production enthusiasm would also have been dampened. No matter what the situation, we would not have achieved today's good conditions. The reforms in 1985 avoided the two hypothetical situations and succeeded in enlivening the rural economy and ensuring the planned development of the commodity economy in the countryside. We can say that the reforms have achieved good results.

We should also notice that the second step of the rural reforms is much more complicated and arduous than the first step. In the first step, we mainly readjusted the internal relations of production and distribution in the countryside, but in the second step we will mainly readjust the overall rural economic management system through establishing regulatory mechanisms operated by market forces, readjusting the agricultural structure, facilitating commodity circulation, improving the purchase contract system, and establishing a service system to meet the needs of commodity production.

In a word, things are more complicated. We will have to deal with a large number of new questions and new contradictions. But one thing is definte: the rural economic structure must be reformed. Only through successful reforms can rural commodity production be developed and can the rural areas become prosperous and rich.

Naturally, such a large-scale and profound reform will not be accomplished overnight. We are situated in a transition period in which the new is replacing the old. Now, the new system is being built, and the old system is still functioning. It is unavoidable that some steps in the course of reform are not well coordinated. We should fully realize the complexity and arduousness of the ongoing reforms. Some comrades unrealistically think that the second step of rural reforms will also achieve quick results as they see that the adoption of the contract responsibility system has rapidly advanced production and changed conditions in many places. The adoption of the contract system aroused peasants' production enthusiasm and tapped production potential, thus effecting a rapid change and marked development. At present, our reforms are carried out on a more profound level, so we should not expect the appearance of a miracle like that of a few years ago.

Take the reform of the grain purchase and marketing system as an example. The previous system of a state-planned, monopoly purchases, and marketing systems has proven unfavorable to the development of commodity production by practice over the past years. The substitution of the contract purchase system for the old system is undoubtedly a major step in the right direction. However, the contract purchase system now is not sound enough as it has just been adopted and is still limited by the material conditions. What we can do now in the performance of the contracts is to supply some production materials to peasants at fair prices in exchange for farm products from peasants; on the other hand, peasants must fulfill the contracts as their duties to the state. The contract system, not sound enough now, should be gradually improved and developed into a real economic contract system. In this process, there will certainly be some links which are not well coordinated. However, we must never regress to the old system of state monopoly purchase and marketing. The problems in the contract system can be solved only through further reforms, and the contract system can only be improved on the basis of reforms. In a word, as long as we persevere in promoting reforms, we will gradually overcome the obstacles. Our achievements today have mainly come from reforms, and our progress tomorrow will still rely on reforms. The only way to ensure the countryside's prosperity and development is to carry forward reforms and oppose any backtracking.

All people determined to advance rural reforms should see the bright prospects for their cause in spite of the existence of difficulties in large number at the moment. Let us continue to make painstaking and unremitting efforts in opening the road to socialist rural development with Chinese characteristics!

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR URGES ENERGY CONSERVATION

[Text] Beijing, 23 Jan (XINHUA) -- The State Council promulgated the "Provisional Regulations on Supervision of Energy Conservation" on 12 January and issued a circular to all localities.

The circular said: In recent years, China has achieved great results in the development and conservation of energy, which help to ensure the sustained growth of the national economy. However, the shortage of energy, in particular the shortage of power supply, will remain much of a problem in the future development of the national economy. Moreover, owing to the relative backwardness of China's industrial technology and equipment and management methods, problems such as great energy consumption and low economic efficiency remain unsolved.

Only by determinedly changing this situation can we expect to exploit our resources fully and effectively and increase profits from fairly small investments.

The circular noted: In order to ensure success in energy conservation, it is necessary to arouse the initiative of enterprises and workers, thereby associating the economic gains of enterprises and workers with energy conservation. It is also essential to extensively propagate the importance of energy saving; to conscientiously upgrade our technological level, adopt scientific management, and train talented personnel; to perfect the responsibility system; and to attain a new level in energy conservation through the combined means of economic, legal, and administrative measures.

The "Provisional Regulations on Supervision of Energy Conservation" promulgated by the State Council has 10 chapters and 60 articles, it will take effect on 1 April 1986.

Power Shortages Addressed

[By reporter Huang Fengchu]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Jan (XINHUA) -- Since the beginning of this year, the electric power shortage has become more acute in the country. At a national economic work conference today, the State Economic Commission and the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power called for power consumption in strict compliance with plans.

China's total power output reached 407.3 billion KWH last year, 8.4 percent more than the previous year and the largest increase since the founding of the country. In the first 18 days of this year, the total power output was 21.086 billion kWh, averaging 1.171 billion kWh daily and topping last year's same period by 9.24 percent. However, the supply still falls short of the growing needs of industrial development in various localities. Above-quota power consumption is pervasive, and the frequent circuit breaking to restrict consumption has affected normal operations of the power networks.

In order to ease the current acute power supply shortage, ensure a sustained, steady, and balanced growth of the national economy this year, and guarantee electricity needed by the people for their everyday life and by major civic departments, the State Economic Commission and the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power have established the following measures:

1. All provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities should proceed from the overall situation in strictly observing the power consumption plan and conserving electricity, and should arrange production in accordance with the power supply quotas. Above-quota power consumption is forbidden, and everything should be done to avoid unscheduled circuit breaking to restrict power consumption.

2. The Ministries of Coal Industry, Petroleum Industry, Railways, and Communications should deliver coal and oil strictly according to schedule to ensure prompt delivery of fuel needed by power plants.

3. All localities must tap potentials and explore for sources of electricity. It is necessary to bring into full play the role of self-financed power plants and small hydroelectric and thermal electric power plants. Where conditions permit, localities may raise funds to build power plants.

4. It is necessary to properly handle the relationship in power consumption between key enterprises' production and the everyday life of local people by giving priority to electricity for everyday life and increasing key enterprises' power consumption within limits. In view of the upcoming Spring Festival, all localities should properly arrange the electricity needed for the people's everyday life.

5. Electric power departments should step up supervision of power generating facilities to reduce accidents and make full and greater use of their capacity.

TAIGU COUNTY REFORMS CADRE ASSESSMENT, APPRAISAL

[Report by XINHUA correspondent Jin Jiasheng: "Taigu County Reforms Methods for Assessing and Appraising Cadres"]

[Excerpts] In line with the principle of encouraging cadres to speak the truth, do practical work, and render better service, the Taigu County CPC Committee of Shanxi Province has reformed the methods for assessing and appraising rural work. While assessing the cadres at the township and village levels, and appraising the advanced units at the grass-roots level through comparison, besides judging the year's achievements and choosing the units with successes in single items, the county CPC Committee also took long-term construction and appraisal of overall work into account.

Regarding the requirements for rural labor models, the county CPC Committee emphatically pointed out that labor models should be assessed in light of their ideological work style, the means they have adopted becoming prosperous, and mass opinion, rather than being judged by their average per capita income. The cadres at the township and village levels should be appraised according to the services they have rendered in leading the peasants on the road to prosperity.

The announcement of the decision of the Taigu County CPC Committee on reforming the methods for assessing cadres and appraising advanced units won the support of the broad ranks of cadres and peasants. During the last 4 months, a general modd of speaking the truth, doing practical work, and trying to become a "service-type" cadre has been established among the cadres of the whole county. While handling affairs, the cadres are ready to speak the truth and stress practical achievements instead of vying with one another with statistics.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Stimulate the 'Spirit of the Foolish Old Man' in Electing the Advanced Through Comparison"]

[Text] With a feeling of immeasurable joy, we have welcomed the first spring of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Everyone is now thinking of scaling new heights in the new year. Leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee have called on us to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man and have encouraged our cadres to work hard and do practical things instead of indulging in empty talk. Now the CPC committees at all levels are studying and implementing the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates. They are making efforts to strengthen the building of spiritual and material civilization and to take vigorous action against the unhealthy tendencies within and outside the party. It is absolutely necessary to make appraisal through comparison and commend advanced units and individuals who have done well in building spiritual and material civilization and straightening out party style.

While summing up experiences and appraising the advanced through comparison, we must stress facts and prevent exaggeration. Contributions by a unit or individual should be judged by practical results, and their work style should be judged by practical work. We must encourage our cadres to become "foolish old men," willing to do practical work and serve the people.

In order to attain fruitful results in appraising the advanced through comparison, it is necessary to strictly follow the requirements for appraisal, stress quality and practical achievements, and realistically choose advanced units and individuals through public appraisal. Under no circumstances should we exaggerate the achievements of any unit or individual. Only in this way can we spur the people to forge ahead and overcome our mistakes and shortcomings.

At present, the work done by some localities in appraising the advanced units through comparison and the meetings held to commend these units have become a mere formality. This merits attention. We must set strict demands on all our work. All departments and units should adopt practical methods and measures to enlighten and guide the people to work hard for the prosperity of the country. We must overcome and prevent unhealthy tendencies frequently occurring in our leading work, such as performing duties in a perfunctory manner, making no distinction between reward and punishment, being in low spirits, going through the motions, and bureaucracy. In appraising the advanced through comparison, we must not evade problems or be afraid of making clear-cut and incisive remarks. As we insist on the truth, we will exert positive influences and will not exacerbate the matter.

In reforming the methods for assessing and appraising rural work, the Taigu County CPC Committee has stressed practical results. This method is applicable to rural work as well as work in other fields. The experiences of this county can also be used for reference by other localities. The honor of the advanced comes from the spirit of the foolish old man.

ZHAO ZIYANG COMMENTS ON TANGSHAN ECONOMY

SK231125 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jan 86 p 1

[Text] On the morning of 2 January, after hearing the reports by responsible comrades of the Tangshan City CPC Committee and the city people's government, Premier Zhao Ziyang fully affirmed Tangshan's methods and experiences in building itself into an open economic zone, on experimentally implementing the new system of cities administering counties, and on giving different guidance to different rural areas. Premier Zhao Ziyang said happily: During my current tour of Tangshan, I have seen many fresh things, which have left a very good impression on me. You should adroitly guide action according to circumstances in order to accelerate urban and rural economic structural reforms.

Premier Zhao Ziyang emphatically pointed out: Both the geographical and climatic conditions are good in Tangshan. Particularly in terms of the geographical conditions, Tangshan has rich natural resources and a good transport service, and is a coastal city close to other big cities. In the past, Tangshan suffered from the "sequel of the Cultural Revolution" in a relatively serious manner. But now the relations between cities and counties have been brought into better balance and all leading bodies have been reorganized; the new leading bodies are unified and coordinated. With this unity and coordination, the favorable geographical conditions will certainly be brought into play. In the four counties I visited this time, I found that both the mental outlook and the situation in other fields are good.

Hearing that Tangshan plans to build itself into an open economic zone, Premier Zhao said with satisfaction: With plentiful agricultural and sideline products here, your city has not adopted a blockade method. On the contrary, you have regarded the marketing of your agricultural and sideline products as a favorable condition for promoting production. This idea is very good. You should not consider the outflow of your goods and materials a bad thing, nor blockade yourselves. You should build yourselves into an open economic zone. This is what you mean by saying "let other households eat the rice," "strike out in all directions," and "contact all quarters." But this truth has not yet been understood throughout the country. This is an important problem which should be solved in the course of reform, and must attract still greater attention. We should pay attention to reviewing new experiences in this regard and expeditiously solving difficulties and problems emerging in this regard. We should promote economic integration, adroitly guide action according to circumstances, preserve the advantages, discard the disadvantages, and remove all obstacles. We should not engage in an ivory tower economy nor conduct a regional blockade.

Premier Zhao also pointed out: We should further accelerate the reform of city management structure. He said: In the preceding stage of urban economic structural reform, we paid attention to expanding powers for enterprises and to transferring those enterprises at or above the provincial level to lower levels. Work in these two aspects should be strengthened continually. On this basis, we should further accelerate urban economic structural reform. When shifting enterprises to lower administrative levels there is a problem, that is, how to administrate these enterprises well. In sum, all our actions should be conducive to strengthening the management of various trades.

On the afternoon of 2 January, Premier Zhao inspected the Tangshan Iron and Steel Company and the Tangshan Construction and Enamel Plant. On the morning of 3 January Premier Zhao left Tangshan for Beijing.

XI ZHONGXUN MEETS TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS GROUP

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jan (XINHUA) -- Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, received the council members attending the second council meeting of the All-China Association of Taiwan Compatriots this afternoon at the Great Hall of the People.

Xi Zhongxun expressed the hope that all members of the association will enhance their contacts with compatriots on and outside the Taiwan island, thus enabling them to garner a detailed knowledge of the CPC's principle and policy of "one country, two systems" and peaceful unification of the motherland. He wished the association greater achievements in the new year. Xi Zhongxun had a photo taken with the council members.

The second council meeting of the All-China Association of Taiwan Compatriots opened on 13 January. The main items on its agenda are a review of its 1985 work, establishment of tasks for the coming year, and appoint new council members. The meeting is expected to conclude on the 19th.

[Text] At the first national meeting to commend advanced museums and individual museum workers, which was recently held in Beijing, the Gaoan County Museum in our province was awarded a gold-lettered plate by the Ministry of Culture.

A representative of the Gaoan County Museum was cordially received by Deng Liqun, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, Yan Jici, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee; Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee; Zhu Houze, director of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department; Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture; and other leading comrades.

TIAN JIYUN MEETS PRICE CONFERENCE PARTICIPANTS

[By reporter Chen Yun]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Jan (XINHUA) -- It is necessary to consolidate, digest, supplement, and improve the price reform measures already in force so that commodity prices can, in general, remain stable. This is a basic requirement set by a national price work conference for this year's commodity price work.

The conference, called by the State Price Bureau, was held in Beijing from 5 to 19 January. During the conference, Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, heard briefings from representatives to the conference and also made a speech.

The conference held that by taking a major step forward in reforming the price system last year, China has basically streamlined purchasing and marketing prices of grain in rural areas; readjusted the purchasing, marketing, and price policies on hogs; gradually relaxed the control over prices of meat, vegetables, and other perishable nonstaple foods; readjusted the price of short-distance railway transportation; and further eased controls on prices of small commodities. Generally speaking, progress has been smooth, results have been remarkable, and the price system as a whole has gradually advanced in a clear and rational direction. Without this step in reform, it would be impossible to achieve the current progress in restructuring the rural industrial facilities, and the urban and rural market would not be thriving as it is now. With the passage of time, price reform will lend even stronger impetus to developing commodity production in a planned manner and to increasing market prosperity. Of course, it is also necessary to note the excessive increase in the price index as well as a number of other shortcomings in practical work. We should overcome the shortcomings through properly reviewing experiences.

The conference held that the primary task of price work for this year is to "consolidate, digest, supplement, and improve" reform measures already in force. It is necessary to maintain basically stable prices through digestion and improvement of the measures. At the same time, it is necessary to effectively conduct investigation and study of prices, as well as price checks, in preparing for next year's reform.

The conference emphasized: The state's intensified macroeconomic control over capital construction scale and unplanned increases in consumption funds has provided improved economic conditions for stabilizing commodity prices this year. It should also be noted that unstable factors have not been completely eliminated from the current economic picture. The repercussions of last year's price hike are still apparent, in varying degrees, and price hikes in disguised forms and indiscriminate price increases by some producers and dealers still occur occasionally. These problems merit the attention of the relevant departments.

The conference pointed out: It is imperative to implement the following measures for maintaining stable prices: First, it is necessary to stress the focal points of controlling capital construction scale and unplanned increases in consumption while actively producing readily marketable products to meet consumers' needs.

Second, it is necessary to focus attention on key areas, i.e., large- and medium-sized cities, especially Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, and provincial capitals. Third, it is necessary to concentrate efforts on maintaining stable prices of such major commodities as vegetables, meat, and eggs. The conference called for intensifying the supervision and inspection of price work and duly handling price policy violations.

LI PENG SPEAKS TO ELECTRONICS MINISTRY CADRES

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Liu Litian and XINHUA reporter Li Anding]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Jan (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Electronics Industry, which has taken a big step forward and made meticulous efforts in carrying out reform, should pay close attention to the management of electronics enterprises after they are granted greater decisionmaking powers, said State Council Vice Premier Li Peng at a meeting of the ministry's leading cadres today.

Li Peng said: The Ministries of Machine-Building Industry and Electronics Industry have been selected to test the structural reform of separating government from enterprise functions in order to invigorate enterprises. The Ministry of Electronics Industry has, instead of rushing headlong into mass action, carried out the work of delegating powers to enterprises in a planned and systematic manner and in accordance with the special characteristics of each locality. In view of the greater decision-making powers granted to electronics enterprises, the ministry should, as a government organ performing the function of managing the electronics industry, establish principles and policies for developing the industry; do a good job in coordination and planning; and carefully examine and approve major projects and distribution of raw and semifinished materials. It should also continue helping enterprises resolve problems and make every effort in promoting their development.

Li Peng said: There are two formulas for the future development of the electronics enterprises: One, by developing cooperation among themselves by forming a group of electronics enterprises in joint production of components and semi-finished and finished products; and, two, by developing cooperation with other industries by serving technological transformation and development of such traditional industries as machinery, electric power, and communications. These enterprises may gradually expand such cooperation from joint production and services for technological transformation and development to the pooling of funds. Li Peng said: Each group should pursue self-development by developing its own name-brand products and by striving to produce electronics goods currently in market demand.

LI PENG, HAO JIANXIU AT ANTI-FLOOD COMMENDATION

[By reporter Cui Lisha]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jan (XINHUA) -- A national meeting was held by the Central Anti-Flood General Command this morning in Beijing to commend models and advanced collectives for their efforts in combating floods. When the 6 anti-flood models and the representatives from 18 anti-flood advanced collectives, all wearing red corsages, mounted the rostrum to receive the glistening medals, the hall resounded with a prolonged ovation.

At the meeting, Wei Fulin [7136 4395 5259], deputy secretary-general of the Central Anti-Flood General Command and director of the Operation Department of the Chinese PLA's General Staff Department, read the command's decision to commend the 8 [as received] models and 18 advanced collectives for their efforts in combating floods.

Among those attending the meeting were Li Peng, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, vice premier of the State Council, and commander in chief of the Central Anti-Flood General Command; and Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee. On behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council, Li Peng paid lofty respects and extended cordial regards to the comrades who had the glory to win the titles of national anti-flood models and advanced anti-flood collectives due to their efforts in combating floods.

Li Peng said: During last year's anti-flood struggle, particularly in combating the Liaohe flood, you did very well in fulfilling the task assigned to you by the party Central Committee and the State Council, safeguarding Panjin, the Liaoyang Petrochemical Complex, and an oil field, and reducing the loss caused by the flood. The victory of this struggle proved that our party and government are in the service of the people and share weal and woe with the people. Our PLA is the people's own army. When a dangerous situation arose, the PLA was there. Our people are good people. They not only struggled against floods but helped themselves by resuming production immediately after the disaster instead of becoming discouraged and dejected. They quickly restored their villages and towns. What they did demonstrated the fine traditions of diligence and bravery of the Chinese nation. Li Peng suggested that the deeds of the anti-flood models and advanced collectives be reviewed and used as teaching materials for education in socialist spiritual civilization.

Li Peng pointed out: Since liberation, our country has achieved great success in harnessing major rivers. However, our flood-control capability is not yet strong, and some major rivers have not yet been brought under control so that flood disasters can be completely prevented. Because of this, our struggle against floods will be a protracted one, and we must remain vigilant. Li Peng urged that serious efforts be made to review last year's experiences in preventing and combating floods so as to be well prepared for another struggle in the future.

Qian Zhengying, deputy commander in chief of the Central Anti-Flood General Command and minister of water conservancy and electric power, also addressed the meeting.

YANG SHANGKUN ADVISES AT RECTIFICATION FORUM

[Text] In his speech at an all-Army forum on party rectification in units at or below regimental level, Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, pointed out yesterday: All Army units should examine their problems and do their work well under the proviso that it is imperative to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party work style this year. They should actively contribute to the rectification of that work style.

Yang Shangkun pointed out: Party rectification work is very important in units at or below regimental level. One of the most important links to be grasped in the course of party rectification in such units is the consolidation of the company party branch.

Yang Shangkun said: Party rectification is good political training. In carrying out party rectification in units at or below regimental level, it is necessary to rectify the negative side on the one hand, and to effectively build the company party branch into a fighting bastion on the other.

Yang Shangkun called on cadres of the three general departments, major Army units, and division and corps leading bodies to work with units at or below regimental level, where they should not only be liaison officers but also make concientious efforts to help basic units enact party rectification. By so doing, office cadres will also be able to temper themselves.

GU MU TO HEAD TOURISM DEVELOPMENT GROUP

[Text] Beijing, January 21 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government has decided to earmark 500 million yuan each year for the next five years for the development of tourism, State Councillor Gu Mu told a national conference which opened today. The money will be mainly spent on the development of scenic spots and the construction of hotels in major tourist cities and regions such as Beijing, Shanghai, Xian, Guilin, Hangzhou, Wuxi, Guangzhou and Hainan Island, Gu said. Foreign commercial loans will also be considered and various ways of raising funds in the domestic market will be encouraged to expand tourism, he added.

As part of its efforts to promote the development of tourism, the State Council has decided to set up a coordination group to guide the departments concerned in tackling the major issues; the group will be headed by Gu Mu himself.

Gu demanded that the political and economic importance of tourism be rethought, and said that the major goal the country's tourism industry should try to attain is to receive 10 million overseas tourists and earn 10 billion U.S. dollars a year by the end of this century. Though developing very fast in recent years, China's tourism industry is still underdeveloped and does not match the first-grade attractions it boasts, Gu said. He called for planned and coordinated efforts to produce commodities for tourists, train specialized personnel, develop scenic spots, build hotels, and improve air, rail and highway transportation, and other services.

PLA'S HAN HUAIZHI DISCUSSES MILITARY IMPROVEMENTS

HK211256 [Editorial Report] Beijing domestic television service in Mandarin on 18 January, during its regular 1100 GMT newscast, shows a 2-minute film clip on Han Huaizhi, deputy chief of the General Staff of the PLA, discussing further headway made in military training during a "recent" interview with a reporter of the China Central Television Station. While Han is heard discussing the training and the announcer summarizes Han's remarks, the film shows military helicopters, tanks, artillery, and military planes taking part in an unidentified military exercise. The film also shows a warship launching an unidentified missile, an unidentified radar, military personnel operating unidentified computers, an airborne force engaged in an unidentified exercise and parachuting, and the launch of an unidentified land-based missile. The following is the full text of the 2-minute report:

[Begin recording] [Announcer] In 1985, our Army scored great achievements in reduction and reorganization and in the reform of its system. This station's reporter recently interviewed Han Huaizhi, deputy chief of the General Staff of the PLA. He said:

[Han Huaizhi] In 1985, the commanders and fighters of the whole Army conscientiously implemented a series of instructions given by Chairman Deng on education and training, persisted in giving a strategic place to education and training, and made progress and improvement in the course of reform, thus bringing about a very good situation. The development of military training... [Announcer interrupts at this point and begins summarizing Han's remarks]

[Announcer] Han Huaizhi remarked that the strategic study of military training caused the whole Army to attach great importance to it. As a result, the training's vigor and vitality were strengthened, greater breakthroughs were made in the reform of our training system, and the new training system of separating individual training (dan ge ren yuan xun lian) from Army unit training was established. The reform in training contents and training setups is causing deep changes in our Army's training process. The application of laser, electronic computers, and other new technologies to tactical simulated confrontational military exercises shows we have made a gratifying step in improving the means of training. As regards education, all military academies have made headway in replacing old ideas with new ones and in reforming content, method, and means. They have markedly improved the quality of education, provided the armed forces with a large number of university-level officers, and provided the armed forces with a number of high-level qualified personnel with master's or doctoral degrees.

Han Huaizhi said we will implement our military training on the basis of last year's program and under the guidance of the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the Military Commission. Our military training will focus on improving the Army's ability to fight in coordination, react quickly, survive in the field, deal with electronic devices, and improve logistics. The training of recruits will center around training conducted at military academies. The training of armed forces will center around field operations. We will perfect the scientific structure of training contents and training setups, improve the scientific management of military training, and enhance the overall beneficial results (xiao yi). Our training work will enter a stage of all-round development. [end recording]

XINHUA COMMENTARY EXAMINES DISOBEDIENCE RESULTS

[XINHUA Commentator article: "Stop 'Disobeying the Red Light'"]

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jan (XINHUA) -- A certain local leading comrade stated at a cadres' meeting that as far as tax matters are concerned, it is necessary to have the "courage to reform," and "dare to disobey the red light." Influenced by this leading comrade's remarks, as high as 80 percent of the enterprises in this locality have evaded taxes or committed other frauds in violation of the tax law. He may not have anticipated that such serious consequences would be triggered by his brief remarks.

Red lights and green lights are traffic signals. Even small children know that the rule "walk when the light is green and stop when the light is red" should be obeyed; if this rule is violated, traffic accidents and serious loss of life and property will result. Of course, a society functions in a much more complex manner than its traffic. For the sake of ensuring society's normal political and economic activities, a socialist court will draw up all types of laws, disciplines, rules, and regulations to protect the fundamental interests of the people. Like red and green lights, these laws, disciplines, rules and regulations proscribe what can and cannot be done; therefore, eveyone in that society must regard them as codes of conduct, proceeding when the light is green and stop when it is red, so that orders and prohibitions can be strictly enforced. Regardless of his subjective intentions, this leading official's overt act of calling on people to disobey law, and this is absolutely unacceptable.

We must point out in particular that, while telling people that they must "dare to disobey the red light," this leading comrade also called on people to have "the courage to reform" -- two things having absolutely nothing to do with each other. For him it seems that laws and disciplines can be ignored in the course of reforms.

This is nothing but a distortion of the meaning of reform. Everyone knows that reform means replacing outmoded rules and regulations that obstruct the development of a society's productivity with vigorous and dynamic new systems, and does not mean that people can evade taxes, commit tax fraud, embezzle state property, endanger state interests, and undermine socialism, totally disregrading party discipline and state law. If these things can be regarded as reforms, we can only say that some people are actually pursuing their personal interests, or the interests of a small group of people, in the name of reform.

Some people may ask why they cannot disobey those outmoded disciplines and irrational rules and regulations. They certainly can if those disciplines, rules, and regulations are indeed outmoded and irrational. However, what may be regarded as outmoded or irrational should be judged on the basis of the interests of the whole, and not on partial interests; even if we do away with those outmoded and irrational rules and regulations that are not in the interest of the whole, we should do so in a well-guided and systematic manner. There should be construction and destruction, but construction should come first. Disobeying unscrupulously or reckless destruction will only confuse and distort matters.

RENMIN RIBAO REVIEWS ZHOU ENLAI CONTRIBUTIONS

HK161045 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jan 86 pp 4, 5

[Article by Gao Wenqian reprinted from 1986 Issue No 1 of WENXIAN HE YANJIU (with slight revisions): "Arduous But Brilliant Last Years -- On Zhou Enlai in the 'Great Cultural Revolution' Period"]

[Text] Ten years ago, Zhou Enlai, who had been carrying out a bitter struggle against the tragic historical disaster for 10 years, was exhausted and left the world forever. His death made the people who had suffered too much hardship become mature and alert all at once. Under the banner of mourning for Zhou Enlai, the long-accumulated deep feelings in the hearts of the people erupted like a volcano. The massive April Movement occurred on a nationwide scale with the Tiananmen Square Incident as the key event in demonstrating opposition to the "gang of four" and support for the correct leadership of the party as represented by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. This led to a deep political crisis, the seeds of which had been carried within Chinese society since the "Great Cultural Revolution" was launched. In just half a year, the CPC Central Committee executed the people's desire and smashed the "gang of four," thus ending the historical disaster of the "Great Cultural Revolution." All this was the inevitable outcome of developments reflecting the party's will and popular will. At the same time, it was inseparable from the efforts of Zhou Enlai, who endured humiliation in order to carry out an important mission, exerted all his strength to save the nation when its fate hung in the balance, and worked his heart out to reduce the losses caused by the "Great Cultural Revolution," thus winning the understanding and heart-felt love of a vast number of people.

I

When the "Great Cultural Revolution" swept the country in 1966, Zhou Enlai was already almost 70. It was in the historical twists and turns bringing serious disasters to the party and state that he arduously and indomintably spent the last 10 years of his life.

Due to complicated and deep social and historical reasons, in the process of the continuous accumulation and rapid expansion of the "leftist" mistakes in the party's guiding ideology begun in the late 1950's, the leadership group of the CPC Central Committee, including Zhou Enlai, failed to prevent the emergence of the historical disaster of the "Great Cultural Revolution," despite various efforts.

They thus had no choice but to accept the bitter fact of the "Great Cultural Revolution," since they had no basis in theory or in practice to fully understand and then defeat the "leftist" mistakes.

Like many other leading comrades of the CPC Central Committee, Zhou Enlai was not fully mentally prepared for the "Great Cultural Revolution," which broke out with tremendous force. He was drawn into the center of that political storm while busy with the intense work of urging the eight northern provinces to fight drought and was leading the struggle against earthquake damage and the relief work in Xingtai. Zhou Enlai did not understand the practice of rousing and instigating the masses to "rebel" from the top downward and thus willfully giving rise to a "fierce turbulence all over the country." According to what he said on different occasions, he "never even dreamed of that." For example, in a speech he gave at a work conference of the CPC Central Committee in October 1966, he summarized the situation, saying that the movement was "developing vigorously and cannot be stopped despite people's desires." With many thoughts surging through his mind, he said: "I have never even dreamed of such a tremendous situation," and "I shudder at the mere thought of it." Even 2 years later, in September 1968, when he met propaganda teams of workers and PLA men in the capital, he still said that to be honest in front of his comrades, at the initial period of the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, he did not understand it; he never thought that there could have been such a situation.

Of course, Zhou Enlai's understanding of the "Great Cultural Revolution" could not but be restricted by historical conditions. Since the true nature of the historical process of the "Great Cultural Revolution" had not yet been fully revealed and was hidden by various myths and false illusions that most people believed, from the very beginning Comrade Zhou Enlai cherished a sincere desire to strive to understand the "Great Cultural Revolution" from the point of view that it might have a good end. He hoped that it could really help overcome and eliminate certain real shortcomings and the dark side that existed in the party and government organs. It could thus help maintain the party's and state's fine characteristics. On the basis of this understanding, he held that after the proletariat had won state power, such a revolution could attain its goal only under the leadership of the vanguards of the proletariat -- the Communist Party, which would proceed in an organized and systematic manner and under the precondition of refraining as much as possible from affecting the normal order of social life and developing along a health path.

However, this idea was far from the so-called tentative idea of bringing order out of chaos and far from the way that the movement actually developed later. This sharp conflict between ideas and reality could not help but put Zhou Enlai in an extremely difficult position. Therefore, in a series of major meetings held after the "Great Cultural Revolution" was launched, Zhou Enlai always criticized himself for ideologically "falling behind" the development of the situation and committing "mistakes." For example, at the 11th Plenary Session of the 8th CPC Central Committee, he criticized himself by saying he always "looked at the new revolution and new movement with his old methods and ideas" and said he would "plunge into the struggle with enthusiasm. Mistakes, big or small, are unavoidable when one plunges into the struggle. I have committed big mistakes and will certainly commit some mistakes now if I handle these matters. I have to be mentally prepared for this." In another example, in his formal speech to the work conference of the CPC Central Committee, he said: Since the 11th plenary session, I have strived to follow Chairman Mao closely, but "sometimes I still fear falling behind." However, I have the confidence and awareness that I will correct my mistakes as soon as I am aware of them and strive to catch up.

Although Zhou Enlai strived to find subjective reasons, he had to squarely face the severe reality that the party and state were undergoing upheaval and fragmenting. Throughout the "Great Cultural Revolution," this firm problem bothered him and caused unthinkable agony and anxiety in his mind.

It is not hard to imagine that when he saw with his own eyes that the achievements of the 17 years of socialist construction, permeated with his painstaking labor, would soon be destroyed in the turmoil that was called a "revolution," how could he remain unmoved and how could he not "strive to catch up?" Sometimes this mood expressed itself in a twisted manner. For example, in December 1966 when he met the representatives of the cadres and masses from the China Academy of Sciences, he said that as he had failed to keep his thoughts in line with the foresight, daring, and resolution of the leaders, he had failed to understand the prospects and goals of the "Great Cultural Revolution." Therefore, he failed greatly in doing his work vigorously and conscientiously. Sometimes he wanted to divide tasks into stages and carry them out in an orderly fashion, but, in fact, this was impossible. For example, when he talked with the cadres of the financial and trade circles with whom he met at the beginning of 1967, he recalled that since the "Great Cultural Revolution" was launched, the scale of the movement had time and again exceeded what he imagined. He said: "Even though we have tried hard to closely follow Chairman Mao's ideas and suggestion that we study hard, follow him, and correct our mistakes, and although we have tried to catch up with him, we have failed to catch up." These words faithfully describe Zhou Enlai's mood at that time and vividly show the contradiction in his mind between his desire and efforts to understand the "Great Cultural Revolution" and his frustration that it might never be understood.

As time passed, the disastrous consequences of the "Great Cultural Revolution" became increasingly clear. Zhou Enlai was faced with two choices: to play it safe and do nothing in order to keep out of trouble, or to stand fast to his post, share weal and woe with the party and people, and do his best to relieve the difficult situation. From the point of view of his personal interests alone, the former could be regarded as a good policy, while the latter was filled with danger and uncertainty. However, since his childhood he had looked for the truth for national salvation in the vast sea of knowledge, and he clearly realized that only communism could save the country from subjugation. How could he consider his personal security and position at a juncture when the party and state faced serious danger and difficulties. He would even risk fire and water or his life as long as he could protect the party and state from the "Great Cultural Revolution," a disaster which was difficult to avoid. When he talked with Li Fuchun in December 1966, a comrade-in-arms with whom he had fought shoulder to shoulder for several decades, he told Li a principle that he believed in his heart of hearts: Who is to go into the tiger's den if I do not? Who will descend into hell if I do not? This was precisely what gave Zhou Enlai the impetus in his heart to endure humiliation in order to carry out an important mission and arduously relieve the dangerous situation.

We should point out here that many of Zhou Enlai's efforts to relieve the dangerous situation were supported by Mao Zedong. In launching the "Great Cultural Revolution," Mao Zedong's aim was to "expose our dark side publicly, in an all-round manner, and from the bottom upward" and thus bring order out of chaos in the country. Therefore, he did not hope that the turmoil in the situation would grow out of control, because this did not conform to his original purpose in launching the "Great Cultural Revolution." When he found that Lin Biao, Jiang Qing, and others were trying their best to push his ideas to the extreme and that they craved nothing short of nationwide chaos, he realized that only by relying on and supporting Zhou Enlai could the situation be stabilized and could the continuous operation of the life of the state be maintained. Therefore, several times Mao Zedong personally stopped Lin Biao, Jiang Qing, and other people's plots to frame and overthrow Zhou Enlai and supported Zhou Enlai's work in stabilizing the situation, telling people not to relax their efforts to carry out production and protecting old cadres.

It is precisely under this situation that, after the 11th Plenary Session of the 8th CPC Central Committee, Zhou Enlai was appointed to be in charge of the daily work of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and to shoulder the heavy tasks of handling the routine affairs of the party, government, and Army. This means that he had to guarantee daily necessities of China's 700 million people amid the chaos of the "Great Cultural Revolution." In order to guarantee this, he had to ensure that the state life proceeded normally. This was a problem extremely difficult to coordinate, but that had to be coordinated under current circumstances. He had to discover a way to coordinate the two, otherwise the consequences would be too dreadful to contemplate. With his thorough loyalty to the party and people and with his wisdom and special ways, he shouldered that heavy historical task. When he became increasingly clear about the losses caused by the "Great Cultural Revolution," he exerted his utmost efforts to reduce losses to a minimum and enable the state life to continue to progress. At the same time, he waited for an opportunity to emerge and for the awakening of the masses. He time and again repeated the following now well-known words: "During the Great Cultural Revolution, I only had the following to say: I will give my all until my heart stops beating." These words reflected his mood then. What else could he say in the face of such a historical tragedy? This was why Zhou Enlai worked so arduously during the "Great Cultural Revolution," and this is the key for us to understand Zhou Enlai during the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution." In all the activities in the last 10 years of his life, Zhou Enlai followed these words.

II

After probing Zhou Enlai's heavy heart and firm will in his inner world during the years of turmoil in the "Great Cultural Revolution," we should go deeper to examine his historical role in that period. Comrade Chen Yun once observed: "The consequences of the 'Great Cultural Revolution' would have been unimaginable if it were not for Zhou Enlai's efforts." This was a lofty appraisal of Zhou Enlai's role in the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution." That great historical role can be summed up in the following two aspects:

First, he played a role in reducing the losses and watering down the errors. Comrade Xiaoping pointed this out when he answered the questions asked by Oriana Fallaci, an Italian reporter. Because of the tragic nature of the "Great Cultural Revolution," although Zhou Enlai made utmost efforts to try to save the party and state from turmoil, under the specific historical conditions at that time, one individual did not have the strength to save a desperate situation. However, as was said in the title of an article mourning his death -- "A Towering Huge Tree Guards China Heroically" -- when the storm of the "Great Cultural Revolution" blotted out the sky and land with its sweeping violence, Zhou Enlai stood firm to resist it with his own body and used the power in his hands to stabilize the situation as much as possible, reduce the scale of the turmoil, and maintain the normal operation of state life in various spheres. By so doing, he shifted and reduced the blows of that historical disaster and protected the party and people to a certain extent.

For example, the program for action, the "16 provisions," for the "Great Cultural Revolution" was being discussed at the 11th Plenary Session of the 8th CPC Central Committee. After discussions with Tao Zhi, Zhou Enlai struck from the original draft text such phrases as "black gang" and "black line" and added some provisions on restrictive policies, such as the strict distinction between the two categories of contradictions of a different nature, the necessity of distinguishing cadres who were good or relatively good, the necessity of uniting with more than 95 percent of the cadres and masses, the necessity of carrying out a verbal struggle instead of resorting to violence, refraining from pitting the movement against production, and protecting scientific and technological workers. We should admit that as the guiding principle in launching the "Great Cultural Revolution" was completely wrong, it was impossible for these concrete policy provisions to have any great restrictive strength over the actual development of the "Great Cultural Revolution."

Nevertheless, once these policy provisions were definitely recognized in the party's document, they provided Zhou Enlai with a weapon to use later in reducing to the minimum the losses caused by the "Great Cultural Revolution," in teaching and trying to persuade the masses to be free from the ultraleftist fanaticism, and in fighting the perverse acts of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques.

In handling the problem of seizing power, in order to reduce to the minimum its impact on various aspects of work and in order to maintain a stable public order, he made bitter efforts to exercise various kinds of restrictions. At the very beginning of the practice of seizing power, he time and again reiterated on various occasions that diplomacy, national defense, public security, finance, propaganda, and the defense industry were within the jurisdiction of the central authorities, and no one else was allowed to take over. He then stipulated that the rebels were only allowed to seize power over the leadership of the Cultural Revolution in the ministerial organs, and they only had the power to supervise vocational work. Later, he pointed out that the supervision had to be carried out within proper limits. In February 1967, he sternly criticized the acts of certain organizations in seizing power and taking away the leadership from party committees without authorization. He said angrily: No one tells you to supervise the leadership power of the party committees. You have gone out of bounds! You cannot tell the party committee to give away their leadership power and the spear of revolution cannot be directed at the headquarters of the proletariat and Chairman Mao. He repeatedly stressed: In seizing power from a handful of capitalist roaders, we should see that during the past 17 years, Chairman Mao's red line has played a dominant role. Therefore, in some areas there are not necessarily capitalist roaders and even in the areas where there are indeed capitalist roaders, their number is small.

For another example, in regard to the problem of criticizing Lin Biao and Confucius, in August 1973, at a meeting of the Political Bureau, Jiang Qing proposed with an evil intention that the contents of Mao Zedong's talks on the struggle between the Confucianists and the Legalists in Chinese history be written into the political report of the 10th CPC National Congress which he immediately studied and implemented throughout the country. Zhou Enlai, presiding over the meeting, said that there was no need to publish this immediately because "it takes time for people to understand and digest it." In order to prevent the movement to criticize Lin Biao and Confucius, which had broken out with tremendous force, from developing into another universal and great disorder like that in the initial period of the "Great Cultural Revolution," on 31 January 1974 Zhou Enlai presided over a meeting of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee despite his ill health, and proposed that the sector under the Central Military Commission, the party and government organs, and the production sectors stipulate and issue to lower levels some policy limits. He suggested that the practice of speaking out freely, airing views fully, holding great debates, and writing big character posters not be carried out in the combat commands, confidential work, and telecommuniations, intelligence, and supply departments of the troops, and that in production sectors the movement be "carried out at a time other than production hours." After this proposal was rejected by the Jiang Qing clique on the grounds that this would "restrict the activities in mobilizing the masses of people", with the support of Comrades Ye Jianying and Deng Xiaoping, Zhou Enlai continued to persist in making plans so that the practice of speaking out freely, airing views fully, holding great debates, and writing big character posters should not be carried out within the system under the Central Military Commission. Later, in handling actual problems, he formulated some restrictive regulations.

Second, at the important junctures of the "Cultural Revolution" and when some new favorable turns emerged in the historical developments, he lost no time in promoting the changes in the political situation and influenced and pushed forward the historical process of bringing order out of chaos. As all other historical events, the "Cultural Revolution" was also a kind of historical result of forces.

During this historical tragedy, although constrained and trampled by nonhistorical factors, the inevitable demands of history always tenaciously created their own path. Precisely under these circumstances, in light of the inevitable demands of history, Zhou Enlai contained the changes in the political situation, but also firmly grasped every favorable opportunity in history to extricate the party and the country from the predicament of the "Cultural Revolution" step by step.

For example, during July and August 1967, due to the manipulation of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, the most riotous scenes since the start of the "Cultural Revolution" took place in the country. In the wake of the "20 July incident" in Wuhan, "ferreting out a small handful of capitalist roaders in the Army" occurred everywhere in the country, leading military organs were charged, arms and military equipment were seized, large-scale violent and bloody incidents sharply increased, and emergencies were reported everywhere in the country. Following the approval of the slogan of "struggling by reasoning and defending by force" by Jiang Qing, just like adding fuel to a fire, a grave situation of a "full-scale civil war" arose. In the field of foreign relations, the power of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was seized and the grave foreign-related cases of "three smashings and one burning" cropped up one after another, with the trend continuing to spread. At the time, both internal and foreign affairs were out of control and the whole situation was on the brink of collapse. At this critical juncture of life and death for the party and the country, Zhou Enlai decided promptly and opportunely to report this extremely grave situation to Mao Zedong, who was then not in Beijing, and urge him to make up his mind to adopt absolute measures, to regain control of the situation, and to put an end to this almost unmanageable situation. This became the key to changing the situation in the first stage of the "Cultural Revolution."

Another example is the incident of Lin Biao's treachery in September 1971. This was an important juncture in the history of the "Cultural Revolution." Lin Biao, the "deputy commander in chief" who was once at the height of his power and influence during the "Cultural Revolution" and the "successor" stipulated by the party Constitution, went so far as to commit treason and flee the country. He came to the disgraceful end of being buried in the desert of a foreign land. This soul-stirring fact ruthlessly proclaimed the failure of the "Cultural Revolution" both in theory and practice and had a great impact on the people. The people began to awaken and think. As the historical conditions for correcting the mistakes of the "Cultural Revolution" gradually became ripe, Zhou Enlai grasped this historical turning point to determinedly uphold the banner of repudiating the ultraleftist trend of thought; implement various policies of the party; redress some of the unjust, false, and wronged cases; consolidate and strengthen the management of enterprises; resume the normal work of cultural, educational, scientific, and technological departments; open up a new situation in foreign affairs and eliminate as much as possible the disastrous effects of the "Cultural Revolution" in every field; and thus greatly raise the degree of the ongoing struggle against the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques both in depth and breadth and make the work in every field take a turn for the better. This struggle was a kind of limited way of bringing order out of chaos under the historical condition of it being not yet possible to completely correct the mistakes of the "Cultural Revolution." It constituted an important component part of the arduous and tortuous struggle waged by the party and the people during the "Cultural Revolution" against the "leftist" mistakes.

Another example occurred in 1975: The "Cultural Revolution," which had brought severe disasters to the Chinese people, entered its 10th year. At this time the people already felt deeply disgusted and dissatisfied with this "Cultural Revolution" and urgently wanted to bring an end to this upheaval, and Zhou Enlai was again ahead of his time.

In his report on the work of the government at the Fourth National People's Congress, he reaffirmed the magnificent idea of "accomplishing the comprehensive modernization of agriculture, industry, national defense, and science and technology before the end of the century, so that our national economy will advance to the front ranks of the world." Being incompatible with the main theme of the "Cultural Revolution," it totally dispelled the oppressive political atmosphere at that time, kindled in the people's minds the fire of hope, made them see in the darkness the bright future of the motherland, and greatly inspired public feeling, thus becoming a banner guiding the struggle of the party and the people against the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique.

Finally, it should be pointed out that while trying to minimize the losses caused by the "Cultural Revolution," Zhou Enlai also had to say and do things against his will. Nevertheless, this is understood by the people, for without doing so, he could not possibly play the above two-sided historical role under the historical conditions at that time. This was an appropriate alternative that had to be adopted regarding this historical tragedy for the sake of the supreme interests of the party and the country, and was a tenacious struggle for which we had to pay the price. As for the unavoidable historical chaos produced while our whole country was under the historical shadow, we should not be overcritical and demand perfection. As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out, during the "Cultural Revolution" he himself also said and did things against his will. The comrades of our whole party all deeply understand the value of the contributions made by Comrade Zhou Enlai for the protection of the party and the people under the extremely complex and special conditions of the "Cultural Revolution."

III

While reviewing the history of the "Cultural Revolution," it is quite natural that people will raise the question: Why would Zhou Enlai always stand fast at his post and make vigorous efforts to cope with the critical situation for as long as 10 years under the extremely complex and dangerous circumstances of the "Cultural Revolution"? This is a very complicated question that requires a correct explanation. In addition to the above-mentioned factors like the support of Mao Zedong, we have to touch upon Zhou Enlai's unique form of struggle.

As a mature Marxist and long-tested proletarian statesman, since the beginning of his sensing of the abnormality of some specific issues of the "Cultural Revolution," Zhou Enlai gradually came to understand the tragic, disastrous, and protracted nature of the "Cultural Revolution." Of course, this could only be within the scope allowed by historical conditions at that time. Under the circumstances of his battle companions and the other leaders of the party and state being overthrown or ousted for various reasons, the heavy task of trying to minimize the damages wrought by this chaos of the "Cultural Revolution" historically fell on the shoulders of Zhou Enlai. This was an extremely arduous and special struggle. Here, the serious mistakes of the leader of the party were intertwined with the wanton persecution and abominable outrages of the two counterrevolutionary cliques of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing. While persevering in the erroneous guiding principle of "leftism," the leader also checked and rectified some specific errors. Lin Biao, Jiang Qing, and their like not only represented the most violent and wicked counterrevolutionary cliques, but also occupied the leading legal positions within the party at that time. These and more presented an extremely complicated situation. Therefore, in order to win the struggle, people could not just depend on their revolutionary courage, otherwise they "would butt their heads against the wall" as Lenin said. Only by proceeding from the intricate and complicated reality, making their own forms of struggle suit the possibilities of objective conditions and the needs of the struggle, and "integrating their boundless loyalty to communism with their talent at being adept in employing all the necessary tactics of compromise, flexibility, accommodation, outflanking, withdrawal, and so on," ("Selected Works of Lenin," Vol 4, p 248) could they possibly win the struggle.

Precisely under such extremely complicated circumstances as the "Cultural Revolution" did Zhou Enlai, as a mature Marxist, demonstrate his talent for highly integrating the unshakable fighting spirit with flexible tactics and show his consummate art of struggle. On the one hand, the "Resolution Regarding Some Historical Questions of the Party Since the Founding of the PRC" states that "he was boundlessly loyal to the party and the people and gave his best and all." When the party and the country were in great danger, he stepped forth bravely and waged a resolute and courageous struggle against the sabotage of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques. On the other hand, he took the interests of the whole into account, paid attention to tactics, adopted a sober-minded and rational attitude to proceed from the actual results of the struggle, and firmly grasped the proper limits and degree of the struggle to try to avoid any more unfortunate situations at a time when the party and the country had already faced great danger. To employ a vivid metaphor, we can say that, in the terrifying waves of the "Cultural Revolution," Zhou Enlai, like a weather-beaten and experienced old sailor, firmly held the helm, cautiously dodged various whirlpools and submerged rocks amid the rapids and shoals, and steadfastly sailed to the set objective while trying to reduce the losses and maintain the continuous operation of the state, to adroitly correct the mistakes of the "Cultural Revolution" and wait for an opportunity for a change in history and the general awakening of the broad masses of the people. Zhou Enlai himself once used a vivid example to illustrate his attitude towards the "Cultural Revolution." While comparing this violent and ferocious "Cultural Revolution" with rising, surging ocean currents, he said that when the tide comes in, there is playing with the waves, being swallowed by the waves, and watching the waves. If people feel frightened, they might be swallowed by the waves. If they stand aside, this is watching the waves. He then quoted Lu Xun to show his own attitude: To be a revolutionary swimmer is to play with the waves, to surf on the waves, and to adroitly meet them. With such a belief he handled all the complicated situations in the violent storm seas of the "Cultural Revolution."

Zhou Enlai adopted an analytical attitude towards the leader of the party. Regarding Mao Zedong's correct opinions at that time or the correct ideas put forward in history, he always resolutely implemented them and tried to develop them as much as possible. Among the typical examples are "the namelist of cadres who should be protected" and "to abolish the fascist investigation patterns" included in the last volume of the "Selected Works of Zhou Enlai." Another example was in following the idea of "grasping revolution and promoting production," as raised by Mao Zedong at the work conference of the central authorities in October 1966. Zhou Enlai immediately took it as a powerful weapon in the struggle against "stopping production to make revolution" instigated by Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like, until this slogan became synonymous with "grasping production" in the minds of the vast numbers of the people. Another example is that in January 1972, Mao Zedong personally attended the memorial meeting in honor of Chen Yi. When receiving Zhang Qian, the wife of Chen Yi, he said that Chen Yi was a good man as well as a good comrade and if Lin Biao's conspiracy was successful, all of us old men would be killed. He said that the nature of Deng Xiaoping's case belonged to the category of contradictions among the people. Upon hearing his, Zhou Enlai was very glad and hinted to the children of Chen Yi to try to spread this idea around. Consequently, this incident helped bring about the reinstatement of Comrade Xiaoping.

In dealing with Mao Zedong's "leftist" erroneous ides, in light of his own understanding, Zhou Enlai always aired his views and raised his suggestions within the possible limits or tried to explain and guide them from a positive viewpoint. For example, in October 1966, Mao Zedong proposed to "resolutely repudiate the reactionary line of the bourgeoisie." Regarding this, he paid a special visit to Mao Zedong and aired his views, saying that we had mentioned either "leftism" or rightism in the past when dealing with the question of lines within the party, but never "the reactionary line of the bourgeoisie." Was it appropriate to put the question in this way? However, after Mao Zedong still persisted in his viewpoint, Zhou Enlai reserved his own opinion.

In many subsequent interviews with the representatives of the masses, he repeatedly emphasized that to commit the mistake of "the reactionary line of the bourgeoisie" was only a matter of understanding and belonged to the category of contradictions among the people. It should be pointed out here that it wasn't easy to be able to do this under the conditions at that time. While reviewing the history of the "Cultural Revolution," Marshal Xu Xiangqian once said: At that time, the rebellions, the seizures of power, and the criticisms and repudiations of veteran cadres were very violent. However, none of us could say this to Chairman Mao. Influenced by the awesome power of Chairman Mao, none of us could do anything about it! Later, following Mao Zedong's proposal "to bombard the headquarters" raised at the 11th Plenary Session of the 8th CPC Central Committee, some Red Guards copied this saying and "bombarded everything" everywhere. In the face of this phenomenon, Zhou Enlai patiently enlightened the Red Guards and repeatedly stressed these viewpoints: "You should not misinterpret the bombardment of the headquarters as Chairman Mao's call to bombard all the party and government organizations." "You should not lash out in all directions and bombard all the headquarters." "It is not true that all the party and government leaders are capitalist roaders. If you view in this way, is there a place for the party Central Committee? If you have such a viewpoint, can Chairman Mao exercise his wise leadership?"

In dealing with the questions of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, as they respectively occupied important positions within the party at that time and their counterrevolutionary nature was not yet fully exposed, Zhou Enlai waged various forms of struggle against them within the scope of inner party struggle.

First, regarding some important questions, he tried to gain the support of Mao Zedong as much as possible and waged tit-for-tat struggles against the perverted actions of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques. Zhou Enlai paid special attention to this point and could only do as much as possible under the historical conditions of the time. As a result, many things were done by him with the support and connivance of Mao Zedong. For example, the question of protecting cadres: After the seizure of power in January 1967, the persecution of cadres in every region and department became increasingly serious. To cope with the situation, after emergency discussions with comrades like Li Fucun, Chen Yi, Li Xiannian, Tan Zhenlin, and others, Zhou Enlai worked out a namelist and reported it to Mao Zedong for approval. He let 20 to 30 ministers of all the ministries and commissions of the State Council, like Liao Chengzhi, Wang Zhen, Yu Giuli, Gu Mu, Fang Yi, Yao Yiling, and so on, take turns living in Zhongnanhai, and invited the secretaries of some major regions and secretaries of provinces and cities who were then in very difficult positions, such as Song Rengiong, Li Jingquan, Wang Renzhong, Ye Fei, Jiang Hua, Huang Huoqing, Wang Henshou, and so on, to Beijing and took great pains to help them settle in reliable places for protection. Jiang Qing and her like were extremely upset about this. At the regular meetings of the Cultural Revolution Group of the central authorities, they joined together to attack Zhou Enlai, questioned him closely about the whereabouts of these people, and charged him with disbelieving in the revolutionary masses' struggle by reasoning, discouraging their revolutionary enthusiasm, and protecting the capitalist roaders. In waging face-to-face struggles, Zhou Enlai fought back and said: I just do not abide by your "struggle by reasoning," and small or big struggles. This is fiercer than the ruthless struggle and merciless blows of the line of Wang Ming. Who will be responsible for the people driven to death? Thus doing, he resolutely fought back.

Second, he expertly combined firm principles with flexible tactics. For instance, in the summer of 1967, the struggle by force in the Anshan Iron and Steel Company was grave, resulting in the shutdown of many furnaces and the sharp decrease in production. Zhou Enlai was extremely worried and decided to send Li Fucun to Anshan to solve the problem. The Cultural Revolution Group of the central authorities objected to this in the first place, and then decided that Li Fucun should go together with the people they wanted to send.

Zhou Enlai knew that this would produce more chaos for the Anshan Iron and Steel Company. Therefore, he adopted the method of "delay" saying that the conditions were not yet ripe and that they should discuss it again several days later. When Jiang Qing and others accused him of not supporting the work of the Cultural Revolution Group of the central authorities in connection with this matter and "only grasping production but not the Cultural Revolution," Zhou Enlai said: What would the people eat and use if they did not grasp production and construction? What would they rely on for revolution? Later, after consultations with Liaoning Province, he sent troops to put the Anshan Iron and Steel Company under military control.

Third, while never giving in on important matters of principle, he also made some necessary compromises and concessions. For example, during the preparatory process for the Fourth National People's Congress, because Jiang Qing, Zhang Cunqiao, and others tried hard to put their trusted followers in educational, cultural, and sports departments, after discussions with Deng Xiaoping, Li Xiannian, and others on several occasions, Zhou Enlai held that it was appropriate the let Zhou Rongxin take charge of the Education Ministry as it was important, while he could make concessions in the cultural and sports ministries. By waging this resolute and tactful struggle, Zhou Enlai won the support of Mao Zedong and foiled the scheme of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique to seize the leadership of the party and the state through the reshuffle.

Fourth, for reasons known to all, when his correct ideas were negated, Zhou Enlai continued to strive to set matters aright in a roundabout way. In 1972, in order to promote the cricicism of the ultraleftist trend of thought, Zhou Enlai, who was then busy receiving the Japanese Prime Minister Tanaka, managed to find time to discuss the drafting of the National Day joint editorial of RENMIN RIBAO, JIEFANGJUN BAO, and HONGQI with the relevant personnel on a number of occasions. He proposed that the editorial mention the necessity of criticizing the ultraleftist trend of thought. But his idea was opposed by the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique. Yao Wenyuan, who was in charge of propaganda work, twice deleted the passage about criticizing ultraleftism. Although the editorial did not include the words about criticizing the ultraleftist trend of thought, it still pointed out the harmful influence of ultraleftism in various fields and positively called for "speeding up the pace of socialist construction," "continuing to implement the cadre policy, intellectual policy, and economic policy formulated by Chairman Mao in line with proletarian interests," and "encouraging people to be both 'red and expert' and to acquire professional, cultural, and technical knowledge for the purpose of revolution." This still exerted a positive influence.

Fifth, he used silence as a means of resistance and was ready to endure humiliation in order to wait for the coming of a historical turning point. Throughout the historical tragedy of the "Cultural Revolution," the inner-party political life was extremely abnormal and there was no way to express one's opinion through a normal channel. Meanwhile, Zhou Enlai was always regarded by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques as a major obstacle in their attempt to seize the party and state leadership. They always tried to kick Zhou Enlai out of the power structure. Therefore, every move of Zhou Enlai concerned the destiny of the party and the state. If he was not sober and cautious enough, he might leave some pretext for the Lin and Jiang cliques, who always watched him closely in order to knock him down in the political wrestle; and more seriously, this might bring more terrible misfortune to the party and the nation, which had been put in a very dangerous and difficult position. Zhou Enlai soberly realized this point in those days. Therefore, apart from carrying out face-to-face struggles against the Lin and Jiang cliques on some important issues, he often kept silent and used silence as a means of resistance and struggle. How did Zhou Enlai pass those days and nights when the party and the nation were suffering heavily! Jiang Qing, who relied on her special position, led her followers and members of the Lin Biao clique to attack Zhou Enlai at almost every meeting. They made trouble, found fault, cooked up charges, exaggerated problems, and endlessly pestered Zhou Enlai. This inflicted untold mental torture upon him.

However, Zhou Enlai endured all humiliation and swallowed all insults and tenaciously insisted on working and struggling for the supreme interests of the party and the nation. He made painstaking efforts to wrestle with the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques in order to prevent them from taking advantage of any opportunity. Not only did many ordinary comrades not understand Zhou Enlai on this point, but some of his old comrades-in-arms over the past decades also failed to completely understand him. For example, Tan Zhenlin wrote with confused feelings in a letter to refute Jiang Qing during the "February resistance" in 1967: "Comrade Premier, you have been terribly troubled by them. You are broad-minded. You can handle such things easily and can exercise restraint, but how can you wait and wait? How long will you wait? Even misunderstood by his comrades, Zhou Enlai did not give any explanation. He just tenaciously and persistently went his way toward the goal he had determined. He firmly believed that he would eventually be understood by the people and by history. When the "February resistance" came to an abortive end, Zhou Enlai disregarded the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques' accusation that he was the "behind-the-scenes backer" for people who staged the "February adverse current" and tried by every possible means to protect the old comrades who were wrongly criticized in spite of the fact that he himself was also in a difficult position. His effort to put Chen Yi under his protection was a well-known and touching example. In addition, when Zhou Enlai learned that Tan Zhenlin fell and broke a bone, he asked Wei Guoqing to take care of Tan and ensure medical treatment for him. In December 1972, after Mao Zedong inquired about the condition of Tan Zhenlin, Zhou Enlai immediately wrote a letter to a responsible person, saying that Tan Zhenlin is a good comrade. "The Huairentang incident was caused deliberately by Lin Biao, who was then trying to overthrow a large number of old comrades." "Tan Zhenlin should be allowed to return to Beijing." As a result of Zhou Enlai's efforts, shortly after that, Tan Zhenlin was allowed to return to Beijing.

As an old saying goes: The force of the wind tests the strength of the grass, and the true and faithful can be easily spotted in time of trouble. At the critical moment when the party and the nation experienced unprecedented turmoil, Zhou Enlai shared weal and woe and went through thick and thin with the whole party and with the people. He shed his heart's blood and took infinite pains to struggle against the historical tragedy in our country, showing his faithfulness and dedication to the party and the people and making the final years of his life shine with great brilliance. He could not use his own hands to bring an end to the turmoil, but he used his flesh and blood to pave a tortuous path toward that goal and laid the foundation for the eventual termination of that historical disaster in China. His meritorious deeds in this regard will never fade away in history, and his immortal name will always remain in the hearts of the people and will always earn the respect of the world.

ZHU MUZHI ON CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

[Speech by Zhu Muzhi at a forum on strategies for cultural development: "Several Questions To Be Taken Into Consideration in Formulating Strategies for Cultural Development"]

[Text] The issue of the cultural development strategy is a big issue of great importance. Culture can be approached in a broad sense or in a narrow sense. The scope of work handled by the Ministry of Culture is rather narrow. In fact, the Ministry of Culture cannot shoulder the task of studying the strategy for cultural development. But I agree with the holding of such a meeting and also agree to discuss cultural development in a broader sense. In the past, the Ministry of Culture merely approached matters from the narrow scope of its work. So our vision was not broad enough. Now many comrades have discussed this issue from a broad point of view. They have given us great help. Of course, the Ministry of Culture can only take action in the fields which are under its jurisdiction.

The issue of strategy has a bearing on the overall situation. So on cultural development strategy should not merely deal with cultural work itself; instead, it should place cultural work in the development of the whole country in all fields. In the next few decades, our socialist modernization program will be divided into three major stages: In the first stage, which extends to the year 2000, we will quadruple the industrial and agricultural output value and raise the people's living standards to a comparatively high level; in the second stage, which covers the first 2 or 3 decades of next century, we will build China into an intermediate developed country; and in the third stage, we will raise the level of China's economic development and rank China among the advanced countries in the world by the middle of the next century. Then China will become a prosperous and powerful, socialist modern country. When formulating the cultural development strategy, consideration should be given to the development of things in the political, economic, and diplomatic fields in the three stages and be given to the overall social development and the trend of changes. Only by studying these issues can we place culture in a correct position and realize what requirements our culture should meet in the future periods. As the last two stages are still far away and it is difficult for us to consider the cultural development from now to the end of this century. This may be more realistic.

The economic structural reform in our country is bound to give rise to major changes in people's economic life, cultural life, and lifestyle. Our cultural development strategy should be suited to these changes and should make contributions to these changes. Like economic workers, we should also make in-depth investigations to gather large quantities of data and materials. For example, what will the people require in their cultural life after their living standards rise to a comparatively high level? How much money will they spend on cultural items? We should calculate and forecast these things scientifically. At the same time, we should also consider the possible changes in people's minds.

I have a tentative idea. That is, the content of the cultural development strategy can be divided into three parts: ideological construction, knowledge enhancement, and the development of cultural facilities.

Ideological construction should be focused on communist ideology. That is, people's consciousness should be raised and they should be encouraged to establish a firm communist belief. This issue is complicated and important and it also involves many concrete issues, such as how to correctly treat Chinese and foreign cultures both in ancient and modern times, how to judge right and wrong, how to set standards for permission, how to distinguish quality from slipshod work, and how to coordinate improvement and popularization. Cultural construction is also a big issue concerning the improvement of the educational level of the whole nation. At present, there is still a large number of illiterate people in the country. The Ministry of Culture has also done its best to solve this issue. We should work out an overall arrangement for raising the scientific and educational level of the whole nation through the formulation of the cultural development strategy. Apart from the above two issues, we also have to develop our cultural facilities. The building of a spiritual civilization also relies on a material foundation. Without necessary manpower and material resources, it is impossible to conduct the building of a spiritual civilization. Now our cultural facilities remain backward. In our capital, so far we have not yet had a national theater and an art museum for displaying outstanding art works on a permanent basis. It was not long ago that we had no small concert hall. The development of cultural facilities is an important part of our cultural development in general.

Our cultural development strategy should be in harmony with economic development strategy. We may say that there is now a disproportion between economic development and cultural development. When I went to some provinces, I found that their per capita cultural expenditure was merely 0.05 yuan. If this proportion remains unchanged, it will be hard for us to simultaneously develop the two civilizations. The national expenditure for culture and education has also increased too slowly. It is hard to say how much money has really been appropriated for various cultural units. Therefore, some people have proposed that money be earmarked for cultural purposes. Now many cultural units are complaining and they need money. Without money they cannot do anything. For example, libraries hold an important position in the development of the two civilizations. We emphasize that respect should be shown for knowledge and people of learning. Libraries are places where knowledge is concentrated. However, the conditions in our libraries are very poor. I have visited a provincial library where, when the temperature fell to around 0 degrees, the windows of the reading room had no glass panes and a ragged blanket was used to shelter the room from the wind. The room was full of people, but there were very few seats. How could such libraries meet the needs of the people? We must make careful investigations to find a way to coordinate cultural and economic development and to find out how much money the state should invest in cultural facilities.

When formulating the cultural development strategy, we should also study reforms in the cultural field. Without reform there will be no new situation. So reform should be included in the development strategy. The CPC Central Committee's proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan points out that some explorations should be made to promote reforms in the cultural field. Such explorations are under way, and some cultural and art units have been trying to reshape the system. But further studies are necessary to find a reasonable arrangement of things. For example, many theaters and cinemas have found that their incomes are falling, and many theatrical companies have encountered economic difficulties and have suffered losses. How should we solve these problems? In the long run, with the popularization of TV and video recorders, the box-office income of theaters and cinemas will continue to fall (of course, they will still have an audience). So the development and arrangement of drama and movies must be suited to this state of affairs. As another example, the cultural facilities run by CYL organizations and trade unions are much better than those run by the units under the Ministry of Culture. Industrial enterprises have money to organize cultural activities, but the cultural units are very poor. Henceforth, when planning cultural development, we should also consider the abilities of trade unions, CYL organizations, and enterprises.

Reform of the system for cultural and art work must comply with the objective rules governing the development of culture and art. At present, most cultural facilities are run by administrative means. We should study this issue and work some measures to change this management pattern. Reforms will touch the operation of the cultural facilities. People generally agree with the principles on the relationship between economic results and social results. But it is not easy to handle some concrete issues. For example, many cultural stations and cultural bureaus are very poor. Can they also do business to increase their incomes in order to develop cultural services? In the previous period, trouble appeared because some cultural units provided services in a commercial way. But if they stop those profitmaking businesses, they will not be able to provide better services for the public, because they can get very limited funds from the state and some of them can only use the money to pay personnel.

When formulating the strategy for cultural development, we should pay attention to the training of cultural workers. We should seriously study how many talented people we should train in every period and should learn the situation in the movement of trained personnel. The present problem is some institutions are overstaffed and have become unwieldy but many people cannot really display their abilities.

The last point I want to mention is the issue of leadership. The party must exercise leadership over culture. This is beyond question. However, how to exercise this leadership is a big question. In recent years, the central authorities have made great efforts to promote cultural development, and things in the cultural field have changed greatly. But problems still exist in large number. How to exercise leadership is also a question that concerns legislation. That is to say, we should consider what laws should be enacted and what are most urgently needed. We should study these questions in a serious and down-to-earth manner.

FINANCE OFFICIAL SPEAKS ON TREASURY BONDS

[Text] Beijing, 19 Jan (XINHUA) -- A responsible person of the Ministry of Finance recently replied to questions from XINHUA reporters on some issues relating to treasury bond regulations.

Question: Could you review the issuance of treasury bonds in China over the past several years? What role have treasury bonds played?

Answer: China has issued a total of 23 billion yuan of treasury bonds in a period of 5 years since 1981, exceeding the target by 7.7 percent. Aside from using a portion of the funds raised by the issuance of treasury since 1981 to make up for the financial deficit of the preceding year, the funds have been used for the development of key construction projects and other undertakings in accordance with unified state plans. The issuance of treasury bonds has played a positive role in China's national economic development and the building of the four modernization.

Question: Compared with previous years, what changes have been made in the issuance of treasury bonds in 1986?

Answer: The interest rate for treasury bonds issued this year has been raised. The annual interest rate for treasury bonds purchased by units has been raised from 5 to 6 percent, higher than the interest rate offered by banks to units for time deposits of 3 or more years. The annual interest rate for treasury bonds purchased by individuals has been raised from 9 to 10 percent, also higher than the interest rate for bank savings deposits.

Question: What are the prominent issues with regard to the issuance of treasury bonds in 1986?

Answer: First, we must properly mobilize propaganda work. The treasury bonds have been issued for some years; their significance is understood by most people. However, there are still some people who do not clearly realize this significance. Hence, it is necessary to vigorously publicize the significance of issuing treasury bonds. Second, we must work for a more rational allocation of treasury bonds. The allocation of treasury bonds among workers and peasants must be conducted in the light of their incomes and actual purchasing power. Those with a higher purchasing power should be encouraged to buy more while those with a lower purchasing power should be allocated a smaller number of treasury bonds. Those who still have difficulties in their livelihood and are thus incapable of buying any treasury bonds should not be allocated any at all. The allocation of treasury bonds among units should be done proportionately, according to their respective financial resources, that is, according to their available extrabudgetary funds and the profits retained after paying taxes.

The responsible person told the XINHUA reporters: Because the issuance of treasury bonds involves many factors, the concerned departments must closely coordinate their efforts and do a good job in carrying out this task.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN ON DEVELOPING ECONOMY

[Excerpt] "Village and town enterprises must be developed actively and the economy must be invigorated by various means," stressed Comrade Xiang Nan at a conference held in Fuzhou City for representatives of village and town enterprises, rural specialized households, and economic associations. The conference dealt, in part, with support for poor households.

Comrade Xiang Nan made these remarks at the conference after visiting four neighborhood factories in Fuzhou City. He said: Fujian Province's gross industrial and agricultural output value in 1985 grew by some 20 percent, but the output value of village and town enterprises jumped 75 percent. What growth rate should we adopt in 1986? It is not good for the growth rate to be too fast or too slow. The growth of the economy must be compatible with actual conditions. We must fully tap the potential of the masses, the mountains, and the sea, while taking into consideration the various limiting factors. We must activate the economy instead of strangling it.

Comrade Xiang Nan continued: In "supporting poor households in achieving prosperity" and in developing village and town enterprises and neighborhood industry, we must, besides strengthening party and government leadership, pay particular attention to the role of the industrial, commercial, and banking sectors and the tax departments. These sectors and departments must pool their principal efforts to develop production, activate the economy, and earn more foreign exchange. We must energetically support the masses in raising funds. With the banks curtailing loans, the state making no investments, and the masses prohibited from raising funds, how can the economy be developed? It was a great, laudable event that the masses in our province raised 420 million yuan in 1985 for developing communes and production-brigade-run enterprises. What is wrong with the masses pooling their money to run small factories? It is a good practice: nothing is wrong. It is hoped that the concerned departments will support and assist village and town enterprises and spur on the work of "supporting poor households in achieving prosperity."

JIANGXI ISSUES CIRCULAR ON UNHEALTHY PRACTICES

OW232347 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee issued a circular on 16 January, calling on all party members and cadres throughout the province to conscientiously study and implement the speeches by Hu Yaobang and other leading comrades at the conference of cadres of central organs, start with provincial-level organs and the leadership, unite as one from top to bottom, and strive to bring about a fundamental change for the better in party style in the province. The circular pointed out:

1. It is necessary to organize party members and cadres to earnestly study the speeches of the central leading comrades. The leading cadres at all levels must take the lead in studying, preparing and implementing reforms in close connection with the local conditions.

2. It is essential to study the aforementioned speeches while carrying out party rectification, put the guidelines laid down by the speeches into practice and achieve actual results. To improve party style, the key lies in practice. Various units must sum up their experiences, analyze the actual party style situation in close connection with the local conditions, and carefully check the existing problems in their own unit. As far as our province is concerned, we must combat the six unhealthy practices -- the unhealthy tendency of party and government organs and cadres doing business and running enterprises, and leading cadres' sons, daughters, and spouses engaged in commercial activities in violation of party discipline; the unhealthy trend of making use of public funds to present gifts and abusing one's authority in accepting gifts, and of offering and receiving bribes; the unhealthy practice of using public funds for extravagant eating and drinking in violation of government regulations; the unhealthy tendency of showing off and spending money without measure and buying automobiles, particularly high-class limousines; the unhealthy trend of party members and cadres building and dividing living quarters in violation of government regulations; the unhealthy practice of playing tricks to seek private interests.

[illegible] imperative to investigate cases violating state laws and party discipline, particularly cases involving major offenses. The party committees and discipline inspection commissions at all levels must carefully investigate and handle each case in correcting unhealthy tendencies. They must handle each case directly they finish investigating each case. They should handle each case and make use of it to educate the general public. In no way should they tolerate evil, merely saying that this is not to be repeated.

4. It is necessary to carefully check and implement the system and the enforcement of party discipline. Efforts must be made to continuously implement those rules and regulations on how to run party and government organs, as long as they are effective and practical and meet the requirements of improving party style.

5. The party committees at all levels must strengthen their efforts in checking cadres' proficiency, while trying hard to improve party style. It is essential to promote to leading posts those comrades with strong party spirit and fine party style, who dare to oppose and resist unhealthy tendencies. We must quickly readjust leading bodies of those units refusing to improve their poor party style or to strengthen their leadership in combating unhealthy tendencies, and resolutely remove from leading posts those people who are fond of carrying out illicit practices, are evil-minded and who seize every opportunity to trickery to gain private interests deviate from the party's line, do little in the way of actual deeds, abuse their authority to seek personal gain, and cut themselves off from the masses.

SHANGHAI CIRCULAR ON STUDYING LEADERS' SPEECHES

OW221255 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] The Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee recently issued a circular calling on party and government organizations at various levels in Shanghai to organize all party members and cadres, especially leading cadres of municipal-level organizations, to seriously study the speeches made by central leading comrades at the meeting of cadres of central organs and to be models in improving party conduct.

The circular says: We must use the study as a powerful motive force in promoting reform work and the policy of opening to the outside world and doing a good job in all our work. We must constantly raise our work efficienty and quality.

The circular emphatically points out: We must strictly and firmly observe discipline and the regulations formulated by the party Central Committee and the State Council. It points out: We must be firm and have the courage to step up the crackdown on major and serious cases.

SHANGHAI'S JIANG ZEMIN ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

OW240240 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The Discipline Inspection Commission and the Political and Legal Commission under the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee jointly called a meeting yesterday afternoon to severely punish serious economic criminals.

Jiang Zenin, deputy secretary of the municipal party committee and mayor of the municipality, attended and addressed the meeting.

After the first instance of 12 serious economic cases involving 30 criminals, the municipal Intermediate People's Court pronounced judgments on them according to law.

Wu Shengming, a major speculator and swindler, was sentenced to death yesterday for having defrauded people of more than 500,000 yuan between August 1984 and May 1985.

Ji Yonghe, a thief, was also sentenced to death for having stolen over 108,000 yuan worth of industrial materials.

In his speech at the meeting, Mayor Jiang Zemin said: Party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and judicial and public security organs at various levels should focus their attention primarily on discovering, investigating, and handling major or serious cases. All such cases must be thoroughly investigated no matter how complicated they are or what organization and cadres are involved. In sternly dealing with these cases, it is essential to uphold the principle that everyone is equal before the law.

Mayor Jiang said: Economic criminal activities are very serious in the current situation. Some people have been taking advantage of the implementation of reforms and opening to the outside world to wantonly commit various economic crimes. The large amounts of money involved and the serious circumstances of such cases have rarely been seen since the founding of the PRC. Some of these cases involved hundreds of thousands or millions of yuan. In the municipality last year, 3,196 economic criminal cases were placed on file for investigation and prosecution, an all-time high in recent years. Economic criminal activities are wisespread in some localities, where leading cadres are bureaucratic to a serious extent and have no idea of how things stand. Some of these leading cadres are even taken in time and again. Leading cadres of a very small number of units -- whose activities are also questionable in money matters -- are afraid that they will be implicated if certain cases are discovered. This is why they have set up obstacles to the investigation of such cases.

Mayor Jiang pointed out: It should be understood that those engaged in graft and embezzlement naturally must be punished according to law. And bribery is also a violation of the law. So both those who offer bribes and those who accept bribes should be investigated. Serious cases of bribery must not be dismissed lightly as unhealthy tendencies, and those involved in such cases must be investigated. It is necessary to crack down on speculation and swindling activities. Responsible cadres and other personnel who have given the green light to speculation and swindling activities should all be dealt with according to law no matter whether or not they have lined their pockets with ill-gotten gains. As for those members of enterprises and institutions who have collectively committed crimes, the chief plotters and those involved should be investigated.

In conclusion, Mayor Jiang said: It is a long-term, regular, and important task of the entire party to crack down on grave economic criminal activities. This struggle must be carried out resolutely and persistently. Party committees at various levels should give priority to the struggle. Discipline inspection commissions, judicial and public security organs, customs offices. and industrial and commercial administration departments should coordinate closely with one another and work with one heart and one mind to deepen the struggle against grave economic crimes.

LIANG XIANG ON CONSTRUCTION, DEVELOPMENT IN SHENZHEN

["Excerpts" from report given by Comrade Liang Xiang, secretary of Shenzhen CPC Committee, at meeting of cadres of organs directly subordinate to central government: "Construction and Development in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone"]

[Text] It has been more than 5 years since the establishment of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone [SEZ]. How has the SEZ been faring? What are its developmental prospects? People throughout the country are concerned with this problem.

In December 1978, the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee adopted the guideline of "opening up to the outside world and invigorating the internal economy." How to open up to the outside would was a new problem. It required probing on various sides. One of the methods was to designate certain areas along the coast to experimentally establish special economic zones so that, following the gaining of experience, further extension and progress could be made. In May 1980, the central authorities decided on the establishment of "special economic zones." In August of the same year, the NPC Standing Committee promulgated the "Regulations Governing Special Economic Zones in Guangdong Province" and formally sanctioned the establishment of the Shenzhen, Zhuhai, and Shantou special economic zones.

The Shenzhen SEZ was established under the direct concern and leadership of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee, and the Guangdong Provincial People's Government.

Our understanding of the strategic tasks of the SEZ has gradually deepened and continuously improved. In the initial period of the establishment of the SEZ, our attention was more taken up by solving the labor employment problem, bringing prosperity to the local economy, and stabilizing social order along the border areas. Moreover, due to the influence of the patterns of "export processing zones" and "free trade zones" of foreign countries, we thought that the SEZ should be closed to the interior and thus neglected economic combination with the interior. The structure of the SEZ also followed the pattern of the interior.

When Comrade Ziyang visited Shenzhen, he said: "Reform of the structure of the SEZ should lead it away from the existing structure." In early 1983 when Comrade Yaobang visited Shenzhen, he pointed out that the SEZ should "handle special matters in a special way, new matters in a new way, not waver in its stand, and find completely new methods." In the spring of 1984 when Comrade Xiaoping visited the SEZ, he pointed out that the it should be the "window of technology, window of knowledge, window of management, and window of external policy." At the end of the same year, Comrade Ziyang again visited Shenzhen and pointed out that the faculty of the special zone "window" should play the important role of casting light on the exterior and interior "screens." These important directives from the leadership comrades of the central government have enabled us to make a new leap forward in our understanding of the strategic tasks of special zones.

We understand that the tasks borne by special zones may be generalized into three separate categories: First, introduction of advanced technology, interpretation of information, learning from scientific management methods, and playing the role of a pivot, radiating to the "four windows" and two "screens"; second, serving as the experimental ground for structural reform, and through the reform of the special zones and summing up the experiences therefrom, providing the interior with beneficial references; and third, serving as the base for personnel training, so that through the special zones' practice, many more cadres will be able to learn the capabilities of organizing domestic construction and developing external economic relations.

I. Achievements of the SEZ

In founding an SEZ in a socialist country, there is no precedent from which to copy. We have followed the wishes and demands of the central authorities and groped our way forward. Over the past 5 years and more, we have principally performed certain types of foundation work.

1. Establishing a relatively good investment environment

Shenzhen was originally a desolate village on the border with extremely poor basic facilities, particularly in the energy, telecommunications, and transportation sectors. It was obviously impossible to rely on an area of paddy fields, bare hills, and wild country to attract foreign capital, introduce advanced technology, and run modernized factories. Hence, in the past several years we have centralized a large force of manpower, financial power, and material resources and seriously undertaken the construction of fundamental engineering projects, endeavoring to create a lucrative investment environment.

We have followed the guideline of planning one project, developing that project, and reaping benefits from it, and, in a planned and systematic manner, have carried out the basic engineering projects of the new city area of Luohu and Shangbu, and area of 36 square km. The construction of "seven categories of projects and leveling of land" included installation of electric power, thoroughfares, waterworks, and telephone facilities, flood prevention, and prevention of environmental pollution, and the leveling of land. In all, over 80 city thoroughfares with a total length of over 100 km were newly built or extended. The three industrial zones of Shekou, Shangbu, and Bagualing were built with certain facilities initially completed. In addition, intensive construction work was in progress on four more industrial zones, including Shahe. A number of cultural, tourism, and commercial service facilities, city building projects, and dormitories for staff members and workers were also completed. At the same time, imporvements of conditions in the energy, transportation, and telecommunications sectors were made. On the energy side, foreign capital was introduced to build the Shajiao thermal power plant with a generating capacity of 700,000 kilowatts. The first generating set, with a 350,000 kilowatt capacity, will be in operation in the third quarter of 1987. In communications, a helicopter airfield was built, building work was completed on four wharves in the port area, and a water-land communications and transportation network was initially completed. In the field of telecommunications, 11,000 sets of long distance-capable telephones were available for use for direct communication with Hong Kong and a score of cities and towns in the interior.

After several years of effort, a favorable investment environment for attracting foreign capital has been initially created.

In these several years of capital construction, the aggregate investment made amounted to about 6 billion yuan. In capital construction, the total area completed covered some 8.08 million square meters of land. The composition of the sources of funds was as follows:

About 20 percent from introduction of foreign funds;

About 27 percent raised by the city itself;

About 12 percent invested by domestic joint enterprise in Shenzhen organized by the ministries of the central government and the various provinces and municipalities throughout the country;

About 30 percent from bank loans;

About 3 percent from state investments; and

About 8 percent from other sources (including the projected nuclear power station).

In creating the investment environment, we also grasped economic legislation work and formulated a score of legislative measures, while a number of them are being submitted to the upper level organs for examination and approval.

2. Introduction of foreign capital and advanced technology

In the 5 years of establishment of the SEZ, merchants from 17 countries and regions have come to Shenzhen to invest and to establish enterprises. According to statistics, by October of this year over 4,300 agreements had been signed with foreign merchants. The contracts involve a gross investment of $3.1 billion, of which $840 million has already been put to use. This represents one-seventh of the total direct foreign investment in the whole country. Over 30,000 sets of various kinds of equipment have also been introduced, including machines for making electric cables and electric wires, plastics setting, machines, air-flow weaving machines, automatic electronic inserting machines, hole punch machines for the printing trade, production lines for laser audio-visual systems, production lines for hollow glass blocks, production lines for knitted plastic bags, processing equipment for precision molds; equipment for making magnetic fluid for magnetic tapes, equipment for making microelectronic circuits, large equipment for injecting plastics; equipment for making hard plastic plates, production technology for equipment for satellite earthstations, advanced formulae for electroplating additives, electrically-heated air-flow rotating sintering furnaces, and so on. All this technical equipment is at the advanced level of the 1980's. Some fills gaps for us, and some tackles tough problems within the country.

Following the introduction of foreign capital and technology, a number of enterprises in the SEZ financed solely by foreign merchants and (cooperative) enterprises jointly invested in by Chinese and foreign interests have been formed. The operating conditions of these enterprises related to outside investment were in general good, and over 85 percent of them have yielded profits. Some 400 different kinds of their products have found their way into international markets.

We have also developed economic cooperation work with the interior. We have made use of the various superiorities of the interior to solve the problems of our insufficient capital, shortage of talented personnel, and lack of material resources. We have swiftly transferred to the interior the advanced technology we have introduced, and also the scientific management methods and market information and news, thus promoting the interior's economic development. At present, in the municipality there are 969 enterprises jointly operated with the mainland. Of these, 338 are related to the 25 ministries and departments of the central government, 395 to the 27 provinces, municipalities, and regions throughout the country, and 236 to local districts (cities and towns). This shows the support rendered by the country to the SEZ in the fields of technology, capital, and personnel. The internally related enterprises have generally produced good economic results. According to 1984 statistics, the profits made by the internally-related enterprises in the whole SEZ amounted to 500 million yuan, which is equivalent to the total financial revenue produced by the Shenzhen SEZ during that year. In our opinion, under the conditions of equality and mutual benefit, for both parties to obtain economic benefits is a normal phenomenon.

3. Developing a special zone economy with the major emphasis on industry

Industry in the SEZ has achieved great development. Compared with 1979, the number of industrial enterprises has increased from 224 to over 750 at present, an increase of over 300 percent; the size of the staff has increased from over 8,700 people to over 60,000 people, and increase of 700 percent; and the gross industrial output value increased from over 60 million yuan to 1.8 billion yuan in 1984, an increase of 2,900 percent. This year, the gross industrial output value is expected to reach 2.4 billion yuan, an increase of 33 percent over the preceding year. Industry's internal structure has also undergone an obvious change. Whereas, formerly, processing of incoming materials was the chief task, now it has shifted to mainly the self-production of goods. At present there are over 800 varieties of self-produced goods. Among the industries and trades are the electronics. machine-building, textile, light, pharmaceutical, petrochemical, construction materials, and food-processing industries. Starting as mainly labor-intensive, the industries have gradually shifted to being mainly technology-intensive. Of the industrial projects completed in 1984, about 11 percent belonged to the "two intensive types." New developments are taking place this year.

Sales of products are gradually developing in an external direction. In 1984, the gross volume of sales of industrial products amounted to 1.1 billion yuan. Of this, 33 percent were exported abroad, and if we include the portion offset by the exchange of imports, the total external sales amounted to 48 percent. From January to September this year, the volume of sales of the industrial products of the SEZ amounted to 1.3 billion yuan. Of this, 43 percent were exported abroad, and if we include the portion offset by the exchange of imports, the total external sales amounted to 57 percent. At present, the structure of the industries and products of the SEZ are developing the direction of being "light, small, precise, and new."

In agriculture, the SEZ has initiately formed a fairly large base for the production of fresh and live products. At present its production capacity in regard to the principal categories of fresh and live products is as follows: live chickens, 10 million head; large swine, 300,000 head, of which 50 percent are lean-meat swine; milk, 20,000 tons: freshwater fish, 20,000 tons; and vegetables, 180,000 tons. Agriculture is developing in a commercialized, specialized, and collectivized direction.

Relatively large developments are found in commerce, foreign trade, communication, finance, and currency, tourism, restaurant services, culture, public health, and education. In 1980 the municipality's GNP amounted to 2.3 billion yuan. The per capita GNP was 3,700 yuan and the per capita annual national income surpassed $1,000. The GNP in 1985 is anticipated to amount to 2.9 billion yuan. Compared with 1980 (as is also the case below), the 1985 GNP will see an increase of 640 percent; retail sales of social commodities will amount to 2.3 billion yuan, an increase of 1,000 percent; financial revenues are estimated to be 800 million yuan, an increase of 1,300 percent; and foreign exchange earnings belonging to the municipality are estimated to be $660 million. From January to October this year, 879 contracts had been signed with foreign merchants, with the investment amounts totalling over $800 million. The amount of investment funds already in use is over $240 million. Compared with the corresponding period of last year, the respective increases were 9.3 percent, 69.9 percent, and 80.7 percent. A situation of sustained, stable, and all-round development has thus appeared in the SEZ economy.

4. Notable improvements in the standard of living of the populace

Following the special zone's development in production, the standard of living of the people has improved.

In 1984, the per capita income for the people in the SEZ amounted to 1,700 yuan, and 80 percent of the peasants have built new houses. The salaries and wages of staff members and workers in enterprise units have also increased. In externally-related enterprises, the agreements provide that the labor fee should be 800 Hong Kong dollars. For 5 years, there has been no change. In the interval, in Hong Kong, due to currency inflation, the level of wages has risen. As a result, labor wages in the SEZ are approximately one-third that in Hong Kong. As for the state-run collective enterprises, the original wage level was rather low, but because of the influence of externally-related enterprises, it has been gradually raised. At present the social wage level is 200 yuan. Following the reform of the wage level in administrative enterprise units, and with the concurrence of the Ministry of Labor and Personnel and the approval of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government the average wage is now 187 yuan, thus bringing about an average social wage level which is "higher than the interior but lower than Hong Kong." However, the increase in wages is lower than the increase in the labor productivity rate. With the reform in wages and the reform in commodity prices progressing simultaneously, and with commodity prices being liberalized while bonuses and subsidies are being abolished, in actuality, the wages in the SEZ are not much higher than in Guangzhou. Following the rise in the standard of living on the material side, spiritual and cultural life have been enriched and improved. Before the formation of the SEZ, there was the phenomenon of an outflow of a large number of people. Now, not only has this phenomenon stopped, but over 1,000 people have returned from Hong Kong to live in the SEZ.

These successes of the Shenzhen SEZ are the result of the central government's deep concern, the correctness of their guidelines and policies, the concrete leadership of the provincial CPC Committee and of the provincial people's government, powerful support rendered by various localities of the country, and the energetic efforts made by the cadres and people of Shenzhen.

The special zone's tasks are still faced with many problems. The main ones are:

First, the competitive power of products of the SEZ on the international markets is still not strong enough. The number of products finding their way directly onto the international markets is not up to expectations. As a result, there is an imbalance between industry's internal administrative expenses and its foreign exchange earnings capacity (for the SEZ as a whole, its foreign exchange earnings are more than balanced).

Second, due to the special zone's overly rapid development, management work has not quite been in step. In certain enterprises, operations and management are in a state of confusion and the economic results are not high. Because the economic legislation and various kinds of regulations and rules are not healthy enough and the economic management, control, and supervision departments have not fully brought their functions and roles into full play, many loopholes exist which have given illegal elements good opportunities to run amok. As a result, various kinds of economic crimes have occurred, including foreign exchange speculation, resale of imported goods, and so forth.

Third, the reform has not been accompanied by the necessary follow-up and auxiliary work. A macrocontrol structure has not yet been completely set up and the management structure cannot yet meet the needs of external economic development.

Fourth, the construction work of spiritual civilization still has many weak links, and there are instances of certain cadres using their authority for private gain, engaging in improper practices, wantonly giving bonuses or making grants in kind, raising salaries and wages in a disorderly way, indulging in showing off and extravagance, giving parties, sending gifts, and so on.

Fifth, there is still a lack of talented personnel. The quality of the original cadres and staff members and workers still remains to be improved.

These are the problems met in the course of progress. Some belong to the development stage. Some are the results of insufficient experience and of errors in work, while some are simply unavoidable in the course of development. They all require our full attention, and we should adopt the necessary measures to solve them.

II. Role Played by the SEZ

"The whole country supports the special zone, and the special zone serves the whole country." Development of the special zone is inseparable from aid from the whole country, while the development of the special zone must be in the service of the whole country. Actual practice has shown that the special zone relies on the interior and, conversely, the interior uses the special zone as a "window." There are thus reciprocal benefits. Since its establishment, the Shenzhen SEZ has initially displayed the following functions:

1. Helping the promotion of opening the coastal areas to the outside.

As one of the "experimental stations" for our country's opening up to the outside world, the Shenzhen SEZ was established rather early, has been developed on a rather large scale, and, in actual practice, has initially gained certain experience. When inspecting the special zone in January 1984, Comrade Xiaoping pointed out: "Shenzhen's development and experiences have proven the correctness of our policy of summarizing the experiences of the special zones throughout the country, the central government resolved to further open to the outside 14 coastal cities and towns and Hainan Island. Following this, it decided to add the Zhu Jiang Delta, Chang Jiang Delta, and the Xiazhangchuan Delta in southern Fujian to the economically opening areas along the coast. This has brought about a situation of the initial opening up to the outside world of the coastline starting from Dalian in the north to Beihai in the south. Furthermore, by means of opening the special zone and the coastal cities to the outside, advanced technology, scientific management methods, and information can be introduced, thus helping in promoting the economic and technical development of the interior. In our opinion, this is a concrete realization of developing our country's strategic policy of flexibly "resting on the east and shifting to the west."

2. Initially playing the radiating roles of a "window" and of casting light on the "screens"

The SEZ has achieved fairly good results through jointly establishing enterprises with the interior, cooperating with them in production, conducting discussion meetings, technology exchange meetings, and training classes, staging fairs in the interior to market products of the special zone, and transferring to the interior the advanced technology and scientific management methods introduced from abroad and market information and news. For example, the Hualian Textile Co. Ltd. last year introduced to the interior textile enterprises the advanced Japanese equipment and technology known as "yarn end cutting," and thus raised their technological level, enabling them to develop new products to break into the Hong Kong market. This has helped to increase their foreign exchange earning capacity by 800 percent in comparison with their former products.

In addition, the SEZ has initially introduced products from the interior for deep processing to increase their export value and thus earn more foreign exchange. For example, the Hualian Textile Co. Ltd. and the machine-building industry have transplanted such well-known brand products as the cotton yarn of Changzhou, ramie and poplin cloth of Guangxi, knitted garments of Guangzhou, printed and dyed cloth of Shanghai, electrically welded bars of Sichuan, and electrical machines of Shanghai to Shenzhen, where advanced technological equipment was introduced and imported for their production.

This has greatly strengthened their competitive power in export trade.

3. Providing reform in the interior with certain models for copying

Since 1981, the SEZ has done much exploratory work in reform and has successively effected reforms in the planned management structure, capital construction management structure, circulation structure, currency structure, commodity prices structure, labor wages system, cadre and personnel system, and so on. Among them, certain procedures served as good references for the interior. We may cite examples, such as changing from investment to bank loans in building the special zone's basic facilities, changing to the tender system in capital construction projects, changing to the contract system in labor employment, using the methods of inviting applications, election, and stipulating a term of office in the appointment of cadres, adopting a liberalization policy in regard to the prices of meat, vegetables, grain, and edible oil, and, in the field of finance, collecting fees for the use of land.

4. Tempering and training up of a number of talented persons

About 30,000 cadres have been dispatched to units stationed in Shenzhen by the central government, the various provinces and municipalities, and various enterprise units in the interior operating jointly with Shenzhen enterprises. Of them, over 4,000 are technical cadres with the qualifications of engineers or above. In their external economic work, they have, on the one hand, rendered support to the SEZ and, on the other, added much to their talent. Upon their return to the interior, many of them have played an important role in their various occupations. The Kong Le Electronics Company, a jointly operated concern of the Harbin Wireless Equipment Plant, and the SEZ transferred the whole technological process to the Harbin plant as well as a portion of the technical personnel and production workers, and produced in the same year 10,000 sets of the "Double Kong Le" brand double-cassette recorders, reaping a profit of 800,000 yuan.

Entrusted by the State Council, the SEZ held two sessions of "discussion classes for cities open to the outside." It helped the Chinese Academy of Sciences, Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications, Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power, Ministry of Petroleum Industry, Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, National Tourism Administration, and other provinces and municipalities in organizing and holding in Shenzhen 146 sessions and 158 training classes on 19 different categories of topics, including importing and introducing from abroad, international finance, Hong Kong and Macao laws, foreign trade, and enterprise management. Over 6,000 students were enrolled in the classes. Good results were attained.

5. Positive influences on Hong Kong and Taiwan

Compatriots in Hong Kong, particularly those doubtful about Hong Kong's future, are all looking at Hong Kong's future, after the return of sovereignty to the PRC, from the angle of the development of the Shenzhen SEZ. They believe that with "Shenzhen allowing capitalist enterprises to exist, there should be no worry about Hong Kong." In a similar manner, compatriots in Taiwan are deeply concerned with Shenzhen. They believe that the success or failure of the building of the Shenzhen SEZ will generate effects in Taiwan. Through this Shenzhen "window," Taiwan compatriots are examining our party's and government's policy of opening to the outside world. After a visit to the special zone, a Taiwan newswoman said with feeling: "How good it would be if the mainland and Taiwan could be unified earlier!" She further believed that the existence and development of the Shenzhen SEZ would make her "confident of seeing the unification of the motherland."

When visiting Shenzhen, Governor Youde of Hong Kong also expressed the view that the Shenzhen SEZ is exceedingly important to China and to Hong Kong, that Hong Kong's prosperity plays a promotional role in the Shenzhen special zone's development, and that the Shenzhen special zone's development has an especially important significance for Hong Kong.

6. Attracting attention from the outside

From 1980 to this October, about 1,200 delegations, numbering some 8,000 people, or over 50 governments, brother parties, and specialists, scholars, and news reporters have visited the SEZ. Among them, 30 groups consisted of government leaders of the rank of vice premier, vice assembly head, and above. They have made extensive comments about Shenzhen. For example, Vice President Bush of the United States said: "Actual practice in the Shenzhen special zone has shown that it has developed greatly; it is estimated that it will attain even greater development in the future and will obtain even more American investment." Prime Minister Willoch of Norway described the "economic special zone as a catalyst which promotes China's economic development." The First Vice Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers Arkhipov said to me: "After visiting Shenzhen, I have gained a thorough understanding that you have done well in establishing the special zone."

The SEZ has also attracted the attention and concern of certain brother parties. Thus, So Yun-sok, member of the Political Bureau of the North Korean Workers Party, summed up his impressions of Shenzhen in the following two phrases: "A bold idea and a creative policy." Markovic, president of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia said: "In creating the special economic zone and carrying out the policy of opening to the outside world, the Communist Party of China has made historical progress which has not only reflected your extensive studies on the economic side but also added new contents in your building of socialism." The Romanian ambassador to China, Miculescu, said: "This enterprise of opening to the outside not only has a special significance for the special zone but also has a far-reaching significance for the socialist states such as your esteemed country and Romania."

III. Can the SEZ Firmly Insist on the Socialist Direction?

Since the special zone must introduce foreign capital and make frequent contacts with capitalism, the decadent ideas and way of life of capitalism can infiltrate through various channels. Under such special and complex circumstances, is it possible to accomplish the feat of "introducing and also resisting" and to firmly insist on the socialist direction? Facts have affirmed a definite reply, and this is that the special zone can firmly insist on the socialist direction. Basically, the following points must be grasped:

First, firmly insisting on the four basic principles. What we are creating is a special economic zone, and not a special political zone. The SEZ, like the whole country, must, in just the same way, firmly insist on the four basic principles. The SEZ is an area under the leadership of the CPC, over which the People's Republic of China exercises full sovereignty. It observes China's laws and ordinances. The political power of the SEZ is in the hands of the Chinese people. Foreign merchants coming to the SEZ to invest, to establish factories, and to engage in other economic activities must abide by the laws of our country and can only earn legitimate profits from activities within the permitted scope. If foreign merchants in the SEZ violate our country's laws, they shall be duly investigated and punished.

Second, using the economy of the whole country as backing. In introducing foreign capital and developing Sino-foreign joint-investment enterprises and enterprises with exclusively foreign merchant investment, the SEZ is playing a component economic role supplementary to the socialist economy.

The SEZ takes the whole country's socialist economic foundation as backing and represents a special zone under the macrocontrol of the socialist economy. We make use of capitalist funds, advanced technology, and scientific management methods to develop socialist productive forces. In the course of development, although certain passive factors may appear, we can definitely halt and rectify them, ensuring that the special zone will develop along socialist guidelines.

Third, insisting on grasping with both hands. Simultaneous with carrying out the construction of materialist civilization, the SEZ bends its efforts toward doing a good job in building socialist spiritual civilization, employing various means to educate party members, cadres, and the masses in communist ideology and discipline. It also organizes everybody to study the basic principles of Marxism and the party Central Committee's guidelines and policies vis-a-vis the formation of special economic zones. For example, it invited Zhang Haidi and "model heroes reporting groups' from the Guangxi and Yunnan border frontlines to make reports in our city; and it also organized sessions to listen to recordings of Comrade Chu Zhou's speeches, guiding the masses of party members, cadres, and people of the SEZ to establish in their minds the ideology of serving the people with their whole hearts and souls. It has also grasped the building of educational and cultural facilities, since one-third of the city's financial expenditure is in this area, thus expanding the socialist ideological and cultural frontline.

At present, in the SEZ, the great majority of the party members, cadres, and masses have a positive attitude, being anxious to open up and progress, and two-thirds of the staff members are known to have been taking part in spare-time cultural and technological learning activities. In 1979, the structure of the youth league was somewhat paralyzed, while a percentage of the party's bottom-grade organs was scattered and disorganized. Following the establishment of the SEZ, the organizational structures of the party and of the league have been consolidated, improved, and developed. In only the first 9 months of this year, over 1,100 youths have joined the Communist Youth League and nearly 1,000 people have joined the CPC. In the SEZ, society is stable, public order is good, and the social atmosphere is also good. Recently, after carrying out an investigation in Shenzhen, comrades of a working unit of the Ministry of Public Security said: "In general, in the entire special zone, the social atmosphere and public order are good, better than our expectations."

Fourth, dealing firmly with serious economic crimes and other criminal activities. For a period of time, certain of Hong Kong's underworld elements infiltrated into Shenzhen, doing wicked things, engaging in drug trafficking and prostitution activities, and generally poisoning the social atmosphere. As soon as such activities appeared, we at once took steps to forcefully deal with them, determinedly stopping them and exterminating them at their very outset. In their contact with capitalism, by far the great majority of Shenzhen's party members and cadres have been able to pass severe tests. Naturally, it is true that a small minority lacked willpower and succumbed to temptation, forgetting their righteousness in the face of profits, taking part in smuggling and speculation, and becoming corrupt and receiving bribes. Once cases of this kind were discovered, we at once began investigating. In the past 5 years and more, we have dealt with over 170 party members and cadres, or roughly 0.2 percent of the total number of party members and cadres in Shenzhen. In addition, we made full use of the corrupt elements to teach by negative example, to teach the party members and cadres to draw lessons therefrom and to strengthen their immunity to these evil activities.

Fifth, strengthening construction of the party. We should install the party structure in the enterprises owned solely by foreign merchants or jointly financed by Sino-foreign (cooperative) units.

In the SEZ, the number of enterprises solely financed by foreign merchants and jointly financed Sino-foreign (cooperative) enterprise units has been steadily increasing. How to correctly handle the relations between the state and the foreign merchants and between the Chinese staff members, workers, and the foreign merchants is a new problem confronting party work in the special zone. We must emphasize that party members should, in an exemplary manner, abide by state laws and policies and the terms of the contracts and agreements signed by the parties and should, by means of their exemplary deeds, influence other personnel in the enterprises to do likewise.

Moreover, attention should be paid to the role of public organs in foreign-related enterprises, such as trade unions, the Communist Youth League, women's federations, and so forth, and use made of these organs in handling various kinds of contradictions which may arise. In the process of cooperation with foreign merchants, it is necessary to respect their normal operating activities but also to supervise their observance of our government's laws and ordinances, and also of the terms of the contracts; we should educate the workers to actively take part in production and to strive to fulfill the production tasks, but should also reflect the workers's reasonable demands and protect and maintain their legitimate interests. We should educate the people on our side in foreign advanced technology and scientific management methods, educate them to consciously resist the infiltration of corrupt capitalist ideas, and enable them to run the enterprises well.

Through actual practice in opening up to the outside world and reform, we have come to understand deeply the following: Opening up to the outside world and being corrupted by capitalist ideology are not the same. Naturally, opening a window, as well as letting in fresh air, may allow some flies and mosquitoes to come in. But this is, after all, not so terrible. If only we can do our work well and strengthen the party's leadership and the building of socialist spiritual civilization, the disadvantageous factors may be converted into advantageous ones. In our opinion, opening up to the outside world can not only introduce capitalist funds and technology in the service of socialist construction but can also help to temper our cadres, enabling them to widen their vision, increase their knowledge, and invigorate their thinking, and can enable them to understand better through comparing the two social systems, the decadent character of the capitalist system, and strengthen their faith in communism. We believe that the special zone's broad masses of party members, cadres, and people all have socialist consciousness, are able to discriminate, and certainly will not change the socialist direction of the SEZ. Of course, if we lose our vigilance and abandon the above-mentioned work, a terrible situation of decaying social atmosphere and corrupt cadres might arise. However, we must repeat that if the Communist Party's leadership is in firm command, such a situation could never occur.

IV. What are the SEZ's Future Prospects?

The future prospects of the Shenzhen special zone's development are extensive and wide. In Shenzhen at present, a fairly good foundation has been laid on all sides. Its attraction for the outside has been laid on all sides. Its attraction for the outside has been increasingly augmented. The continuous deepening of the reform of the economic structure throughout the whole country and the further development of the policy of opening to the outside world have played an extremely large promotional role in the construction of the Shenzhen SEZ. Development of the commodity economy of the Zhu Jiang Delta, exploration and development of the Nanhai oil field, the beginning of construction work on the Daya Bay nuclear power station, and development of the superior resources of Dapeng Bay have all enabled the special zone's economy to demonstrate its enormous potential power.

The signing of the Sino-British joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong has satisfactorily solved the Hong Kong problem and is beneficial in strengthening economic cooperation between the SEZ and Hong Kong and in promoting the economic prosperity of both areas. Development of the Shenzhen SEZ has entered a new stage.

Based on the spirit of the central government's proposal on the Seventh 5-Year Plan on Shenzhen special zone's conditions, the Shenzhen CPC Committee has intially determined the following guidelines for the special zone's development from now on: relying on the interior, serving the four modernizations, being oriented toward Hong Kong and Macao, and establishing worldwide connections. Initially, it has formulated its Seventh 5-Year Plan. The various major targets for 1990 are as follows:

An annual growth rate of 22 percent in the gross industrial and agricultural output value, of which the industrial gross output value will attain an annual growth rate of 22 percent;

An annual growth rate of 18 percent in the gross value of national income and an annual growth rate of 11 percent in the gross value of the per capital national income.

In addition, we have compiled an "Outline for Construction of Socialist Spiritual Civilization in the Shenzhen Special Zone." The outline contains different demands according to different levels and grades and different objects. For example, vis-a-vis the party's leadership cadres, it advocates strengthening the learning and study of the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and firmly establishing communist ideals.

As for the rank-and-file party members, cadres, and people, the outline demands a firm insistence on communist beliefs and virtues, and lists 10 concrete demands as the norms and requirements for the virtue and conduct of SEZ citizens. Concrete demands are also made in regard to the construction and management of enterprises, such as those on education, public health, science and technology, sports, news, culture, and art, as well as social and cultural facilities and tourism areas. We have also decided to use legislation to protect the smooth progress of the construction of the special zone's spiritual civilization.

In short, during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, efforts will be made to make Shenzhen gradually become the "four windows," attaining the status of a comprehensive special economic zone which takes industry as the major factor, is oriented toward the outside, has multiple functions, possesses a rational industrial structure, is advanced in science and technology, and boasts a high degree of civilization.

The general plan for next year's work is as follows: intensifying the work in reform, grasping consolidation work, strengthening management, taking firm steps centering on improvement of results, striving for further improvement and development on the basis of consolidating the gains made, firmly insisting on industry as the major factor, actively introducing technology-intensive and know-how-intensive projects, developing an externally oriented economy, and opening up a road for the special zone's further development.

First, industry will be taken as the leading factor and steps will be quickened in developing an externally oriented economy. The economic structure will be readjusted and there will be study and production of new products, opening up of new markets, expansion of exports to earn foreign exchange, a solution of industry's internal problem of balancing foreign exchange, speeding up of the building of bases for fresh and live commodities, and the vigorous development of tertiary industry with the emphasis of services and tourism. In addition, preparations will be made to establish the special zone's trade organs in foreign countries, to acquire news and information, and to open up sales channels.

Second, we shall continue to improve and perfect the investment environment, and do a good job in importing and introduction work. In the energy, communications, and telecommunications sectors, construction will be strengthened. The auxiliary and supplementary engineering work on the three industrial areas of Bagualing and so on will be completed and perfected; legislation and judicial work will be strengthened, so as to attract more foreign capital.

Third, the steps in all-round reform will be quickened. A market system embracing funds, technology, news and information, and talented personnel will be installed, regulation by market mechanism will be put to full use, and microeconomy will be invigorated under macrocontrol.

Fourth, overall management will be strengthened. Speed and results will be unified. Under the precondition of improving economic results, a definite growth rate will nevertheless be maintained and first of all it will be necessary to restrict next year's scale of capital construction to this year's level. For this purpose, we shall continue to put in order and consolidate the tasks of eight aspects of work, including those related to enterprises, capital construction projects, collection of taxes, borrowing and transferring of cadres, the temporary residential population, and so forth. At the same time, we shall strengthen the work of the supervisory organs, such as the auditing, statistical and accounting units, and establish and perfect the various kinds of regulations and systems and close loopholes, so as to ensure the healthy development of the special zone's economy.

Fifth, building of socialist spiritual civilization will be augmented. Party reform will continue to be grasped well and ideological and political work which has ideological education and disciplinary education as the main contents will be strengthened. Building of cultural, recreational, and educational facilities will be speeded up, and cultural life will be enriched. Social order will be consolidated and various kinds of crimes and serious economic criminal activities will be dealt with firmly.

Shenzhen special zone is a special zone of the whole people. Comrade Xiaoping has said well: "To make it a success is our common wish." Over the past 5 years and more, we have always devoted our efforts to realizing the wishes of the central government and the hopes of the people of the whole country. However, the SEZ is, after all, something new. Due to the lack of experience, our work cannot avoid encountering different kinds of problems. Its future development may possibly meet with certain unexpected conditions, and errors might be committed. We shall definitely follow the policies of the central government and effect the building of the special zone even faster and better.

WEN WEI PO: SINO-SOVIET BORDER TALKS ANECDOTES

[Feature: "Notes Written from Memory on War of Words Between Chinese and Soviet Representatives -- Part 1]

[Text] This reporter had an interview with Tang Honggang, the Chinese representative to the Sino-Soviet frontier talks, in a new city on the banks of the Heilong Jiang.

Tang Honggang, a tall, thin man wearing black framed glasses, was a little more than 40. He looked like a true scholar. But when the conversation began, this reporter found that he was soldier with military credentials. Sheleweistov, a 48-year-old Soviet colonel and a quick thinking man, incisive in conversation, was for years Tang's counterpart. During their talks over the years, there were many humorous stories.

The First Story -- Flashlight and Intercontinental Missile

After talks on the Soviet side on one occasion, the Chinese and Soviet personnel were watching television in the lounge. The dazzling white spots in the screen were accompanied with humming noises. Colonel Sheleweistov explained to Tang Honggang with regret: "Our electronic products are not as good as Japan's."

Tang said jokingly: "I suppose you are good in one field -- intercontinental missiles."

Once during winter, when had night already fallen on the banks of the Heilong Jiang, a group of men were leaving the meeting room. They had to use flashlights on their way back. With a flashlight in his hand, the Soviet colonel sighed: "Our flashlights are so crude and awkward compared with those made in China."

Tang Honggang continued: "You are really a materialist. But there is one thing I don't understand. Since you can make A-bombs, why can't you produce good quality flashlights?"

The Second Story -- If Bombs Are Planted at the Front Gate of Your House

The Soviet colonel said: "As the Chinese saying goes: 'Since ancient times, those who have military knowledge are not necessarily militant.'"

Tang made some additional remarks: "This was one of the two lines of verse written by Zhao Fan for Zhu Geliang during the Three Kingdoms. As far as I can remember, there is also a Western saying: 'Rome was not built in a day.' We must cultivate our friendship over a long period."

The Soviet colonel repeatedly declared: "The Soviet Union is not a military threat to China."

Tang said: "Only when we are loyal to the facts can we be loyal to truth. This is one of our beloved Premier Zhou's mottos."

Tang then drew an analogy: "Mr Colonel, if there are bombs planted around your house, can you sleep safe and sound because they have not dropped inside?"

The Soviet colonel smiled and shook his head. He had nothing to say for himself.

[Text] The Third Story -- Only Spring Breezes Blow From China

In May, a strong breeze from the south blew on both banks of the Heilong Jiang for several days. One day the Soviet colonel greeted Tang on the other side of the river. Looking at the distant clouds, he said: "Mr Tang, over the past few days, we have been hit by the strong wind blowing from China!"

Tang replied with a smile: "Mr Colonel, the wind blowing from China is a south wind, which brings us spring followed by summer. The Chinese people are most afraid of the wind which blows from the north. It is the cold current from Siberia."

The Fourth Story -- He Only Loves the Girl From the East

When both the Chinese and Soviet representatives were seated in the conference room on the Soviet side on one occasion, Tang said: "I would like to introduce our new interpreter to the Soviet side. His name is Zhao Tianhe. Do you have any questions?"

The Soviet colonel asked: How old is he?"

Tang replied: "He is 21 years old."

The Soviet colonel asked: "From where did he graduate?"

Tang replied: "He graduated from the Changchun Northeast Teachers' University."

Looking at the young and handsome interpreter, the Soviet colonel asked: "Is he married?"

Tang replied: "Not yet."

The Soviet colonel said in earnest: "How about finding a girlfriend in Blagoveshchensk (a Soviet region on the Soviet bank of the Heilong Jiang)?"

Tang replied in a relaxed manner: "Thanks very much for your kind concern. I know very well what kind of a girlfriend he is looking for."

The Soviet colonel said with great interest: "Tell us more about that. I will try my best to help him."

Tang said seriously: "He is in love with a girl with black hair, black eyes, and yellow skin."

The Fifth Story -- I Am Directly Under the Ministry of National Defense

During an informal conversation after the talks, tht Soviet colonel asked: "Mr Tang, I really don't understand the relations between your frontier guards and frontier armed police. To whom are you responsible?"

Tang replied politely: "To be frank, I am directly under the Ministry of National Defense and my boss is Zhang Aiping."

PRC REPRESENTED AT 'GET TOGETHER FOR PEACE'

OW250858 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Geneva, January 24 (XINHUA) -- The "get together for peace" conference, attended by 110 non-governmental organizations, ended here today with a call to the international community for joint efforts to maintain world peace. A written appeal adopted by the five-day conference said the nuclear arms race poses the gravest threat to world peace, and called on all peoples to join campaigns to put an immediate end to all nuclear tests, prevent an arms race in outer space and eliminate chemical weapons and other arms of mass destruction.

Peace is essential for satisfying the needs of mankind for food, health, education, work and enviromental protection, the document said. It also urged governments to reduce substantially military spending and reverse the imbalanced use of natural resources. A delegation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries attended the conference.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES RUMORS OF DENG'S HEALTH

HK221100 Hong Kong AFP in English 1056 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, Jan 22 (AFP) -- The Chinese Foreign Ministry today issued a further denial of rumours from Hong Kong that top leader Deng Xiaoping's health was failing. Mr Deng, 81, is "in very good health," said Ministry spokesman Li Zhaoxing, in Beijing's second such denial in 24 hours. "These rumours are pure invention," he added.

The Foreign Ministry issued a similar denial yesterday. Share prices in Hong Kong plunged 30 points Monday on rumours that Mr Deng's health had recently deteriorated.

DEFECTION TO U.S. OF KGB OFFICER DISCLOSED

[Text] Washington, January 26 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking Soviet K.G.B. officer who defected to the United States last year may be the most valuable defector from the Soviet Union to the U.S., it was disclosed here today. Congressional sources said the defector was a Soviet officer of the K.G.B. who escaped by helicopter last spring from the Democratic Republic of Germany and was questioned at an American military base in Federal Germany before traveling to the U.S. Press reports said the defector is providing information that "is much more important" than that provided by Vitaly S. Yurchenko, a Soviet defector who later returned to Moscow last year.

The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency refused to confirm the reported defection and went to great lengths to keep it as a top secret for fear that disclosure of the case might have upset the summit meeting in November between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet Leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Reports said the United States might now learn valuable information about the K.G.B.'s organization and management from this defector. U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT magazine reported in detail the defection in its February 3 edition.

AMBASSADOR HAN XU INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS

[Text] Listeners: On New Year's Eve, we received a letter from Chang Jiangyang, a listener of Hubei's Honghu, and another letter from Zhong Xiaolin, a listener in Beijing, asking us to discuss current Sino-U.S. relations. It so happened that our Washington correspondents (Fan Xinlong) and (Zhang Guohua) had interviewed Han Xu, ambassador to the United States, before the end of 1985. Ambassador Han talked about the various aspects of Sino-U.S. relations. We would like to use Ambassador Han's talk to answer our listeners' questions. Later, the editors and announcers of the "International Issues Letterbox" program will have a discussion. Now, let me read the transcribed text of his talk.

Ambassador Han said: As is known to all, China is the largest developing country in the world, and the United States is the most developed. China is rich in resources and manpower, and has great market potentials, whereas the United States is strong in technology and investment funds. In developing their economies and technology, the two countries can, by cooperation, make up each other's deficiencies. Developing their relations in all areas is not only in the interest of both the Chinese and American people, but conducive to world peace and stability as well.

We were very glad to see the exchange of visits between Premier Zhao Ziyang and President Reagan in 1984 and President Li Xiannian's visit to the United States last July. The two sides signed an agreement on the peaceful use of nuclear energy, a 2-year program for the implementation of the Sino-U.S. cultural agreement, a protocol for educational exchanges between China and the United States and a fishery agreement. In October, Vice President Bush visited China.

As a result of the exchange of visits by their leaders and the efforts on both sides, the two countries now enjoy a fairly stable relationship. Cooperation and exchanges in the economic field and trade are more extensive and profound. The trade volume in the first half of 1985 reached $3.9 billion, and the figure for the whole year may top the record $6.1 billion set in 1984. Economic cooperation between the two countries continues to grow. U.S. investment in China has topped $1 billion and the number of agreements for Sino-U.S. cooperation in the scientific-technological field has reached 24.

Currently, the two countries are cooperating on more than 400 scientific-technological projects. Friendly ties between the Chinese and American peoples are also expanding. The two countries have established 17 sister-province or sister-state relationships and 19 sister-city relationships. Some 15,000 Chinese students and scholars are currently studying in the United States, and 1,800 American students are now pursuing their academic goals in China in the 1984-85 academic year.

To be sure, the development of Sino-U.S. relations has never been smooth sailing from the very beginning. The biggest obstacle remains the Taiwan issue. This problem could always cause serious trouble in Sino-U.S. relations if it is not solved. The key to resolving the problem is the U.S. strict adherence to the principles laid down in the three joint communiques in Sino-U.S. relations.

In economic and technological cooperation and trade, some problems remain to be resolved. The United States has relaxed certain restrictions on technology transfer to China. We hope that the measures are translated into concrete action. The rising protectionist trend is hampering the development of bilateral trade. The trade deficit China has sustained in its trade with the United States has totaled $15 billion since 1972. The United States should adopt a fair and reasonable policy toward China that will benefit the people of both countries.

In short, the mutual beneficial cooperative relations between the two countries have developed rapidly, but the potentials have not been fully tapped. Vigorous efforts are needed to remove certain obstacles. I believe that Sino-U.S. relations can develop more rapidly on a strong and reliable foundation, provided the two sides seriously observe and implement the principles laid down in the three joint communiqes, take steps to enhance understanding, treat each other on the basis of equality, and correctly deal with differences in accordance with the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence.

I am optimistic about Sino-U.S. relations. On the eve of 1986, I wish further and more satisfactory development of Sino-U.S. relations and the further strengthening of friendship between the Chinese and American people.

JINGJI CANKAO ON U.S. FOREIGN TRADE LEGISLATION

HK230703 Beijing JINGJI CANKAO in Chinese 9 Jan 86 p 6

[Article by Tong Fuquan of the World Economics and Political Research Institute under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences: "The United States Strengthens Its Foreign Trade Management With Economic Legislation" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] In the United States, foreign trade is mainly conducted by private enterprises. In order to strengthen foreign trade management, in addition to the adoption of economic methods and necessary administrative means, the U.S. Government also uses economic legislation to set various standards for foreign trade, guiding private enterprises to develop in the direction anticipated by the government.

Since before World War II, the United States has enacted over 1,000 foreign trade laws of various kinds. Most of them are economic regulations concerning foreign trade, including the "Reciprocal Trade Law of 1934," the "Export Control Law of 1949," the "Trade Law of 1974," the "Export Adjustment Law of 1979," and the "Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act of 1985" recently passed by the U.S. Congress (also called "the Jenkins Bill," which was vetoed by President Reagan), and more. As the government's effective legal means to readjust foreign trade, the above legislation has played a great propulsive role in the rapid development of U.S. import and export trade since the war. According to the U.S. Constitution, the right to enact economic legislation concerning foreign trade belongs to the U.S. Congress, while the federal government formulates and carries out foreign trade policies in light of the legislation passed by Congress. However, the right to implement foreign trade policies is, to a great extent, scattered among various government departments, and a central organization for exercising unified leadership is needed. Generally speaking, the method of enacting U.S. foreign trade legislation is as follows: First, every functional organization (like the U.S. Commerce Department, the U.S. International Trade Commission, and so on) presents its trade policy plans or revised policy reports to the President for approval. Then these plans are debated in Congress before becoming laws. Finally, after being signed by the President, they are handed down to departments concerned for implementation.

Since the war, the main practices of the U.S. Government in using economic legislation to control foreign trade are:

FIRST, ENACTING RELEVANT LAWS AND POLICIES IN LIGHT OF THE FOREIGN TRADE SITUATIONS IN DIFFERENT PERIODS.

In order to protect its domestic markets and expand the markets for U.S. products in foreign countries, the United States has enacted many economic laws on foreign trade in different periods. For example, in the early 1960's, in connection with the export of U.S. agricultural products to the European Economic Community countries, Congress approved "The Trade Expansion Act of 1962," authorizing President Kennedy to reduce the tariff on imported agricultural products by 50 to 100 percent in an attempt to seek a similar tariff reduction by West European countries and allow U.S. agricultural products to enter the European Economic Community market. As the U.S. tariff rate was higher than West European rates at that time, the reciprocal tariff reduction was advantageous to the export of U.S. agricultural products. Another example is that, in order to halt the mass exportation of textiles manufactured by countries in the Asian-Pacific region to the United States, Congress approved on 13 November 1985 the "Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act of 1985," which was subsequently vetoed. The act stipulated that a country and region whose textile exports to the United States exceed the total U.S. textile import quota from that country by 1.25 percent or above are regarded as main suppliers. Their textile export quotas to the United States should be based on the figures of 1980. Until the end of 1984, their annual growth rate should not exceed 6 percent. Beginning in 1985, their annual growth rates will be confined to 1 percent. Canada and the European Economic Community countries are not subject to this act.

SECOND, MAINTAINING THE CONTINUITY AND RELATIVE STABILITY OF FOREIGN TRADE LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

The foreign trade laws enacted by the United States are not unalterable. They change along with the development of foreign trade and can be revised and supplemented at any time to improve and organize them. In order to promote the development of foreign trade, as early as in 1934, the U.S. Government enacted "The Reciprocal Trade Law." By 1962, this law had already been revised on 11 occasions, with new clauses constantly added to it during the revisions, including "extraordinary clauses," "trouble spot clauses," "national security clauses," and so on. Because the United States can constantly revise its economic laws on foreign trade in light of changes in conditions, it has avoided much confusion caused by invalid clauses.

THIRD, INTEGRATING ECONOMIC MEASURES WITH LEGAL MEANS TO ENSURE THE IMPLEMENTATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF FOREIGN TRADE LEGISLATIONS.

U.S. foreign trade legislation is not a series of propagandistic or policy-like documents. It is legally binding and applicable to the people of the whole country. Every foreign trade decree is very detailed, containing not only the content and methods of implementation of the decree, but also the additional "particulars" about using economic means to punish violators. Minor offenders will be fined, while major offenders will be imprisoned. As the law can really be strictly enforced and violations of the law must be investigated and dealt with, the powerful strength of economic legislation can be brought into play.

FOURTH, DEVISING A WHOLE SET OF STRINGENT MANAGEMENT METHODS.

There is a stringent system for the enactment of U.S. economic laws on foreign trade. Every law must be debated in Congress and approved and signed by the President before implementation. Every relevant organization also works out corresponding "implementation regulations." Meanwhile, the contents of every law -- from a state's foreign trade principles, policies, guidelines, and systems to the implementation methods, procedures, and various report formats and tables -- all have a set of stringent management methods. Thus, the implementation and enforcement of each law can be ensured, fully displaying its role in promoting foreign trade.

CPC OFFICIAL RESTATES LACK OF RELATIONS WITH CPSU

[Text] "The Communist Party of China (CPC) does not have any relationship with the Soviet Communist Party," spokesman of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee told CHINA DAILY yesterday. The official made this remark when asked to comment on a recent report by a foreign news agency, which said the CPC would not send a delegation to the 27th National Congress of the Soviet Communist Party scheduled next month.

1986 SINO-SOVIET TRADE PROTOCOL SIGNED

[Text] Beijing, January 23 (XINHUA) -- A goods exchange and payments protocol for the year 1986 was signed here today by representatives of China and the Soviet Union. The two sides also exchanged letters concerning border trade between China's Xinjiang Uyger Autonomous Region and five neighboring Soviet republics and other regions.

The document was signed by Wang Pinqing, Chinese vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade and G.K. Zhuravlev, Soviet first vice-minister of foreign trade. Under the protocol, China will sell the Soviet Union items such as nonferrous metals, soybeans, maize, peanuts, frozen meat, fruit, textiles and light industrial products. The Soviet Union will provide China with nonferrous metals, steel, pig iron, urea, automobiles, lumber and aeroplanes.

Minister of foreign economic relations and trade Zheng Tuobin, and Soviet Ambassador to China I.S. Shcherbakov attended the signing ceremony. The Soviet delegation is scheduled to leave for home tomorrow.

SOVIET ATTITUDE ON CAMBODIAN ISSUES UNCHANGED

["Commentary: Soviet Attitude to Kampuchean Problem Remains Unchanged (by Tang Tianri)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Since the beginning of this year, the official Soviet press and propaganda machines have been trumpeting new slogans about the Kampuchean problem and other regional issues. PRAVDA, the official party newspaper, said in a recent article that the political solution of regional problems requires a new approach, and that the Soviet Union is willing to coordinate its actions with other countries in this matter. Soon afterwards Soviet Vice Foreign Minister Mikhail S. Kapitsa told a press conference in Moscow that if a political solution is found to the Kampuchean problem the Vietnamese troops would possibly withdraw from Kampuchea in 1987. But does this rhetoric really represent a new Soviet policy on the Kampuchean problem?

In his statement, Kapitsa asked Democratic Kampuchean President Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Prime Minister Son Sann to negotiate with the bogus Kampuchean regime with Vietnamese troops still in Kampuchea on condition that they must first cut all ties with the Democratic Kampuchean National Army. This is clearly a ploy to disrupt the unity of the three resistance forces of Democratic Kampuchea and dissolve the country's coalition government.

Kapitsa's remarks to the democratic Kampuchean National Army were quite hostile. He described them as "bandits," and did not recognize the National Army as a political force. He said that if the Kampuchean National Army was willing to "take the road of a political settlement," some of its leaders could contact Phnom Penh authorities.

But he maintained that those leaders "could not be regarded as representatives of a political force." What Kapitsa proposed, in face, is a political conspiracy that attempts to weaken, break up and then wipe out the most powerful one in the three Kampuchean patriotic resistance forces.

Kapitsa took it for granted that the elimination of the three anti-Vietnamese factions in Kampuchea would lead to an agreement ending the undeclared war in Kampuchea, and to a "national election with international supervision." However, the so-called "election" would not be a real one, which the Kampuchean people deserve and would not be without foreign interference. The "election," if it happens, undoubtedly will be under Soviet control and serve only to legitimize the Heng Samrin puppet regime. In the Kremlin's view, the realization of these plans will allow the establishment of a "peace zone" in the form of an "Indochinese federation," which is backed by the Kremlin and controlled by Hanoi.

Kapitsa called for an "international conference" and assurances for a peace zone. This means the Soviet Union wants the international community to recognize Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea and hegemony in Indochina.

The Soviet Union had hoped that by supporting Vietnam it could solve the Kampuchean problem through military means while advocating its so-called "political settlement blueprint." Kapitsa said if there is no way to reach a political settlement, "the de facto undeclared war would be continued." He imagined that with the Soviet Union's support, the Vietnamese and Heng Samrin puppet troops could become more militant and stronger within a few years' time, and the Kampuchean resistance forces would be wiped out. Then, the Kampuchean problem "would be eliminated automatically." To help realize this, the Soviet Union has doubled last year its annual economic and military aid to Vietnam from 2 billion U.S. dollars to 4 billion U.S. dollars. A large number of Soviet-made tanks, artillery pieces, mines, rockets and airplanes keep arriving in Kampuchea to help Vietnam with its offensive drive, which is aimed at eliminating the Kampuchean resistance forces in two or three years. Still there has been no basic change in Soviet attitudes toward the Kampuchean problem.

Peace and development are the trends of the 1980s, and the world desires to solve international disputes through the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence. Moscow's hope to rely on its economic and military superiority and use its power politics to conquer a weak country directly or indirectly cannot be realized. By so doing, the Soviets have not only met with strong resistance by the weak nation but also come under severe condemnation and opposition from world community, which leaves the Soviets in a more isolated position. The Soviet Union in its six-year intervention of Afghanistan and seven-year support for Vietnam's aggression in Kampuchea, has tasted the same bitter fruit. Events will prove that the scheme, "wipe out the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces and settle the Kampuchean problem in two or three years," merely represents a daydream.

EXPERTS PESSIMISTIC ON RELATIONS WITH U.S.

[Text] Moscow, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Some top Soviet international affairs experts today painted a gloomy picture of the possible outcome of the new Soviet disarmament proposal, saying they had never expected the plan would bring about a prompt change in the current state of world affairs. On an international affairs forum on Soviet television this evening, they also doubted the possibility of reaching an agreement on major issues with the Reagan administration.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev announced ten days ago a three-stage proposal for ridding the world of all nuclear weapons by the year 2000. At the forum, Yevgeniy Primakov, an academician in international affairs, claimed it was expected from the very beginning that there would be a rather negative response from the U.S. Government to the Gorbachev statement. The Soviet leadership "have never counted on the statement as a magic wand to bring about a dramatic change in the situation," nor did they believe it would make the United States adopt a different policy in international politics, Primakov said. He added that there is still a long way to go to attain a normalization of international relations.

Aleksandr Bovin, political commentator for the government newspaper IZVESTIYA, pointed out bluntly that it is possible that Moscow will not be able to reach an agreement on major issues with the Americans "so long as the present administration remains at the White House." Bovin also said he doesn't believe that those Americans in power would agree to a halt to the arms race. Bovin's remarks, however, were described by Primakov as "pessimistic assessments" with which he could not fully agree. The Soviet Union still hopes to attain a certain breakthrough, Primakov argued, though it was very difficult to arrive at an agreement with the present U.S. Administration.

Another commentator, Zorin, observed that Moscow cannot wait because nobody can say for certain that the new American Government after the 1988 U.S. elections would be easier to deal with than the Reagan administration. These comments show that Moscow does not pin much hope on any satisfactory U.S. response to the Soviet disarmament proposal.

SHEVARDNADZE DISCUSSES SOVIET-U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] Moscow, January 26 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said that the United States' failure to join Moscow's nuclear test ban will affect superpower relations and this year's planned summit.

In an interview published Sunday by the Mongolian news agency MONTSAME and reported by the Soviet news agency TASS, Shevardnadze said the 90-day-extension of a Soviet moratorium made by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev January 15 offers a solid basis for ending the nuclear impasse. "If the U.S. Administration takes this new opportunity offered to it and stops nuclear weapons tests, this will naturally create a more favorable background for a meeting of the top leaders of the two countries," Shevardnadze said at the end of his visit to Mongolia. "It it does not do so, the atmosphere in our relations will look different, specifically in the aspect of the summit dialogue."

U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Gorbachev are scheduled to meet in a second summit in Washington, either in July or September. Shevardnadze said Moscow expects a "constructive and businesslike stand" on the Gorbachev proposals at the Geneva talks to limit nuclear and space weapons. He stressed the Soviets would like these talks to link nuclear and space weapons and noted that progress can't be made in one field without agreements in the other. Shevardnadze said that so far, "only words and nothing else are heard from the U.S. side. The ball is now in the U.S. court." The Soviet foreign minister left Mongolia January 25 for home.

BEIJING COMMENTARY ON 'TEAM SPIRIT' EXERCISE

SK241106 Beijing International Service in Korean 1100 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Unattributed commentary: "The United States and the South Korean Authorities Lack Sincerity in Alleviating Tension on the Korean Peninsula"]

[Text] The United States and the South Korean authorities announced on 18 January that they will begin the "Team Spirit-86" military exercise on 10 February. It has been learned that this military exercise, in which forces 200,000 strong will be mobilized, will last for 2 months.

The North side of Korea recognized that the United States and the South Korean authorities have aggravated the tense situation on the Korean peninsula by announcing the plan to conduct the large-scale military exercise. Therefore, the North side of Korea could not but announce on 20 January that it would discontinue [chungdan] the North-South economic talks, which were scheduled to be held recently, the preliminary meeting for parliamentary talks, and the Red Cross talks.

In order to alleviate tension on the Korean peninsula and promote an atmosphere favorable to the North-South dialogue, the North side of Korea announced on 11 January this year that, starting from 1 February, it will not conduct large-scale military exercises and will stop all military exercises during the North-South talks. It also proposed that the U.S. Government and the South Korean authorities, responding to this, not conduct military exercises starting from the same day. World public opinion welcomed this just proposal. However, the U.S. Government and the South Korean authorities did not respond.

Because of last year's efforts by the North side of Korea, the situation on the Korean peninsula and North-South relations have improved. Progress was made in various talks between the two sides, and the mutual visit of the art troupes and home-visiting groups of the North and South Red Cross Societies was realized for the first time. On the basis of this, the North side of Korea took a vigorous step forward for alleviating tension and accelerating the dialogue by deciding at the beginning of the new year that, starting from 1 February, it will not conduct large-scale military exercises and will stop all military exercises while the dialogue is being held. This vividly shows that the DPRK Government is making efforts to improve relations between Korea and the United States and relations between the North and South of Korea through dialogue and negotiations. Therefore, the DPRK has reason to demand that the United States and the South Korean authorities positively respond to this. However, the United States and the South Korean authorities, refusing the just proposal of the North side of Korea, decided to conduct a large-scale military exercise. World public opinion cannot but be disappointed over such an act by the United States and the South Korean authorities.

The North and South of Korea, at the beginning of last year, decided to hold the second round of economic talks and the eighth round of Red Cross talks. In the meantime, when the world expected that these talks would bring successes, the United States and the South Korean authorities conducted the "Team Spirit-85" military exercise. Because of this, the talks were inevitably discontinued. People still remember this.

In the meantime, again this year, the United States and the South Korean authorities are making it impossible to hold the three talks as scheduled, as they did last year. While noting that conducting military exercises while holding a dialogue at the same time is incompatible [oullijiannun] and that even if talks were held, no good results would occur, the North side of Korea, which highly values dialogue, said that the United States and the South Korean authorities must take full responsibility for this.

RENMIN RIBAO ON DPRK CRITICISM OF S. KOREA

["Special Dispatch" by reporters Liu Zhengxue and Feng Zhiyuan: "North Korea Exhorts South Korea Not To Speak in Defense of the Military Exercises"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 22 Jan -- On 21 and 22 January, the heads of the three delegations from the North attending the economic talks, the Red Cross talks, and the preparatory meeting for the parliamentary talks between the North and the South of Korea separately telephoned the chief representatives of the three delegations from the South, pointing out that they should not have spoken in defense of the large-scale military exercises to be held by the United States and the South Korean authorities.

In a joint statement issued on 20 January, the heads of the three North Korean delegations pointed out that, because the planned large-scale military exercises by the United States and South Korea have aggravated tensions on the Korean peninsula, the 6th economic talks, the preparatory meeting for the 3d parliamentary talks, and the 11th formal Red Cross talks between the North and the South scheduled for late January and for February will have to be suspended. After the joint statement was made public, the South Korean chief representatives attending the three talks issued a joint statement on the same day defending the large-scale military exercises between the United States and the South Korean authorities. They stated that "Team Spirit," to be conducted by the United States and South Korea is "training with the objective of defense and a routine annual exercise" and called for the holding of the three talks as scheduled.

The heads of the three North Korean delegations immediately telephoned their southern counterparts, saying that the South Korean authorities are ignoring the North's peace proposals and the aspirations of the people at home and abroad by announcing, shortly before the talks between the North and the South are to be held, that they will conduct large-scale military exercises with the United States, thus "creating serious difficulties" for North-South dialogue. The heads of the three North Korean delegations pointed out that the other party should not have spoken in defense of this serious situation but should "apologize" to all fellow countrymen who look forward to the early holding of the talks. They also reaffirmed the stand of the North: The resumption of the three talks will be decided according to the situation after the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises.

DPRK DENOUNCES U.S.-S. KOREA MILITARY EXERCISES

[Text] Pyongyang, January 24 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea mass media have expressed deep indignation at major joint military exercises involving the United States and South Korea scheduled for February 10. The Korean press and radio and television stations have condemned the massive military exercises, code named "Team Spirit-86", as a threat to peace that worsens the tense situation on the Korean peninsula and disrupts the North-South dialogue.

The Korean newspaper NODONG SINMUN said in a commentary yesterday that the planned large-scale military exercises demonstrate that Washington and Seoul are not eager for a dialogue and do not want regional detente. A joint statement issued Monday by the Korean Red Cross, economic and parliamentary delegations, said that because of the U.S. and South Korean authorities' insistence on holding the military exercises, the North had to postpone the North-South talks until the end of the exercises.

The Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland also rejected the claims of Washington and Seoul that the military exercises were "defensive" and "irrelevant" to the North-South talks as excuses and sophisms. It said that the U.S. and South Korean authorities should frankly acknowledge their mistake in causing the postponement of the North-South talks and be responsible for the consequences of their actions.

At a mass meeting held here yesterday, Kim Hwan, member of the Political Bureau of the Workers' Party of Korea warned that the joint military exercises were "unbearable challenges" to the North's efforts to relax tension through dialogue and consultation and to realize peace and peaceful reunification. He noted that the purpose of the exercises was to maintain the division of the nation and to create "two Koreas." He called on nations of the world to condemn the planned military exercises and support the Korean people's just struggle for the realization of a nuclear-free zone and peace on the Korean peninsula.

Commentaries and statements in the Korean media have emphasized that the North side of Korea opposes military confrontation and that its resolve to improve relations between the North and South to ultimately achieve national reunification remains unchanged. They urged Washington and Seoul to respond to the Korean Government's call by stopping their military maneuvers and by immediately canceling the scheduled joint military exercises.

SOVIET UNION, DPRK ISSUE JOINT COMMUNIQUE

[Text] Pyongyang, January 23 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and the Soviet Union said in a joint communique today they are satisfied with the strengthening and advancing of the relations between the two countries and two parties. The joint communique was issued at the end of a five-day official visit to the DPRK by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze. It said that the two sides held discussion on bilateral relations and international issues of urgent concern, and had "fully identical views" on all the issues discusses.

The communique, published by the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY (KCNA), said the two ministers' talks marked a great point in strengthening Korean-Soviet friendship. The two sides "feel satisfied" with the results of their talks and agreed to further coordinate their joint actions on the international arena. The Korean side supports the Soviet position at the Geneva summit and the extensive and constructive measures put forward by Warsaw Pact countries. DPRK particularly favors Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's recent proposal to eliminate all nuclear weapons by the end of the century, the communique said. The communique said, the two sides are particularly concerned about the situation in the Far East and Asia as a whole. They strongly condemn the U.S. occupation of the southern part of Korea and the intention of the United States, Japan and the South Korean authorities to form a tripartite military alliance.

The Soviet side voiced support to the efforts of the Korean Workers' Party and the Korean Government to force U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea with a view to realizing the unification of the country on the basis of peace, democracy and non-interference from outside. The two sides oppose and boycott the attempt of creating "two Koreas" by means of recognizing each other by the two parts of Korea, and "the admission of the North and the South of Korea into the United Nations," the communique stressed.

GROUP CALLS FOR DETENTE ON KOREAN PENINSULA

[Text] Paris, January 24 (XINHUA) -- An international organization today made an urgent appeal to all the governments and parliaments, international organizations and the peace-loving forces of the world to make the international peace year of 1986 "a year of detente and peace in the Korea peninsula".

A statement issued by the International Liaison Committee for the Independent and Peaceful Reunification of Korea (Cilreco) here today said the members of the special committee of the non-governmental organization for disarmament consider "very positive" the decision by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on January 11 to halt military exercises in Korea. The statement denounced the United States and the South Korean authorities for announcing military exercises starting from February in disregard of the DPRK initiative.

SHEVARDNADZE LEAVES MONGOLIA FOR HOME 25 JAN

JAPANESE MARK ZHOU ENLAI DEATH ANNIVERSARY

OW240816 Beijing XINHUA in English 0727 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Text] Tokyo, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Nearly 150 Japanese personages from various circles in Kitakyushi, Fukuoka, refreshed their memory of the outstanding role which the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai had played in promoting Sino-Japanese friendship, at a meeting this evening in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of his death. Gohei Tani, mayor of Kitakyushi, and Zhang Xiangshan, vice chairman of the China-Japan Friendship Association, were present on the occasion.

Speaking at the meeting, Zhang recalled Zhou's contribution to the Chinese-Japanese rapprochement at its different stages, and expressed the hope that the peoples of the two countries would work jointly to maintain their good relations for many generations to come. Tani praised the former Chinese leader for his outstanding role in international affairs and in promoting Japan-China friendship. He said Kitakyushi, which had done much to encourage exchanges between the two nations, would make new contribution to bilateral relations as a tribute to Zhou. Zhou Enlai died on January 8, 1976 at the age of 78.

BEIJING VIETNAMESE ON SRV PAVILION AT TRADE FAIR

OW270011 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1400 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Article by Vietnamese 'Patriot' Hong Trung: "Some Impressions of Vietnam's Pavilion at the International Trade Fair"]

[Text] The Asia-Pacific International Trade Fair, with the participation of 26 countries and regions, was organized in Beijing from 15-30 November 1985. During this period, I visited the fair and observed that the majority of countries, including the Soviet Union, China, the United States, Japan, and East Germany, had exhibited many items of goods and industrial products typical of a developed economy and advanced science and technolgy, highly valued by visitors. Meanwhile, Vietnam displayed only a small number of goods, most of them agricultural products. This clearly reflected Vietnam's poverty and backwardness.

As a Vietnamese, I know the Vietnamese goods displayed at the fair very well. I discovered that the form and quality of products exhibited were poorer than in previous years. The farm products included coffee, millet, black and green beans of various sizes, peanuts [words indistinct]. Only the display of rice was somewhat atractive, because the grains were white and uniformly full-fleshed. At the beginning, I was worried at the sight of baskets of rice displayed there. I was wondering how the Vietnamese people would be able to survive if the Le Duan clique scraped up all the rice available in Vietnam to export to a certain country wanting to buy it, especially when the shorttage of rice for local consumption was still prevalent. However, my worries were dispelled when I realized that only a few countries had established trade relations with Vietnam since the Le Duean clique's dispatch of troops to invade Cambodia. Such was the state of agricultural products, while that of industrial products was worse. Vietnamese electric fans displayed were of a hand's size, looked so ugly, and were so noisy that the Honoi people describe them as toad-like. The poor quality of these power-guzzlers, manufactured by the Thong Nhat Electromechanical Plant in Hanoi, has been much criticized. Their nickname also derives from the fact that they jump up like toads. The traditional goods included rattan articles, bamboo blinds, and lacquerware. But only the lacquerware drew public attention. However, not all visitors knew that the production of this Vietnamese fine-art ware was faced with tragic difficulties, to the extent that it might be suspended for good. Hanoi newspapers have recently complained that the majority of lacquerware craftsmen have given up their occupation. As a result, many cooperatives in localities previously specializing in lacquerware production, have stopped operations or currently exist in name only.

Commenting on the Vietnamese pavilion, visitors said that, while other countries had brought competitive products and sophisticated machines to the trade fair [words indistinct], Vietnam had brought only such products as black beans, illicium verum flowers, cinnamon bark, and even a tiny lock, thus proving that it had nothing else. It seemed that the quality of Vietnamese goods had not improved in 20 years. This was true, and I fully agreed with these visitors. I also realized that any goods exhibited abroad should be worthy of exhibition, and should bear typical features representing the economic, scientific, and technological development of a country. As for the grain, such as millet and green beans, they are not typical products of the 1980's, but existed some hundred years ago. Moreover, in the current starvation situation, these products should be used mainly to relieve the people's hunger instead of being used in goods exchange or trade with other countries.

After leaving the Vietnamese pavilion, I, a Vietnamese, thought that, in face of the current situation, if the Le Duan clique refuses to change its line, put an immediate end to its aggressive war in Cambodia and to its anti-China policy, and concentrate all efforts on economic construction and care for the people's life, the economy, science, and technology of Vietnam will never be able to catch up with those of developed countries.

DK RADIO REPORTS SRV REINFORCING TROOPS

[Text] Beijing, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese authorities sent 7,900 troop reinforcements to Siem Reap, Pursat, Battambang, and Koh Kong provinces in Kampuchea between mid-December and mid-January, radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today. The radio station said that Vietnamese forces also moved 24-T tanks, eight pieces of 130 mm artillery and a large amount of ammunition and military supplies in to the provinces.

The reinforcements were added to about seven divisions of Vietnamese troops already in the four provinces where Kampuchean patriotic resistance forces have inflicted heavy casualties on the Vietnamese troops. The radio station said the ongoing military buildup demonstrates that Hanoi's claim that it is withdrawing troops from Kampuchea is nothing but a "fraud".

NEARLY 1000 SRV, PRK TROOPS 'DEFECTED LAST MONTH'

[Text] Bangkok, January 26 (XINHUA) -- About 800 Heng Samrin troops and 200 Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea defected last month, secretary-general of the National Security Council of Thailand Prasong Sunsiri dislosed recently. The security chief was quoted by the local press as saying that the Kampuchean resistance forces have been stepping up military operations in the inland areas, which forced the Vietnamese to use helicopter gunships in major operations against the resistance. Fighting is fierce in provinces of Oddar Meanchey, Battambang, Siem Reap, Kompong Thom and Kompong Chhnang as well as Phnom Penh City, he added.

The intensified resistance actions and the massive defections of Heng Samrin and Vietnamese troops are two main factors hampering the Vietnamese in launching their dry-season offensive which usually starts from November of the preceding year, Prasong noted. He said that all the three factions of the coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea are engaged in the fighting against the Vietnamese.

Despite the growing difficulties facing the Vietnamese during the current dry-season, Prasong warned, the Vietnamese may mount attacks on Thai territory in a stepped-up border offensive against the resistance next month.

THAI RETURN VIETNAMESE FIRE IN ARTILLERY DUEL

[Text] Bangkok, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese gunners continued to pound the Thai Marine base at Ban Hat Lek in Khlong Yai District of Trat Province, triggering a fierce duel of artillery and mortar fire this morning, a Thai military informed source reported today. The source said that the Vietnamese shelling began at about 7 a.m. and continued till 10 a.m. The shelling forced the marines to be put on full alert. The source believed that the renewed shelling of the Thai Marine base by Vietnamese troops was to test the firepower of the marines.

A division of Vietnamese troops are deployed at the Banthat mountain range overlooking the Thai Marine base, the source said. Two days ago, Vietnamese gunners fired across the border at the same marine base in east Thailand bordering Kampuchea. Three marines were killed. It was reported that Thai Navy will file a full report to the Foreign Ministry in order to formally protest against the Vietnamese shelling.

3 THAI SOLDIERS KILLED IN 24 JAN BORDER CLASH

[Text] Bangkok, January 26 (XINHUA) -- Three Thai infantrymen were killed and three others injured in a border clash with intruding Vietnamese troops in Thailand's northeastern province of Ubon Ratchathani on January 24, local newspaper BANGKOK POST reported today quoting Thai military sources. The clash was the third between Thai and Vietnamese troops since January 23 in Nam Yun District of the province adjacent to Preach Vihear Province in Kampuchea.

According to the Thai military, Thai troops clashed with a group of Vietnamese soldiers when they found them planting landmines on Thai soil. The fighting lasted about two hours before the intruders retreated back into Kampuchea. Casualties of Vietnamese troops were not available but believed to be high. The death of three Thai infantrymen followed that of three Thai marines on January 23 when Vietnamese gunners pounded a marine base in Khlong Yai district of Trat Province in eastern Thailand.

INDOCHINESE FOREIGN MINSTERS MEETING REPORTED

[Text] Hanoi, January 24 (XINHUA) -- Foreign ministers of Vietnam, Laos and the Hanoi-backed Heng Samrin regime in Phnom Penh ended their two-day discussion on Kampuchea today, according to a report from Vientiane. A communique issued at their 12th foreign ministerial meeting in Vientiane, capital of Lao, said that 1990 is still the time set by Vietnam for withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea. The communique, virtually a repetition of Hanoi's position on Kampuchea, offered nothing new in regard to Vietnam's seven-year-old occupation of Kampuchea.

Hanoi has demanded time and again that Thailand stop supporting the Kampuchean resistance forces and "foreign forces" cease "intervening" in Kampuchea. It has also called for a national reconciliation on the basis of eliminating "Khmer Rouge."

The communique stood again for block-block dialogues between ASEAN and "Indochinese countries" and said recent and future contacts between foreign ministers of Vietnam and Indonesia will contribute to the "political solution" to the Kampuchean issue. The communique welcomed Vietnam's and Laos' recent contacts with the United States on Americans missing in action (MIA) during the Vietnam war. It added, however, the foreign ministers feel regret at the U.S. official reluctance to contact delegates from the Vietnam-installed regime in phnom Penh.

SRV ACCUSED OF OBSTRUCTING REFUGEE REPATRIATION

[Text] Bangkok, January 25 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking Thai security official pointed out that the Vietnamese are the major stumbling block to the repatriation of displaced Kampucheans in Thailand. Prasong Sunsiri, secretary-general of the National Security Council, was commenting yesterday on the joint communique of the "foreign ministers' conference of the three Indochinese nations."

The two-day meeting among Vietnam, Laos and the Heng Samrin regime in Kampuchea, which ended in Vientiane yesterday, declared that the Phnom Penh regime is ready for negotiations on the repatriation of Kampuchean refugees stranded along the Thai-Kampuchean border. It was reported that over 200,000 displaced Kampucheans are living in Thailand because of the seven-year-old war in their country. Thailand accepted them out of humanitarian consideration.

Prasong refused the request by the Vientiane meeting that Thailand move Kampuchean refugee camps farther away from the Kampuchean border. It is the sovereignty of Thailand to decide where a refugee camp should be situated, he said. The Vietnamese, Prasong said, want as many Kampuchean people to leave Kampuchea as possible to facilitate the resettlement of Vietnamese in the country. About 700,000 Vietnamese have so far been resettled in Kampuchea, particularly in Phnom Penh and the areas around Tonle Sap Lake, according to Prasong.

BRITISH MINISTER RENTON VISITS HONG KONG

Speaks on Future System

OW241727 Beijing XINHUA in English 1448 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Text] Hong Kong, January 24 (XINHUA) -- British Minister of State Timothy Renton reiterated here today the need for "convergence between the system that is evolving in Hong Kong and the system to be laid down in the basic law (for the future special administrative region)"

At a press conference before his departure for Bangkok early this morning, Renton explained that the meaning of the word convergence is "a question of two sides coming together." "We are creating a railway line which will lead us to 1997, and the Chinese will be creating a separate railway line which leads on from 1997. The need is to see that those two railway lines meet together at a crossing point."

According to the Sino-British joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong, which was signed at the end of 1984, the Chinese Government will resume the exercise of sovereignty over Hong Kong with effect from July 1997 and make it a special administrative region with a high degree of autonomy. Renton said that the British government has no "preconception" about the form of constitutional change that should [word indistinct] Hong Kong, "except the extent we stand four squares behind implementing this document." In years ahead, Renton said, there is going to be some management problems when working out the details of the joint declaration. "Only by regular contacts and increased exchange of views at all levels that we can avoid future misunderstandings."

At the beginning of the press conference Renton said that the development of a broader and deeper economic relationship between Britain and China, and the increase in contact and understanding which will go with it, can only be good for Hong Kong. Renton arrived here yesterday after a five-day visit to Beijing and other parts of the Chinese mainland.

WESTERN EUROPE

EC TO SET UP PERMANENT MISSION IN CHINA

OW250924 Beijing XINHUA in English 0855 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Brussels, January 24 (XINHUA) -- An European Community official said today that EC is on the way to send permanent representatives to China in view of the common desire of EC and China to further develop their bilateral relations.

Willy de Clercq, member of the EC Commission for External Affairs, told a group of Belgian entreprenures that this move is favored by European enterprises, small and medium-sized ones in particular. The installation of a permanent mission in Beijing will facilitate the exploration of the vast market in China, he said. Pointing to the good relationship between EC and China, the commissioner said that "there is no divergence of views between China and Europe on major international issues," and that "China firmly supports the European integration process." De Clercq said China, with its one billion population and its ambition to realize modernization, is potentially a huge market. It needs to extensively introduce foreign products and technology, thus providing an opportunity which European enterprises may take advantage of.

He disclosed that this year EC will set aside 935,000 ECU [European currency units] (more than 800,000 U.S. dlrs) for developing cooperation with China. EC may initiate many technological cooperation projects in China, including sending experts, training managers and providing technology in the fields of metallurgical industry, agriculture and energy. It is also possible to start projects in information and telecommunication. He said all these projects are attractive to European industries. The commissioner also said that EC will financially support European enterprises in undertaking projects in China.

SWEDISH NAVAL VESSEL ARRIVES IN SHANGHAI

[Text] Beijing, January 25 (XINHUA) -- China and the Netherlands will jointly build Nantong Port on the Yangtze River in east China's Jiangsu Province.

At a meeting here with Dutch Minister of Transport and Public Works Neelie Smit-Kroes, Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed the hope that the Nantong Port project would soon be materialized. The port is expected to be constructed with joint funds and jointly run thereafter. The premier said China is willing to cooperate with other countries in port construction in the same way. China also hopes for cooperation with the Netherlands in water conservancy and communications, Zhao said.

Smit-Kroes assured the premier that the Netherlands would try its best to get the Nantong project under way as soon as possible. She also proposed the two countries cooperate in other fields such as communications and ship-building. Smit-Kroes arrived here last Thursday as a guest of the Ministry of Communications.

ZHAO, OTHERS MEET DEFENSE INDUSTRY SPECIALISTS

[By reporters Li Shangzhi and Zhang Rongdian]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and premier of the State Council, said today that China's defense industry is at a juncture at which it should and can make greater contributions to the country's four modernizations, and at which it is necessary to shift the industry to serving the overall modernization drive.

Party and government leaders Zhao Ziyang, Yang Shangkun, Hu Qili, Li Peng, and Fang Yi met with 20 outstanding specialists from the Ministries of Aeronautics and Ordnance Industry at Huairentang Hall in Zhongnanhai this afternoon to discuss questions concerning gearing the defense industry to the needs of socialist modernization. They asked the specialists to convey cordial greetings to the large number of workers and staff in the defense industry front. During the meeting, Zhao Ziyang spoke on production and on the direction for developing the industry.

The 20 specialists present at the meeting were Lu Xiaopeng, Gu Songfen, Zhou Yaohe, Zhang Qishan, Lu Qingfeng, Cai Yunjin, Yang Yansheng, Liu Xianshi, Zhou Tianxiao, Xu Peilin, Zhu Hesun, Wu Cangpu, Jiang Chengwei, Fu Zhengbo, Chang Shibiao, Qian Shiwen, Wang Yue, Zhao Jiazhen, Zhang Jungao, and Wang Xingqiao.

Arriving at the meeting hall, Zhao Ziyang and other leading comrades warmly shook hands and exchanged greetings with the specialists. They also posed for pictures with the specialists from the two ministries separately.

Briefing Comrade Zhao Ziyang on the names and contributions of the specialists, Comrade Hu Qili said: Among the specialists are veteran comrades who returned to China from abroad following the founding of New China, as well as graduates fresh out of college in the early days of the liberation. But most of them were trained in New China. Over the past several decades, they have displayed self-reliance and a hardworking spirit in contributing, together with the large number of workers and staff in the defense industry front, to the development of the industry. They are the unsung heroes who have conscientiously served the people. There are many other such unsung heroes in the defense industry front.

The meeting of Premier Zhao Ziyang and other leading comrades with the specialists on the eve of the Spring Festival was to express gratitude and greetings to the large number of workers and staff members in the defense industry front on behalf of the party Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission.

During the meeting Aeronautics Minister Mo Wenxiang and Ordnance Industry Minister Zou Jiahua gave briefings on the work and production of their respective ministries. They also discussed the progress in producing goods for civilian use and future plans. In a warm atmosphere, the specialists offered constructive opinions and suggestions.

Then, Premier Zhao Ziyang spoke. He said: The large number of workers and staff in the defense industry front have made outstanding contributions to our country. Their spirit is commendable. Great progress has been recorded in our defense industry, which has a sound foundation and quality contingent of scientific and technical personnel. Remarkable achievements have also been scored in integrating the defense industry with the production of goods for civilian use. However, it should also be pointed out that the defense industry has not yet made the most use of its potential.

He said: Currently China is engaged in peaceful construction. It is necessary to conform with this trend and, under the premise of ensuring the production of the industry, and effectively guiding the ranks in a planned manner, to gear them to the needs of society and socialist modernization and economic construction. It is necessary to make full use of the advantages in equipment and technology in producing more quality products in demand by society.

Zhao Ziyang emphasized: The defense industry should equip itself with a crack contingent of scientific and technical personnel to tackle difficult assignments, improve quality, and lay the foundation. However, our ultimate goal is to invigorate the enterprises and allow the scientific and technical personnel to exercise their abilities. Currently China's defense industry is at a juncture at which it should and can contribute more to the four modernizations program. More enterprises, workers and staff members, and scientific and technical personnel from the defense industry front should gear to the needs of the modernization drive. Only when a breakthrough is achieved in this aspect can there be a guarantee for the production of the industry itself. Only when the defense industry is geared to serve the overall modernization drive is it possible to facilitate the modernization of our national defense. To further tap the production potentials of defense industry enterprises, it is necessary to transform them into enterprises producing civilian-use goods.

Comrades Li Peng and Fang Yi also spoke at the meeting. Chairman Ding Henggao and Political Commissar Wu Shaozu of the Commission for National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry were also present at the meeting.

BEIJING REVIEW RECAPS AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION

[Text] Beijing, January 24 (XINHUA) -- China has developed and manufactured more than 10,000 aircraft in the past three decades, according to the latest issue of the weekly magazine, BEIJING REVIEW, which will come off the press next Monday. They include fighters, attack planes, bombers, helicopters, transport planes, reconnaissance planes, trainers, unmanned planes, sea patrol planes and hydroplanes as well as a large number of missilies, the magazine disclosed.

China's aeronautics industry was founded in the early 1950s. Capable of doing only minor repairs in those days, the industry has developed into a full-fledged manufacturer with scientific research, production centers and educational facilities throughout the country. During the Seventh Five-Year Plan period starting this year, the structure of China's aeronautics industry will be readjusted to increase the amount of products for civilian use, said Wang Ang, vice-minister of the industry, in his article carried in the magazine. While turning out a new generation of fighter jets to catch up with world military powers, China intends to make several hundred civilian aircraft, Wang added. The country can now produce five types of transport and special-purpose airplanes, and helicopters, and five types of light and ultra-light planes.

Some 135 such aircraft were turned out in the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985), including the Yun-7 medium- and short-range passenger planes, Yun-8 medium-sized transports, Yun-11 and Yun-12 multi-purpose aircraft and Zhi-9 light helicopters. Some aircraft, including the Yun-7 and Yun-12, have attracted interest from overseas, and export negotiations are now under way.

However, China is still unable to produce long-distance airplanes due to the shortage of the necessary testing facilities. These planes have to be imported. In next five years China will continue to work with its foreign counterparts to develop new passenger planes, and import advanced technology and equipment to improve its medium-sized passenger planes, said the vice-minister.

China's aeronautical engineers have established bilateral scientific and technological relations with Federal Germany, Sweden, Britain, the United States, France, Italy and Romania. To promote technological exchanges with advanced countries, China is planning to hold an American aero-technology exhibition in Beijing this May, the first of its kind since the founding of the People's Republic.

CUTS IN ARMED FORCES 'RUNNING AHEAD OF SCHEDULE'

[By staff reporter Liu Dizhong]

[Text] Massive cuts announced last year in the Chinese armed forces are going smoothly, and currently running ahead of schedule. More than 100,000 officers have so far been discharged. And by the end of this month, jobs will have been assigned for nearly 800,000 troops returning to civilian life, including 770,000 compulsory servicemen and 30,000 volunteer soldiers. Meanwhile, about 47,000 aging PLA officers have retired from military service and received a "decent arrangement," costing the state more than one million yuan ($360 million).

Demobilization is expected to be completed three months ahead of schedule, said a senior official of the Ministry of Civil Affairs. He said this was part of the Ministry's efforts to assist the streamlining of the forces by one million servicemen within two years. The plan was first announced by party General Secretary Hu Yaobang when he visited Australia in April last year. About half of the one million personnel to be discharged will be officers. The streamlining will reduce the nation's armed forces to its lowest numbers in recent decades.

Although a complex task, the resettlement of de-mobbed soldiers was running smoothly, said the official. He attributed this to growth in the nation's economy. He said the prosperity of urban and rural enterprises had made it easy to find new jobs for servicemen. Tremendous efforts had also been made by the forces to train soldiers for new jobs, he said.

At a recent national meeting to exchange experience on resettlement work, Zhou Wenyuan, deputy director of PLA's General Political Department, called for compulsory secondary education for soldiers during the Seventh Five-Year Plan. Those who have received secondary education before recruitment would be encouraged to complete university courses during their service in the army, said Zhou. The goal is for all demobilized soldiers to reach the junior middle school educational level by the end of 1987.

Zhou stressed that both officers and men should be trained in both military and production skills and given a basic knowledge of science, technology and management. In the last few years, more than 120,000 training courses have been set up to teach soldiers civilian skills in transport, agriculture, food processing and other trades. The de-mobilized usually return to their home areas, and are assigned jobs there. But preferential treatment in job placement would be given to those formerly involved in frontier defence and wars or who had performed meritorious service, the Civil Affairs Ministry official said.

NAVAL VESSELS RETURN HOME AFTER VISITS

[Text] Shanghai, January 19 (XINHUA) -- Two Chinese naval vessels, a destroyer and a supply ship, returned here today after a goodwill visit to Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh. This is the first time for Chinese naval vessels to visit foreign countries since the founding of the People's Republic.

Addressing a welcoming rally held at the Wusong Port this morning, Zhang Xusan, deputy commander of the Chinese Navy, said the visit shows that the People's Navy is marching forward along the road of modernization and marks new stage of development in the friendly relations between the people of China and other countries.

Nie Kuiju, commander of the East China Sea Fleet of the Chinese Navy who commanded the two vessels during the visit, described the visit as a success, adding that it had promoted mutual understanding and friendship between the Chinese Navy and the naval forces of the three South Asian countries. Vice-Mayor of Shanghai Ni Tianzeng and diplomatic officials of the three countries in China also attended the rally.

The Chinese vessels left Shanghai on November 16 last year, their visit lasted for 65 days and covered 12,430 nautical miles.

REGULATIONS ON SINO-FOREIGN VENTURES REVISED

Maximum Term Increased

OW240914 Beijing XINHUA in English 0902 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 24 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese State Council has extended the maximum term of most joint ventures with foreigners from 30 to 50 years, effective February 1. According to the new policies, announced today but formulated last week, applications for extensions beyond 50 years will be welcomed from joint ventures:

-- Requiring large amounts of investment and long periods for construction.
-- Operating on low profit margins.
-- Having foreign partners who provide advanced technology or expertise to produce goods that will generate export income.

The new policies revise Article 100 of the 1983 "Regulations for the Implementation of the Law of China on Joint Ventures Using Chinese and Foreign Investment."

Currency Help Detailed

OW241046 Beijing XINHUA in English 1031 GMT 24 Jan 86

[XINHUA headline -- "State To Help Joint Ventures Overcome Currency Problems"]

[Text] Beijing, January 24 (XINHUA) -- Sino-foreign joint ventures which run into foreign currency deficit problems can receive government help under new State Council regulations, it was announced today. The 14-article regulations, which take effect from February 1, are aimed at encouraging more foreign partners to join in ventures by helping them overcome foreign exchange account problems, said a State Council official here. However, the regulations warn that joint ventures which do not fulfill contract requirements on foreign exchange earnings and export production will not receive such help.

The regulations say that joint ventures should aim to produce more for export to earn foreign currency, and should strive to maintain a healthy balance on their foreign exchange accounts. If a joint venture runs into deficit problems, the relevant Chinese department will be empowered to draw on the foreign exchange reserves of all joint ventures under its administration to readjust the deficit.

Some joint ventures will be allowed to sell large quantities of their goods on the Chinese market for long periods. The goods must be in urgent need by domestic buyers, and the foreign investor must have brought in advanced technology to produce sophisticated and internationally-competitive products. In such cases, the ventures' foreign exchange balance will be helped out under national or local foreign currency consumption plans.

Chinese departments with sufficient foreign currency will be able to pay for these ventures' products with it, with the approval of state foreign exchange control departments.

Foreign partners involved in two or more joint ventures in China will be able to pool foreign currency reserves if one runs into a deficit, with the approval of exchange control authorities.

And foreign investors in joint ventures which run up foreign exchange deficits will be encouraged to re-invest their share of Chinese currency earnings in other joint ventures which they consider will earn more foreign exchange.

The regulations also apply to Sino-foreign co-operatively-run enterprises, and joint ventures and co-operative enterprises with partners from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan. But they do not apply to joint ventures specializing in finance or insurance, which are run by partners from abroad or Hong Kong, Macao or Taiwan.

XINHUA Commentary

["Commentary: China Bids To Attract More Foreign Investment" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, January 24 (XINHUA) -- New State Council regulations concerning Sino-foreign joint ventures, which were published today, are designed to enhance economic co-operation with foreign partners. The regulations offer help to joint ventures which run into foreign exchange deficit problems, and also provide for the extension of the life of such ventures. They involve the use of more foreign funds to enable China to open wider to the rest of the world.

The government has been making efforts to protect the legitimate rights and interests of foreign investors in China by strengthening the law. Over the past few years, China has passed more than 100 economic laws and regulations related to Sino-foreign economic ties. These have played an increasingly greater role in protecting the legitimate rights and interests of the more than 1,800 joint ventures and 3,300 Sino-foreign co-operatively-run enterprises. The new regulations once again display that China's policy of opening to the outside world is a long-term measures. And they demonstrate that China is taking practical measures to guarantee foreign exchange earnings for joint ventures in China.

Foreign currency balance has been a common concern of all foreign investors in joint ventures. The experience of the past few years has shown that as long as foreign partners bring in advanced technology to produce internationally-competitive products, they will make profits. And the longer the duration of their investment -- the greater their profits.

For example, most of the 170 joint ventures and Sino-foreign co-operatively-run enterprises in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, Guangdong Province, are making considerable profits. In 1984, their profits totalled 176 million yuan. A very small number of joint ventures in Shenzhen and elsewhere in China have run into foreign exchange problems. But the main reasons have been a depressed world market and the outdated equipment they invested.

Chinese foreign economic relations and trade officials believe the new regulations will encourage more foreign partners to invest in China, particularly those who are willing to bring in advanced technology to run long-term joint ventures and co-operatively-run enterprises.

MAJORITY OF NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES SUBSIDIZED

[By staff reporter Wu Jingshu]

[Text] More than half of China's newspapers and magazines have been launched in the last five years. The 1,008 new newspapers, started since 1980 when the country embarked on its nationwide economic reform, account for more than 56 percent of the 1,777 daily, weekly and monthly publications printed in the country.

However, not all of them are doing well financially. Only a quarter of the nation's newspapers, both old and new, are earning a profit or keeping within their budgets. The rest are running at a deficit, relying on subsidies from their sponsors, according to a national survey of newspapers conducted by the Journalism Research Institute under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. The survey will be published in the next issue of CHINA JOURNALISM JOURNAL. The results of the survey, disclosed to CHINA DAILY yesterday, show a marked growth in collectively-owned newspapers.

Although their total number accounts for only 2.7 percent -- or only 40 -- of the 1,777 newspapers now in circulation, their sales are going up fast -- reaching a total of 7.18 million last year. Another outstanding feature of these "small papers" is their efficiency. Usually run by just a few experienced professionals with the help of several free-lance writers, these papers are highly competitive and rarely suffer financial losses, the survey shows.

In one case, the SHANXI RURAL ABACUS JOURNAL run by four rural residents, who were its editors, reporters and publishers at the same time, has a circulation of 500,000.

The 13 educational journals published by collectives now have a readership of more than 4 million -- mainly among students and teachers, according to the survey. However, the country's 98 daily and evening newspapers are still the most popular, despite a drop in circulation at the beginning of 1986.

Out of a registered total national newspaper circulation of 207 million copies, PEOPLE'S DAILY still leads with daily sales of 3.68 million a day, followed by REFERENCE INFORMATION -- a tabloid focusing on foreign dispatches -- with 3.57 million copies. The third is CHINA YOUNGSTERS NEWS, a weekly, which now sells a 3.37 million copies. The three popular evening papers -- the GUANGZHOU EVENING NEWS, SHANGHAI EVENING NEWS and Beijing EVENING NEWS -- dropped circulation this year by 10, 4 and 8 percent to 1, 5, 1.33 and 0.74 million respectively, according to the latest subscription register.

Survey Detailed

[Excerpts] Beijing, January 23 (XINHUA) -- China's economic reforms have led to a big growth in the newspaper industry, according to Beijing press reports today.

Regular sales of national and local newspapers now total more than 202 million copies, according to the survey. Communist Party newspapers above county level now number 368, or more than 20 percent of the total. The number of professional papers is growing quickly. Up to last March, there were 160 devoted to science and technology, 112 to economics, 174 to education and 61 to politics and law.

Among other newspapers, 28 are especially for children, 22 for young people, two for the aged, 26 for workers, 25 for peasants, 11 for returned Overseas Chinese and 361 specialize in business news. In addition, there are 80 papers for ethnic minorities, printed in 13 minority languages.

[Report: "Shanghai No 27 Radio Plant Group Observes Discipline While Receiving Training Abroad"]

[Text] In line with the needs of technical transformation, the Shanghai No 27 Radio Plant made an investment by importing some important equipment. In accordance with contract stipulations, the plant sent a group to Tokyo and Osaka, Japan at the end of 1984, to be trained in the use of automatic wire-coiling machines.

The group comprised three people: Communist Party member Xu Lugen, head of the No 1 workshop; Communist Party member Tang Huiqi, head of technical equipment; and an interpreter. During their stay abroad, they consciously observed discipline and declined to accept certain "favors" and "rewards" offered by the supplier, thereby upholding national dignity.

One day, after discussing a matter with the supplier concerning the implementation of the contract, the comrades of the group were prepared to leave Osaka for Tokyo. At noon, a chief from the supplier's factory told them: "We have bought your train tickets for the trip back to Tokyo. You can enjoy a special discount of 10 percent. The tickets can be purchased for only 10,200 yen each. You may claim payment for the full price of 12,000 yen back home and keep the balance as pocket money." The comrades of the group considered this to be wrong and declined.

During their training period at a manufacturing center, members of the group participated in technical training by day and devoted themselves to study and discussion at night. They also had to prepare lessons before class. They often did not sleep until late at night. One day, a responsible person of the manufacturing center said to them: "You study day and night and have no time to go shopping. I can buy each of you a color television set, if you just hand me your pocket money. That will do, and I will make up the balance needed." The comrades of the group politely replied: "Thank you for your concern. We have come here chiefly to learn things. Electronic products have now become common in our country. When we have time later, we will go out to take a look for ourselves." Why were they impervious to the lure of "special favors" and "rewards?"

Communist Party member Xu Liugen, head of the group, said aptly: Our group was sent abroad by the organization concerned to receive training. We not only felt greatly honored but were also filled with a great sense of responsibility. The attitude adopted toward "special favors" and "rewards" from the other side has a bearing on the motherland's prestige and national dignity. We should impose strict demands on ourselves. In no way must we compromise national dignity and personal integrity.

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Forget the Cardinal Principles of Moral Integrity While Staying Abroad"]

[Text] In going abroad to study, to conduct surveys, to pursue further studies, and to carry out economic and technical exchanges, the aims are: To learn; to introduce advanced foreign science and technology and management experiences; to increase understanding between the people of our own and other countries; and to stimulate our modernization.

During their stay in Japan to receive technical training, three comrades of the Shanghai No 27 Radio Plant, including Xu Liugen, felt a great sense of responsibility and studied day and night. Before their completion of studies and return home, they declined to accept "special favors" and "rewards" from the other side. Such a way of humbly learning things and strictly observing rules of discipline guiding Chinese workers abroad has won praise from the unit in charge of their training and should be hailed.

In the past few years, our country has sent quite a large number of delegations and groups abroad on business. Most of the comrades have performed quite well while abroad. But some people going abroad on such pretexts as "conducting surveys" and "studying things" have produced scant results, due to their lack of technical expertise and knowledge. A small number of people have even seized the opportunity to sightsee and to reach out for "foreign goods," compromising personal integrity and national dignity. This is a manifestation of unhealthy party style and social practices in exchanges with foreign countries and must be rectified.

People in foreign countries treat our personnel abroad with gifts or rewards, mainly out of friendship. On no account should this be doubted. But there is also no denying that an extremely small number of people have an axe to grind. They are bringing the so-called "art of angling" to bear on some of our workers abroad who are greedy for something extra. As a result, contracts that should not be signed are concluded. Things that should not be allowed are promised. Where an individual gains something extra, the state suffers a huge loss. Personnel guilty of such a mistake should be dealt with solemnly.

People going abroad should not forget principle. To get something done, we must send people abroad. We must select those who know the ropes and who are the right kind. No unit can act out of sentiment by favoring certain people when choosing travelers abroad and by letting anyone who asserts himself go. Comrades going abroad must observe the rules of discipline guiding Chinese workers abroad and uphold the dignity of the state and the people. The state's money must be spent where it counts most. Our country is still not quite well off. Those people sent abroad at such a high cost to the state should do everything possible to serve it, enhance its image and dedicate acquired skills and knowledge to the cause of modernization. Only in this way are they worthy of the weighty mission with which they are entrusted by the state.

GUANGMING RIBAO COMMENTS ON SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

[Commentator's article: "Persist in Carrying Out Reform, Do a Good Job in Building Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] Building socialist spiritual civilization is a long-term strategic task. Under the new situation of reforms developing from the rural areas to cities and spreading in a pervasive manner, the problems to be solved are how to correctly understand the role of reform in promoting the construction of spiritual civilization and how to make the construction of spiritual civilization ensure and promote the smooth progress of reforms. Some onesided views exist at present in this regard. For example, some people link reform with uncivilized phenomena such as the unhealthy tendencies inside the party and in the society, holding that they are the result of reforms. Certain units and people that take the lead in reforms have come under some unfair criticism. Some cadres and other people invariably focus on the negative side when the effects of opening up and invigorating the domestic economy are mentioned. These onesided understandings must be clarified in theory, based on the actual conditions.

Reform Pushes Ahead the Building of Spiritual Civilization, While the Building of Spiritual Civilization Ensures the Smooth Progress of Reform

The party Central Committee has once again stressed that it is necessary to persist in putting reform in the first place, making reform and construction suit and promote each other. Reform promotes the development of the productive forces and will inevitably bring about a series of changes in economic life, social life, work style, and spiritual state. The most basic thing is to enable people to more correctly master and apply the objective laws governing socialist construction, so that socialist construction, which includes building material civilization and spiritual civilization, may better express the developmental laws of social history in conformity with the Marxist theories on knowledge and historical materialism and the objective realities of China. Therefore, reform has blazed new trails for building the material civilization and the spiritual civilization. Without the spirit of reform, we will fail to do a good job in building spiritual civilization. This is one important point.

Another point is that the construction of socialist spiritual civilization is capable of promoting the whole society to shape a civilized, healthy, and scientific lifestyle which suits the requirements of the development of the modern productive forces and will invigorate a positive, progressive, and motivated spiritual state. It is capable of cultivating and upgrading the spiritual and cultural qualities of the people, bringing up one generation after another of new socialist people who have lofty ideals, morality, knowledge, and discipline. Therefore the construction of socialist spiritual civilization is a tremendous motivating force for pushing ahead reform, as well as a reliable guarantee for resisting the corruption of decadent bourgeois ideas and the revival of decaying feudal ideas and making reform develop smoothly along the direction of socialism.

The construction of socialist spiritual civilization includes both ideological and cultural construction. Reform includes opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy. Opening up to the outside world refers to not only developing foreign economic ties, importing advanced technology, and studying scientific management, but also ideological and cultural exchanges. The latter enable people to broaden their horizons, to absorb worthwhile things, to be enlightened, and to have something to borrow from and to refer to. Therefore, opening up to the outside world is helpful not only to building the materialist civilization, but also to building the spiritual civilization. Of course, ideological and cultural exchanges will unavoidably bring some decadent and backward things, creating some negative effects. One analogy says: When the windows are open, fresh air comes in, as well as mosquitoes and flies. That means that there are advantages and disadvantages. First, we can see after checking that opening up to the outside world has more advantages than disadvantages. Second, some of our existing negative factors and decadent phenomena have nothing to do with opening up to the outside world. Some of them have existed for a long time, even since ancient times. Third, regarding negative and decadent things, we have full power to resist them, and we can limit their influence to the minimum. The key lies in keeping our heads sober. We should be neither careless nor panic-stricken, and we should not refrain from doing necessary things for fear of a slight risk.

In regard to invigorating the domestic economy, the reform of the economic structure going on at present aims to set up a socialist economic system with Chinese characteristics, full of vigor and vitality, which will promote the development of the productive forces. Such a socialist economic structure full of vigor and vitality is different from the rigid pattern of the past and is basically different from capitalism. Such reform will powerfully push forward the development of the materialist civilization and the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

The role of reform in pushing forward cultural construction is obvious. For example, because of the development of a commodity economy and the growth in the role of the market, many enterprises have attached attention to technical transformation and improving management and operations, and have begun to attach attention to the development of knowledge and the employment of qualified people.

With the breakup of the malpractice of "eating from the same big pot," the workers and staff members have displayed great enthusiasm in studying technology, science, and culture. Studying has become a trend among young people in particular. The atmosphere of showing respect for knowledge and talented people has strengthened, which promotes the development of science, education, and culture. All this is easy to understand. Then how does reform push ideological construction forward? Building a socialist economic structure with Chinese characteristics full of vigor and vitality is a complicated social practice without precedent in China, and we should not copy books and foreign patterns. A solution is to be found through continuous exploration in practice. This requires theoretical workers to delve deep into the realities of life, sum up experiences, and seek new answers suited to the national conditions of China, thus enriching and developing Marxist theory.

Second, reform is the inevitable road leading to the realization of communist ideals. Only when a good job is done in reform will it be possible to develop the social productive forces, to make our country powerful and our people prosperous, and to bring the advantages of socialism into full play, thus making those people who have communist ideals more resolute and causing more people to adopt communist ideals. Third, reform will ensure in a down-to-earth way the status of the laboring people as masters of the country in all kinds of systems, while closely linking their labor with their own material interests. In this way, their enthusiasm, wisdom, and initiative will be brought into full play. The sluggishness and slackness and the mental state of neglecting the collective and public undertakings which resulted from "eating from the same big pot" in the past will be changed. They will show greater concern for the interests of the state and the enterprise and strengthen the spirit of collectivism, which also means upgrading the standard of morality.

Fourth, reform is a profound change of a revolutionary nature which will inevitably bring about important changes in people's way of thinking, promote people to further emancipate their minds, and change those rigid ideological patterns which have limited people's ideological development, thus making people's minds unprecedently active. In the course of reform, new things emerge one after another, powerfully lashing at those conventional forces satisfied with the status quo, complacent and conservative, afraid of change, and in a rut, as well as at those outmoded concepts and old traditions which are out of step with the development of the productive forces and social progress. They are like spring breezes blowing over the vast land of the motherland, stepping up the germination and growth of the new concepts of value, right and wrong, honor and disgrace, and morality, and the progress of the modernization of people's ideas and concepts. On this course, the scientific Marxist world outlook and way of thinking as the quintessence of the spirit of our times will display its vitality and vigor.

Of course, the construction of socialist spiritual civilization is a tremendous systematic project consisting of many factors. We say reform is the motivating force of spiritual civilization, but this does not mean to say it is the sole motivating force. Regarding the construction of spiritual civilization itself, much work remains to be done. This also does not mean to say that when a good job is done in reform, a good job will naturally be done regarding spiritual civilization. When we talk about the role of promoting spiritual civilization regarding reform, it is obvious in some respects but not quite as readily in others. Therefore, it has not caught people's full attention. With the deepening of reform, such a promotional role will certainly be expressed more and more markedly.

The Cause and Effect Relationship Does Not Exist Between Reform and Unhealthy Tendencies; the Correction of Unhealthy Tendencies Depends on the Smooth Progress of Reform

With the all-round implementation of reform since 1984, some problems have emerged about which everyone is talking. Regarding those problems, we must conduct specific analyses. Generally speaking, these problems fall into the following categories: 1) conduct in violation of the law; 2) phenomena of discipline violations; 3) unhealthy tendencies inside the party and in the society; and 4) deviations and mistakes in reforms. Within these four categories, the degree of their seriousness differs and their natures are different. They should not be regarded as the same, and their solutions should also be different.

In his speech delivered at the national conference of party delegates, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that we must first concentrate on bringing about a fundamental improvement in party conduct and in general social conduct concerning the construction of spiritual civilization. Based on this requirement, the construction of spiritual civilization should give the correction of unhealthy tendencies inside the party and in the society an important place. This is beyond question and is the urgent demand of the masses. The question now is whether it is necessary to clarify the relationship between unhealthy tendencies and reform. If it is held, as in the case of some comrades, that unhealthy tendencies result from reform, then people will lose their confidence in reform and the momentum of the reform will cool down in order to correct unhealthy tendencies. This is unfavorable to our cause.

Since the all-round implementation of reform in the cities, new unhealthy tendencies have emerged inside the party and the society, such as taking advantage of one's position to enter into commercial activities, speculating and reselling goods for profit, practicing fraud, and seeking money in doing everything. These phenomena have a certain hand-in-hand relationship with reforms. However, not all things with such a relationship are due to cause and effect. Second, regarding their occurrence, unhealthy tendencies have long existed. They are only new forms adopted under the new conditions. Some have taken advantages of reform; others have waved the banner of "reform," passing off sham as genuine. Reform should not be held responsible for this.

As to the real causes for unhealthy tendencies, whether subjective or objective, they should all be found from the remnants of old ideas and old social relations, the old system, and the effects of capitalism. Regarding objective causes, they are chiefly the malpractices while guarding against and eradicating these effects. Because our reform is carried out step by step, some of those malpractices have been corrected, while others have not been in the course of reform. New regulations have been set up, but they are not complete and perfect enough, and remain to be formed in a complete set. Under such circumstances, the malpractices are exposed all the more conspicuously; there are leaks of which unhealthy tendencies take advantage. Therefore, we can see that some unhealthy tendencies are flooding to take advantage of reform but are not caused by reform itself.

In regard to the causes of unhealthy tendencies, those blaming the negative role of the commodity economy are especially conspicuous. It is held that unhealthy tendencies seem to be brought about by the commodity economy. Such a concept has a lengthy history. China has a 2000-year feudal history. The concept of attaching importance to farming and repressing commerce ran through those years and the concept of treating commerce lightly was deep-rooted. Under the influence of "leftist" ideas, the criticism and restriction of commodity production and monetary exchange are well remembered by all. The decision of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee has affirmed that socialist economy is planned commodity economy on the basis of public ownership and has added new contents to the treasurehouse of Marxist theory. But this important concept has not been understood by all people. Some of our comrades are still very worried about the development of socialist commodity production and exchange. When they see the unhealthy tendencies inside the party and in the society, they always link them with commodity economy. Such a mentality of dreading commodity economy derived from the self-sufficient natural economy is precisely the old concept which should be changed in the course of reform.

We might as well explore whether it is the development of commodity economy or the underdevelopment of commodity economy that has brought about unhealthy tendencies. The answer is obviously the latter. In fact, it is precisely the malpractices of the rigid pattern in our economic structure which have curbed the development of productive forces and blocked ease of flow in circulation channels, compelling many commodity producers and managers (including enterprises and individuals) to spend extra money in paving the way for these channels; that is where unhealthy tendencies came in.

Therefore, how can we pin the blame on commodity economy itself? If a good job is done in reform, when relations are eased, commodity economy develops, the circulation channels become unblocked, and exchange becomes normal, will there by any room for these unhealthy tendencies? Taking advantage of one's position to engage in commecial activities is one of the unhealthy tendencies emerging since 1985, and the central authorities have already taken steps to correct it in a big way. However, the harm caused by such an unhealthy tendency does not lie in engaging in commercial activities but in taking advantage of one's position to engage in commercial activities. It is factors outside of the commodity economy which interfere with the normal development of the commodity economy. One of the requirements of the Central Committee on reform is a separation between the functions of the government and enterprises. Taking advantage of one's position to engage in commercial activities means party and government organs or cadres directly running enterprises, doing business and reaping profits in these activities. Is this not precisely counter to reform? Therefore, blaming commodity economy for the rise of unhealthy tendencies does not conform to the actual conditions.

To sum up, in order to correct unhealthy tendencies, we should by no means halt reform. Even less should we beat a retreat. There is no future in doing so. Only by resolutely following the road of reform will our country, our nation, and the magnificent cause of the four modernizations have hope, and only by persisting in reform will it be possible to gradually overcome unhealthy tendencies and to accelerate the development of socialist spiritual civilization.

RESEARCH REPORT OUTLINES REFORM, OWNERSHIP POLICY

HK210806 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 6 Jan 86 p 3

[Report: "Research Report 'China in the Year 2000' Portrays the Orientation of Reform of the Economic Structure and the Trends in Ownership Changes"]

[Text] "China in the Year 2000," a research report completed under the direction of the Technological and Economic Research Center of the State Council, has revealed the future orientation of the reform of China's economic structure and the trends in its ownership changes. The report predicts that the major targets of the reform of the economic structure as a whole will be met in 5 years, that is, by 1990. After that, China's economic structure will do the following:

-- The functions of the government will be separated from those of the enterprises. The state will no longer undertake the overall management of enterprises but will exercise macrocontrol over the operations of enterprises through taxation.

-- The socialist state-owned enterprises will become relatively independent commodity producers and dealers. This means that the enterprises will enjoy various powers such as making arrangements for production, supply, and marketing activities; keeping and budgeting funds they are entitled to retain; appointing, dismissing, employing, or selecting work personnel; and setting the prices of their products within the limits permitted by the state.

-- The principle of distribution according to work will be implemented conscientiously. The wages and bonuses of the workers and staff members will be linked more satisfactorily with the economic results of enterprises so as to fully reflect the principle of more pay for more work and the difference between complicated and simple labor and between strenuous and nonstrenuous labor.

-- The reform of the planning structure will be completed. It is estimated that by 1990 or a little later, mandatory planning will be basically nonexistent, except for just a few products in very short supply and vital to the national economy and the people's livelihood, such as energy and power, and for some economic activities with big gaps between enterprise results and social benefits, such as the manufacture of products which may cause serious pollution. The total targets of guidance planning will be transmitted by the State Planning Commission to various departments for overall economic balancing and management and to enterprises as information and as reference for making policy decisions.

-- The price structure will be rationalized. If smooth progress can be made in the price reform, it is estimated that by 1990 or a little later, with the exception of some public utilities charges and energy prices, the prices of most products will have been floated.

-- The role of finance, banking, and other economic levers will be greatly strengthened. Under the new economic structure wherein market mechanism plays an important role, the state should not only give play to the regulatory role of financial, tax, banking, and other functional institutions, but also establish regulatory centers to apply the economic levers in a comprehensive way. Banks will give play to their role as organizers and regulators of the capital market.

-- The system of running enterprises in a democratic way will be perfected. For a fairly long transitional period, the directors or managers of enterprises will still be appointed by administrative bodies at a higher level. It is estimated that in the later stage of the reform of the economic structure, a transition to the election system from the system of integrating opinion polls with appointments by the higher authorities will gradually be made regarding the selection of responsible persons of large enterprises. But the election system will probably be practiced in full in small enterprises.

The report holds that with the full-scale launch of reform of the economic structure, focusing on the urban economy, ownership structure in cities and towns will change in the following direction: First, the basic means of production of large and medium-sized key enterprises will still belong to the state but they will also contain a certain factor of ownership by the collectives and individual workers. Of the 1 million state-owned enterprises in our country, only 5,000-6,000 enterprises belong to this category. Second, it is estimated that by the end of this century, the overwhelming majority of small state-owned industrial and commercial enterprises will be owned by the state but run by the workers and staff members either collectively or individually. Third, a number of enterprises unsuitable to be owned by the "big collectives" or the "whole people in a narrow sense" should preserve their characteristics of collective ownership. These collective enterprises will develop tremendously in cities and towns.

The report says that there are as of yet no explicit stipulations on which policies we should adopt toward the country's national capital. It is necessary to study and explore in theoretical terms this question related to ownership structure.

EFFECTS OF COMMODITY PRICING, INCOME VIEWED

HK220925 Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin 1258 GMT 3 Jan 86

[Interview with Xue Muqiao in Hangzhou "recently" on "TV Forum" program by unidentified reporter: "Noted Economist Xue Muqiao Answers Our Reporter's Questions Concerning Commodity Prices"]

[Text] [Begin recording] [Reporter] Revered Comrade Xue, the question of commodity prices affects every household. It is a matter of concern for all people. Over the past few years, prices in our country have risen markedly. Therefore, people worry about the rise in prices and wonder whether it will affect people's living standards. What is your view on this matter?

[Xue Muqiao] In my opinion, since 1979, commodity prices have really risen. However, due to the fact that people's incomes have risen by a bigger margin as compared with the rise in prices...

[Reporter interposes] Comrade Xue Muqiao said: In my opinion, since 1979, commodity prices have really risen. However, due to the fact that people's incomes have risen by a bigger margin as compared with the rise in prices, the people's living standards have really been improved. In order to enable our people to live a stable life, we hope to keep prices stable. However, price stability does not mean a price freeze. Our pricing policy must not concentrate on seeking price stability alone. The more important thing is to promote the development of production. In order to promote the development of production, prices of various kinds of commodities were slightly raised. If prices were not raised, the development of production could not be promoted and there was no way to satisfy [words indistinct]. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has gradually readjusted commodity prices for the sake of regulating economic relations and speeding up the construction pace of our national economy, and particularly for the sake of quickening the pace of the development of agricultural production. Over the past few years, the prices for agricultural products have been raised by a large margin, thus spurring faster growth in agricultural production. People in both the urban and rural areas are pleased with the rapid development of agricultural production. As regards higher purchasing prices for agricultural products, there are two different kinds of reactions: Peasants are very happy about the higher prices while the great majority of city residents are against the higher prices. This is because peasants are producers of agricultural products and city residents are consumers of such products. In regard to the question of prices, the interests of producers and the interests of consumers always become conflicting interests. In 1979, in order to realize rapid development of agricultural production, prices for agricultural products were raised to a greater extent. While the purchasing price for food grain was raised, the selling price remained unchanged. To offset the price increases of eight major types of nonstaple foods, 5 yuan were added to the wages of every worker and staff. From 1979 to 1980, production output of food grain, cotton, and all kinds of nonstaple foods increased rapidly; the supply of pork, chicken and eggs exceeded demand, and restrictions on the supply were lifted. With the increase in peasants' incomes and in agricultural production, there was an improvement in peasants' living standards, and with the ample supply of nonstaple foods, there was a marked improvement in city residents' living standards. With the increased supply of such nonstaple foods as meat, fishes, poultry and eggs, people are no longer satisfied with a sufficiency in food, and are beginning to seek improvement in the quality of the food they eat. Of course, the 5-yuan subsidy for price increases was calculated to enable recipients to maintain their original standards of living. Owing to such recipients' increased consumption of nonstaple foods, and owing to an improvement in the quality of the food they eat, their increased food spending exceeded 5 yuan. Therefore, many people are still dissatisfied with the rise in nonstaple food prices. We should not lose sight of the fact that over the past few years, there have been rapid increases in wages, including bonuses.

Wage growth is far higher than that of commodity prices. As a result, people's living standards have markedly improved. They eat better food and wear better clothing. There has also been a rapid growth in the purchase of high-grade consumer durable goods such as color TV sets. At the same time the total volume of bank savings deposits by both urban and rural people has increased to a great extent by a large margin annually. The living standards of our people have evidently been raised in the course of price readjustment. The following statistics throw a lot of light on the matter. In the 6 years from 1978 to 1984, the general market retail price index increased by 17.7 percent. Among these, food achieved the highest increase. The retail index of food prices rose by 26.9 percent during the period 1978-84.

This figure only includes state-operated market quotations. However, during the period 1978-84, purchasing prices for farm and sideline products rose by 53.6 percent. Owing to the fact that purchasing prices for grain and edible oil were raised and their selling prices were not, the growth in the purchasing prices is higher than the growth in the selling prices. The losses incurred in the imbalance of purchasing prices and selling prices are subsidized by the state. In the 6 years from 1978 to 1984, the per capita consumption level of urban and rural people rose by 86.9 percent. Allowing for the factor of price increases, the real consumption level rose by 57.7 percent. During the period 1978-84, per capita income of peasants rose by 165 percent. Allowing for the price increase factor, the real per capita income of peasants rose by 144 percent. From 1978 to 1984, the average wage of workers and staff increased by 58.6 percent. Allowing for the price increase factor, the real average wages of workers and staff increased by 32.3 percent. The following are figures about the per capita material consumption level of urban and rural residents in the period 1978-84: Grain rose from 391 jin in 1978 to 503 jin in 1984, an increase of 28.6 percent; edible vegetable oil from 3.2 jin to 9.4 jin, an increase of nearly 200 percent; and pork from 15.3 jin to 26 jin, an increase of 70 percent. In the period 1978-84, the peasants' consumption of edible vegetable oil and particularly their consumption of grain increased at a faster rate than those of workers and staff. There are more figures about per capita material consumption level of urban and rural people during the period 1978-84: cloths and fabrics of all kinds that are used for making clothes rose from 24.1 chi in 1979 to 32.5 chi in 1984, an increase of 35 percent; and money spent on articles of everyday use rose from 28.8 yuan to 67 yuan, an increase of 132.6 percent. Let me give more concrete illustrations: the number of bicycles owned by each 100 people rose from 7.7 bicycles to 18.8 bicycles, an increase of 144 percent; the number of TV sets owned by each 100 people rose from 0.4 to 4.6, an increase of a little over 15 times; and the number of radios owned by each 100 people rose from 7.8 to 21.6, an increase of 177 percent. The above statistics comprise both urban and rural statistical figures. In our cities, almost every worker and staff owns a bicycle; more than 90 percent of worker-staff households own TV sets and are beginning to replace their black-and-white TV's with color sets; almost every household owns one to two radios; and many households own cassette tape-recorders, refrigerators, washing machines, and so on. Is it conceivable that these facts cannot prove that the people's living standards have really been enhanced?

[Reporter] Revered Comrade Xue, I think that you should discuss the question of the people's living standards.

[Xue Muqiao] As regards the people's living standards, overall...

[Reporter interposes] Comrade Xue Muqiao said: As regards the people's overall living standards, they have been continuously enhanced, especially over the past few years. However, the living standards of our people have improved in varying degrees. Some people's living standards have been enhanced by a bigger margin due to a large increase in their wages; and some people's living standards have been enhanced by a smaller margin due to a smaller increase in their wages. The living standard of a very small number of people may have dropped.

For example, when commodity prices were raised, pensions for retired workers and staff remained unchanged. As a result, their living standards may have dropped. The state recently paid attention to his problem and issued cost-of-living allowances for pensions. The living standards of those households with a large number of employed people and a small number of dependents can be enhanced at a faster rate. The living standards of those households with a small number of employed people and a large number of dependents can only be enhanced at a slow rate, and they do have difficulties.

[Reporter] Is it true that the extent of improvement in rural living standard is relatively greater?

[Xue Muqiao] It is true. We...

[Reporter interposes] Comrade Xue Muqiao added: Since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have first improved the peasants' living standards within 6 to 7 years. We have basically solved the problem of food and clothing for 800 million peasants. There is still a small number of rural people who cannot reach the level of having sufficient food and clothing. It is only a very very small number of people.

The great majority of our rural people have surpassed the level of having sufficient food and clothing. In addition to having sufficient food, they want to eat better and wear better clothing. The living standards of urban residents, workers, and staff have also been enhanced. Their living standards have been enhanced by a smaller margin as compared with the improvement in the peasants' living standards. Overall, the living standards of workers and staff are a little bit higher than the peasants'. It is not true to say that the peasants' living standards are generally higher than the living standards of workers and staff. In the past, our enterprises repeatedly raised wages and bonuses. Besides the 800 million peasants, the living standards of our 80 million workers and staff have been enhanced at a relatively fast rate. Due to the fact that bonuses issued by organs and schools are very small and that some organs and schools simply do not issue bonuses, living standards there have been enhanced by a relatively small margin. After the wage readjustment in 1985, the salaries for many people at organs and schools increased by a fairly big margin. Their living standards and the living standards of workers and staff are basically equal. We first solved the biggest problem of feeding and clothing 800 million peasants. We then solved the problem of enhancing the living standards of 80 million workers and staff. Finally, it will be relatively easy to solve the problem concerning our 20 million organ cadres and teachers.

[Reporter] At present, some people deeply cherish the memory of price stability in the sixties. They therefore wonder whether the price and wage levels in the sixties can be restored. In other words, they are saying: I would rather have no pay raise than have price hikes. Do you think that it is impossible to have such circumstances?

[Xue Muqiao] I have also received readers' letters with these kind of questions. If the wage and price levels in the sixties are restored, it will be..

[Reporter interposes] Comrade Xue Muqiao said: I have also received readers' letters with these kind of questions. If the wage and price levels in the sixties are restored, it will be necessary to restore the living standards of the sixties. If the prices of agricultural products in the sixties are restored, the peasants' incomes will be greatly reduced and their enthusiasm for production will also be greatly reduced. Under these circumstances, the wages of urban workers and staff will be reduced, the supply of nonstaple foods for them will be greatly reduced, and the pork quota system of each person being limited to half a jin of pork per month will be restored too.

In those years, only the big cities, namely, Beijing and Shanghai, could allocate and transfer pork from other parts of the country to implement their pork quota system of each person being limited to 1 jin of pork per month. In those days, it was almost impossible to buy fresh fish in the market and only a few (salted) fish were available. At that time, cotton cloth and edible oil and even soap and matches were regarded as fixed-quantity supplies; city residents could only achieve, at the very most, a sufficiency in food and clothing; peasants were burdened with purchase quotas and had great difficulty in achieving a sufficiency in food and clothing; and many peasants did not have enough food to eat nor did they have enough winter clothing.

At present, in addition to wanting a sufficiency in food and clothing, our urban and rural people also pay attention to the nutritive value of the food they eat and want to wear better clothing. I think that the great majority of our urban and rural people do not like the restoration of the living standards of the sixties. From 1979 to 1983, the supply of nonstaple foods became increasingly plentiful while consumer demands grew more quickly. Starting in 1984, the supply gradually fell short of demand. Therefore, in 1985 our country enacted a reform in the system of administering nonstaple food prices and relaxed price controls, thus bringing about relatively more price rises. In order to prevent the living standards of urban residents from falling after the emergence of nonstaple food price hikes, the state issued subsidies for price increases. This reform has enabled 800 million peasants to achieve increases in income through the increase in purchasing prices. They are full of joy and are currently making great efforts to increase production. A considerable number of people among our 200 million urban residents are very disgusted with price increases. They say that due to price increases, the people's living standards have fallen. The supply of nonstaple foods in 1985 has surpassed any previous year's supply, thus bringing about brisk buying and selling. The people's living standards have obviously not fallen but have continued to rise. A person said in his letter to me, when you were the chairman of the commodity prices committee in the early sixties, you were capable of keeping planned prices stable and reducing prices for country fair trade. Why is it that you are now advocating the abandonment of planned prices and the replacement of market quotations by market prices?

The early sixties comprised the difficult 3-year period and came after the 3-year Great Leap Forward. During the difficult period, although prices of planned commodities were stable, there were market price hikes: 1 jin of pork cost 5 yuan, an egg cost 50 fen, and 1 jin of grain cost 1 yuan. At that time, in order to keep prices stable, the state decided that each person was limited to 2 liang of pork per month. As regards cotton cloth, each urban resident was limited to 6 chi per year while each rural resident was limited to 3 chi per year. In those days, we also wanted to raise the price of meat so as to enable urban residents to eat more meat. However, our peasants then did not have enough grain rations for themselves. So, where could they find feed for raising more pigs? Things are different now. Our peasant households have grain to spare and the state can also allocate tens of billions of jin of grain to encourage peasants to promote pig-raising and chicken-raising. Prices may be raised a little in order to increase the supply of such nonstaple foods as meats, fish, poultry, and eggs, and to bring about a marked improvement in the living standards of urban and rural people. The current increases in nonstaple food prices and subsidies for price increases are based on previous consumption levels. The subsidies can fully offset the increases in nonstaple food prices.

However, with the rise in living standards, people eat more nonstaple foods: food quality is better too. Therefore, their expenses have increased. However, with a bigger increase in wages and bonuses, although people's expenses have increased, they still have surplus money to deposit in banks. Our urban and rural residents' savings deposits reached 30.9 billion yuan in 1978 and rose to 114.9 billion yuan in 1984, thus achieving an increase of 200 to 300 percent.

The total volume of bank savings deposits by them in 1984 alone increased by 18.5 billion yuan; there was an even bigger increase in 1985. How can you complain of hardship or suffering when your living standard has been enhanced and when you have surplus money in hand? Some comrades say that the statistics are not correct. They use the price of live fish as an example. They say: The price of live fish has risen to 3 yuan a jin, an increase of 100 percent as compared with the past. Please try to think back. Live fish could hardly by found in markets in 1978. Even during the previous 2 years, it was still quite difficult to buy any live fish in markets. Now, live fish are available every day. Price controls were relaxed earlier in the Guangzhou City market. In 1983, live fish there rose to more than 3 yuan per jin. In 1984, when market supplies in Guangzhou became ample, the price of live fish dropped to less than 3 yuan per jin. The 1984 price of live fish remained unchanged in 1985 in Guangzhou. Some other comrades say that the price of lean pork has risen to more than 2 yuan per jin.

I would like to ask these comrades to think back. In the sixties, people's bellies had very little fat, they therefore vied with one another in buying fat meat. Now, people's bellies have plenty of fat. People who enjoy high living standards do not want fat meat and only want lean meat. As a result, lean meat is expensive, and fat meat is cheap. Does this not show that people's living standards have been markedly enhanced? I have said several times that, fundamentally speaking, the improvement in people's living standards depends not on price stability but on the rate of production development. In the past, many comrades looked upon fixed-quantity supplies, fixed-quota purchases, and price stability as party of the superiority of socialism, saying that people should cherish the memory of the sixties. This is a misunderstanding. Adopting guiding principles on the basis of this kind of misunderstanding means that there will be no increase in the supply of nonstaple foods and that it will be impossible to enhance people's living standards. If we only look after the interests of consumers and do not look after the interests of producers, production cannot be developed; the needs of consumers cannot be satisfied, and people's living standards will remain at the original levels forever.

From the late fifties to the early seventies, we were in such circumstances all along. Starting from 1979, the change in policies has enabled the supply of commodities, and particulary the supply of foods, to increase by a very big margin, thus markedly enhancing people's living standards. Let us contrast the earlier period with the later period and find out exactly which period is good. Is it the earlier period or the later period? The prices of commodities, and mainly the prices of nonstaple foods, have really risen, and people's living standards have really been improved too. This is a correct appraisal which truly reflects the actual situation. Many comrades just demand improvement in their living standards and resolutely oppose the readjustment of commodity prices and particularly oppose the rise in nonstaple food prices. They fail to see that if the nonstaple food prices were not raised, production could not be promoted and the supply of food for people could not be improved.

[Reporter] Then, when production is developed in future, will it be possible that the prices of some commodities may drop? Could you discuss this question?

[Xue Muqiao] In developing production...[Reporter interposes]

[Reporter interposes] Comrade Xue Muqiao said: In developing production, the production cost of some commodities rises and the cost of some others falls. Therefore, prices require constant readjustment. Under normal circumstances, some prices rise and some fall; the fall offsets the rise, and prices basically tend to stabilize. Agricultural products are subject to the restrictions imposed on them by natural conditions. With the increase in agricultural output, production costs rise. In particular, as regards the supply of meat, chicken, and fish, the meat, chicken, and fish supplied by household sideline production units are not sufficient for people's needs.

However, running chicken farms and fish ponds means that we have to use grain to feed chickens and fish. This increases production costs. Among ordinary commodities, some light industrial products are made of agricultural products. Due to the rise in prices of agricultural products, it will not be easy to lower the production cost of such light industrial products.

Let us take cotton cloth as an example. Although there have been quite a few increases in the purchasing price of cotton, the selling price of cotton cloth remained unchanged for 30 years. Originally, cotton cloth was very profitable. Later, it became unprofitable and the state lost money on it. However, the case of chemical fabrics is just the opposite. Chemical fabrics are made of industrial chemicals. The more we produce, the lower our production cost. Therefore, the production cost of chemical fabrics has been continuously falling. Of course, the price should have been continuously reduced. However, in the past, the state depended on the money made from chemical fabrics to make up losses incurred in cotton cloth. Therefore, we dared not raise the price of cotton cloth and dared not reduce the price of chemical fabrics. As a result, the supply of cotton cloth fell short of demand, the system of fixed-quota purchases and fixed-quantity supplies was implemented, and a great quantity of unsalable chemical fabrics was overstocked. Consequently, the production output of chemical fabrics was reduced. In 1983, we were determined to raise the price of cotton cloth a little and to greatly reduce the price of chemical fabrics. As a result, people used less cotton cloth and used more chemical fabrics; restrictions on the supply of cotton cloth were lifted, the sales volume of chemical fabrics greatly increased, and a free hand was given in the development of production. This matter clearly shows that our price readjustment not only can develop production but can also improve people's living standards. The price of one commodity rises and the price of another commodity falls. The fall offsets the rise. Overall, the prices have not risen. To people who have used more chemical fabrics, their own expenses have actually been reduced a little. The prices of those articles of daily use which are made of industrial raw materials may go down. The prices of wristwatches and radios have gone down markedly. Generally speaking, the price of food has risen, the price of clothes has been stable, and the price of the great majority of articles for use [yong pin] has gone down.

[Reporter] What is your estimate of the trend of changes in market prices in our country in 1986?

[Xue Muqiao] I think that in 1986, the supply of nonstaple foods will continue to increase. I estimate prices may no longer be raised again. There will also be an ample supply of other commodities. Prices can be kept stable. I estimate prices can be kept basically stable as long as there are no indiscriminate wage increases or unwarranted issuing of bonuses.

[Reporter] Good. Thank you. [End recording]

LEADERS PAY NEW YEAR VISITS TO VARIOUS AREAS

HK230641 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Song Fang and Da Wei: "The Song of Early Spring in Zhongnanhai"]

[Text] On the eve of the 1986 New Year and the first day of the new year, Zhongnanhai in Beijing was unusually quiet. There were no grand receptions or get-togethers..... But from there came the tidings of spring. Quiet Zhongnanhai broadcast a song of early spring that spread to every part of China.

At a time when the new year was being ushered in and people were saying good-bye to the old year, par and state leaders including Hu Yaobang, Zhao Xiyang, Li Xiannian, Peng Zhen, Hu Qili, Li Peng, Hao Jianxiu, and other comrades went separately to various parts of the motherland, spending the new year joyously with workers, peasants, troops, students, intellectuals, cadres at various levels and working personnel fighting on various fronts of modernization.

On the Xisha Islands at the southern end of the motherland, Comrade Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, spent New Years Day with the cadres and troops of PLA units on guard here. At noon the same day, on a remote islet, Comrade Yaobang and some troops sat around a table at the mess hall having lunch together. Here the solemn atmosphere of an inspection by a commander was absent. Like an elder, Comrade Yaobang made small talk with the troops, joking and laughing. Everywhere he went there was banter. Comrade Yaobang said that in the new year, the main task of the Chinese people is to act as one in the construction effort toward socialist modernization. Meanwhile, they should shoulder the sacred task of safeguarding world peace.

Comrade Hu Yaobang was carrying a box of earth from Zhongnanhai, which he deposited on the roots of a newly planted coconut palm on Yongxing Island in Xisha.

On the morning of New Year's Day, Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived at Yangdianzi in Hebei Province to extend new year greetings to the workers of the ore dressing plant of the Capital Iron and Steel Corporation Mining Company. That afternoon, he went to the Tanghsan City Paraplegic Sanatorium to visit crippled people who were victims of the disastrous earthquake in 1976. Before this, Premier Zhao Yiyang made investigations and studies in Tanshan prefecture. In the three counties of Zunhua, Quianxi and Qianan, he emphasized acquainting himself with conditions for restructuring agriculture and the mass effort in mining. He visited peasant families and also looked at the ore dressing plant and the mine face. He noted that the eastern area of Hebei is rich in iron deposits and that there is a great future for the masses in mining. It is a good method which calls for "mass mining, procurement at fixed points, concentration on ore dressing and state involvement in smelting."

State President Li Xiannian and NPC Standing Committee Chairman Peng Zhen separately spent the new year with the masses in Nanjing and Wuxi. On the afternoon of 31 December 1985, Li Xiannian called together with more than 2,000 cadres and people at the Hall of the People in Nanjing and expressed the hope that in the new year everyone would continue their efforts to score still greater achievements. That afternoon NPC Standing Committee Chairman Peng Zhen joined more than 1,000 cadres and people in Wuxi City who attended local new year celebration activities.

On New Year's Eve, Vice Premier Wan Li visited Beijing Normal College to celebrate the festival with teachers and students. Wan Li also saw representatives of the teachers and discussed big plans for the development of teacher education with them. He extended new year greetings to normal college teachers working assiduously in their posts. He said: Normal colleges must in future recruit the best students and turn out the best teachers through the best training. Prior to this, the 1984 class of the Chemistry Department of the Beijing Normal College received a letter from Premier Zhao. In his letter, Premier Zhao warmly extended new year greetings to these future teachers of the people.

Hu Qili and Li Peng, members of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and of the Secretariat separately went to the Capital Iron and Steel Corporation and the Beijing Oil Pump and Oil Nozzle Factory, to extend new year greetings to workers, technical personnel and cadres who maintained the first line of production during the festival and encourage them to persist in reform, to continue giving full play to the role of workers as a main force, and to score still greater achievements in the new year.

Early on new year's morning, Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, who was on a work inspection trip in Shanghai, went with some comrades of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee to see well-known model workers Yang Huaiyuan and Zheng Yaqin, noted patriotic democrats, and national red-banner pacesetter Rong Shuren and extend new year greetings to them. She expressed the fervent hope that fine public bus conductress Zheng Yaqin would appreciate the glorious title she had earned and strive to perform new deeds of merit.

At this point, people can easily see why Zhongnanhai was quiet around the New Year. Unlike the usual quiet, this embodies confidence and accumulated strength and is pregnant with hope. This is a good beginning for 1986. Central leading comrades have once again set an example for us. This will surely encourage the whole party to further improve its work style, delve deep into the midst of lower levels, keep in close touch with the masses, and lead the people of the whole country in plunging into the great cause of construction related to the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

INDIRECT, DIRECT CONTROL OF ECONOMY ASSESSED

[Article by Shen Liren: "A Brief Talk on the Characteristics of Indirect Control"]

[Text] During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, our economic reform calls for combining the further strengthening enterprise vitality with the strengthening of macrocontrol, and for a gradual shift in emphasis from direct to indirect control, while establishing and perfecting a system of indirect control. This is a major breakthrough as far as the traditional economic system is concerned. It also provides us with features of our own.

Direct control and indirect control are two entirely different methods of economic control. They concern the principles and methods of operation of the whole national economy and run through various economic aspects such as decision-making, motive power, organization, regulation, and so forth. Compared with direct control, indirect control has the following features:

As far as the relations between the state and an enterprise are concerned, indirect control allows the separation of government and enterprise functions and an appropriate separation of power. The power to decide on microeconomic activities is returned to enterprises, so that they may decide on matters of production, operation, transformation and development in line with market conditions and their own conditions.

Where macrocontrol is concerned, indirect control calls for introducing comprehensive guiding plans, with policy, not targets, in control. Through guiding plans, the formation of a macroeconomic environment is aimed at guiding enterprise production, operation and investment.

Regarding the targets of macrocontrol, the main target of indirect control is the behavior of commodities and money in the form of value. Through it, the proportional relations of social reproduction are regulated to achieve a balance in overall social demand and supply and in relevant structure. As to the methods of macrocontrol, indirect control calls chiefly for reliance on economic means and using the law of value and economic levers, including pricing, finance, credit, tax rates, interest rates, exchange rates, and so forth, to shape various economic parameters or signals of regulation in guiding the conduct of enterprises.

As far as the scope of macrocontrol is concerned, indirect control is oriented toward the whole national economy and a control over total turnover and structure.

With regard to the organization of macrocontrol, indirect control is a combination of higher and lower levels and allows a regulating network at various levels. Through the medium of various departments and organizations, relations at higher and lower levels form a whole operating in an open way, with a gradual balance achieved in an organized manner. Concerning the procedure in exercising macrocontrol, indirect control is a two-way control of developments, making it possible to obtain an objective understanding of relevant conditions and readjust policy in practice.

Regarding the effectiveness of macrocontrol over a given period of time, indirect control allows for not having to specify the production and operating activities of individual enterprises, for making strategic choices with foresight, and for concentrating on studying future major problems.

From some features of indirect control we can clearly see that a shift in focus from direct to indirect control is not a partial reform and is a conversion of the pattern of the economic system. This is a main thread running through various aspects of reform. Reform calls for strengthening enterprise vitality and naturally perfecting the market system. This must take place at the same time as the perfection of the indirect control of system. It calls for the strengthening of macrocontrol, which can be achieved only after a shift in focus from direct to indirect control. Of course, an emphasis on direct control does not mean doing away with all means of direct control, including preserving a limited number of guiding plans, necessary supplementary administrative means, and so forth. In the process of converting the pattern of an economic system in a given period of time, two ways of control inevitably coexist. But the important question is how to reduce the scope and degree of direct control on the one hand, and strengthen the capacity for indirect control on the other, allowing a linkup between the two.

DENG LIQUN COMMENDS LATE POLITICAL CADRE'S DEEDS

[Excerpts] Taking pride in being a competent political cadre and deeming it his personal duty to probe into the law governing poltiical work for the new period, Xiong Yuanqi, former chief of the propaganda section of the instrument and meter plant under the Jianghan Petroleum Administration Bureau, earnestly practiced what he advocated, and dedicated his life and energy to creating a proper image for contemporary basic-level political cadres, according to HUBEI RIBAO. Comrade Xiong Yanqi died of cancer in July 1985, thus ending his political work, in which he always took a sharp interest.

Comrade Deng Liqun, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, spoke highly of Xiong Yuanqi as an example of loyalty for the ranks of ideological and political workers.

[Excerpt] Zhu Liangfu, member of the party group and deputy director of the Jiangxi Provincial Department of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, and director of the Jiangxi Provincial Bureau of Town and Township Enterprises, was investigated and disciplined for abusing powers, accepting bribes, illegally remitting foreign exchange for a profit, embezzling state and collective property, and seriously violating the party's regulations and discipline. The Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee recently decided to relieve him of the posts he held within the party, and the Jiangxi Provincial People's Government decided to remove him from the post of deputy director of the Jiangxi Provincial Department of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, and from the post of director of the Jiangxi Provincial Bureau of Town and Township Enterprises.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN ATTENDS MEMORIAL SERVICE

[Excerpts] On 11 January Comrade (Yu Lin) died of cerebral hemorrhage, despite all medical treatment. He was 68. He was a celebrated writer, a member of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, a member of the Board of Directors of the Chinese Writers Association, a member of the Standing Committee of the Jiangxi Provincial CPPCC Committee, chairman of the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles and secretary of the leading party group of this federation, and chairman of the Jiangxi branch of the Chinese Writers Association.

A memorial service for Comrade (Yu Lin) was held this morning in Nanchang. Over 500 people attended the service, including provincial party and government leaders Wan Shofen, Liu Fangren, Xu Qin, (Lu Xiuzhen), (Wang Taihua), Zhao Zengyi, Wang Shufeng, Di Sheng, Wang Zemin, Peng Shengxi, Liu Jianhua, and Lu Liang; veteran Comrades Ma Jikong and Fu Yutian; responsible comrades of various departments of the provincial CPC committees and of various departments and bureaus of the provincial government; as well as friends of Comrade (Yu Lin).

At today's memorial service, (Wang Taihua), member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, and head of the Propaganda Department, said: Comrade (Yu Lin) engaged in revolution for more than 40 years and dedicated his life to literature and art. He contributed to training new literary and art workers, promoting literary and art creation, and organizing and uniting the literary and art working contingent. He was upright, honest, open, and aboveboard, and applied himself to uniting comrades throughout his life. Even in adverse circumstances, he was full of revolutionary optimism. His loyalty to and firm faith in the party and the socialist cause are worthy of our emulation.

ARTICLE VIEWS SHANGHAI'S PROBLEMS IN OPENING UP

[Article by Yan Kuangguo: "Shanghai's Several Problems in the Course of Opening Up to the Outside World"]

[Text] Since the central authorities approved the opening up of 14 coastal cities to the outside world in 1984, Shanghai has made relatively great progress in using foreign funds, importing technology, developing import and export trade, conducting various kinds of economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries, and in other aspects. However, in the course of opening up to the outside world, some new problems have also emerged.

Some of these problems are caused by differences in the national conditions of China and foreign countries, and others are caused by the unsatisfactory investment environment on our side. Now I would like to probe these problems as follows:

1. Both the Chinese and foreign sides are worried about change. Since they are not very clear about our country's policy of opening up to the outside world, some foreign businessmen fear that our major policies may change when the chief leaders of our country pass away. Based on past positive and negative experience, they have said: "The reason Singapore has attracted investments is not just because of its favorable geographical position and satisfactory basic facilities, but chiefly because of its stable political situation." In the past few years, there has been a relatively rapid development in the construction of buildings through Sino-foreign cooperation. An important reason for this is that foreign businessmen can get an earlier return on their investment and reduce their risks in investing.

For lack of a clear understanding of the theory and policy of opening up to the outside world, some comrades with good intentions worry that they may suffer losses or get into trouble if they have contact with foreigners. However, their greatest worry is caused by some unhealthy phenomena emerging in one or two localities where managerial work has not caught up with the situation. Therefore, they worry that some undesirable things will be introduced and society will be contaminated. In short, they are also afraid of change. These comrades with good intentions have not taken an unshakable attitude toward the policy of opening to the outside world and do not see the positive and essential side of the policy.

2. Both the Chinese and foreign sides have their eyes on the opposite side's market. The foreign side has settled on our country's vast market with a population of 1 billion people and spares no effort in trying to get a place in it so that its commodities, capital, and technology have an outlet. However, it often pursues a protectionist trade policy toward our products. In running joint ventures, it tries its best to avoid or reduce its responsibility for exporting the products produced.

On the other hand, in conducting economic and trade activities with foreign countries, we usually adhere to the principle of maintaining a balance in international payments. We not only try to avoid an adverse balance in foreign trade but also encourage joint-ventures to promote sales of their products in the international market to earn more foreign exchange. We only allow in our domestic market those products and advanced technology which are badly needed by our country and which must be imported.

3. The Chinese and foreign sides have different demands on legal regulations. In view of the situation in foreign countries and the requirements of international economic activities, many foreign businessmen hope that our country's laws can be perfected, our legal stipulations can be made specific, and relevant regulations can be made known to foreigners so that both law enforcers and observers can act according to the law.

With the efforts of the past few years, our country has legislated several dozen economic statues involving foreign countries, but more efforts are needed to make them complete. As far as the promulgated laws, decrees, regulations, and detailed rules are concerned, some stipulations are relatively general and will easily lead to different explanations, some stipulations vary with different localities, projects, ways of investment, and other factors, making them difficult for people to enforce and for foreign businessmen to understand, and others are to be exercised at the discretion of the Chinese side but to be observed by foreigners and consequently, they are unfathomable. Moreover, we were used to acting according to documents and speeches of leaders and we attached importance to policies and not to laws.

This will easily give foreigners the impression that even if there are laws, it is difficult to act according to them.

4. The Chinese and foreign sides have differences in some ways for handling international economic problems. Although some customs, practices, and precedents of international economic and trade activites are not legislated, they are recognized and observed by many countries. However, some of our comrades often ignore international practices, over-stress the principle of taking ourselves as the dominant factor, and try to be smart. As a result, they fail on the verge of success. For example, in discussing the problem of balancing international payments, these comrades will insist that the foreign side has to unilaterally and unconditionally write down, as the first and foremost thing, in a contract the words "responsible for ensuring a balance in international payments." This practice will inevitably affect the import of foreign technology and foreign capital.

5. In implementing policies and adopting measures, we are sometimes too rigid and sometimes too flexible and sometimes many leading departments give instructions at the same time. For example, people were encouraged to use as much foreign exchanges as possible for importing technology at the end of the year before last, but at present, ordinary permits for foreign trade have basically been suspended and consequently, over 70 percent of Chinese-foreign joint venture projects have been postponed or cancelled because of not being able to achieve a foreign exchange balance or even because the Chinese side does not have the portion of investment in renminbi. Another example is guarantees provided by the banks concerned for housing projects to be carried out with the cooperation of foreigners. These guarantees are sometime given to anyone who requests them without exception but sometimes they are given to no one at all.

6. Enterprises involving foreign capital are supervised only in the beginning. Before a project is finalized, all negotiations, approvals, and other things are supervised by relevant foreign trade departments. Once the project is concluded and put into operation, no leading department will help solve problems. Moreover, there are various kinds of external controls and interference. These enterprises do not have sufficient support and are faced with various difficulties and obstacles. For example, the supply of raw materials is not guaranteed. They sometimes have difficulties even in buying materials which are abundant in China. They also have difficulties in getting parts and components they need in China and therefore, they have to import them, thus affecting the balance of foreign exchange.

7. Urban basic facilities and services cannot meet the needs of opening up to the outside world. This problem is particularly serious in Shanghai. The power supply is insufficient, drainage is blocked, roads are jammed with traffic, telecommunications service is poor, loading and unloading of goods at the port are slow, and the housing problem is serious. This is known to all and greatly hampers the progress of opening up to the outside world.

GUANGDONG PARTY PLENARY SESSION CONCLUDES 23 JAN

[Excerpts] The 4-day Fourth Plenary Session of the Fifth Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee concluded this morning. The work of readjusting some of the members of the provincial CPC Committee and the Advisory and Discipline Inspection Commissions has been completed, further embodying the principle of the new taking from the old in these organizations. Eleven members and alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee including Ren Zhongyi and Liang Lingguang, 24 members of the provincial Advisory Commission including Kou Qingyan and Chen Yueping, and 10 members of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission including Wang Ning and Cheng Li requested to serve no longer as members of these bodies on grounds of old age, ill health, or else to reduce the number of overlapping posts. After discussion and agreement by the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, these requests were submitted to the session this morning for examination and approval.

The session also elected by secret ballot some new members of these three bodies. The election is to be endorsed by the next conference of party delegates.

The following is the list of old comrades requesting to serve no longer as members or alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee: Ren Zhongyi, Liang Lingguang, Li Jianan, Du Ruizhi, Ding Xiling, Ma Fang, Bai Xiucheng, Liu Zhaolun, Li Fulin, Yang Guoqing, and Zhang Bi.

The following are requesting to serve no longer as members of the provincial Advisory Commission: Kou Qingyan, Chen Yueping, Xiao Huanhui, Yang Kanghua, Ma Lun, Li Xueguang, Zhang Boquan, Lin Keze, (Zhang Xingyan), (Xu Linhan), Wei Nanjin, (Wang Bixing), Fang Hua, (Yan Shangmin), (Bi Di), (Wu Muqi), (He Ming), (He Shiyong), Lin Shulan, Zhou Ming, (Huang Mingde), (Han Tuofu), (Wen Zhouhua), and Liao Wei.

The following are requesting to serve no longer as members of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission: Wang Ning, Cheng Li, Wang Wenbin, Wen Guangzhi, Li Yan, Song Wenyu, Chen Bin, Hu Yi, Hu Chenxiang, and Liang Ping.

The following are the newly elected members of the provincial CPC Committee, in order of the number of strokes in the surname: Yu Fei, (Wang Ye), (Wang Shouchu), Wen Guangzhi, (Zhu Senlin), Li Hao, Yang Li, (Yang Hong), (Xiao Qigui), (Zhang Xianqi), (Qiu Xianghui), and (Qin Wenjin).

The following are the newly elected alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee, in order of the number of strokes in the surname: (Luo Shengan) and (Huang Huahua).

The following are the newly elected members of the provincial Advisory Commission, in order of the number of strokes in their names: Ding Xiling, Ma Fang, Wang Yaming, Wang Boqun, Che Xuezao, Bai Xiucheng, (Feng Xueyan), Liu Zhaolun, Guan Xiangsheng, (Zun Yi), (Qu Dingkui), (Li Maoxian), Li Fulin, Yang Guoqing, Zhang Hanlin, Zhang Huaming, (Lu Yin), Chen Bin, (Zheng Xi), (Hu Guangen), and (Han Donggu).

The following are the newly elected members of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission: (Zhu Shuping), (Wu Changfang), (He Dinghuan), (Song Shuzhong), (Zhang Jianchen), (Chen Wenguan), (Kang Leshu), and (Liao Ruizhang).

[Excerpts] The Guangxi Regional CPC Committee held a gathering of leading cadres of regional organs this morning to study and implement the spirit of speeches given by leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering, and study the questions of further straightening out party style in the regional organs and striving for a fundamental turn for the better in party style in the whole region.

Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Wei Chunshu presided at the gathering. Secretary Chen Huiguang delivered a mobilization report. He said: We must resolutely implement the central instructions and summon up the greatest resolve to straighten out party style. The regional CPC Committee must set an example in governing the party with strictness. The party members and cadres in the regional organs, especially the leading party-member cadres at and above departmental and bureau level, must take the lead in straightening out party style.

Chen Huiguang said: The region's political and economic situation is good, and the main current of party style is also good. However, the following problems also exist: 1) Some people pursue political liberalism. 2) Some are seriously affected by individualist mentality and have forgotten the party's fundamental program of serving the people wholeheartedly. 3) Some are gravely bureaucratic and have become divorced from the masses and reality. 4) Some stress human feelings and relationships instead of party spirit and principles in employing people and getting things done. 5) Some units are organizationally loose and their discipline is slack. 6) Unhealthy trends in certain units have not been completely curbed, and new unhealthy trends have also emerged. The leading cadres of some units also fail to grasp major and important criminal cases, or else only take ineffective action to deal with them.

Comrade Chen Huiguang pointed out: The reason for the existence of these problems is that, on the one hand, we have failed to have sufficient understanding of and to effectively resist various nonproletarian ideas that have emerged in the party under the new historical conditions amid a peaceful environment. On the other hand, the negative impact of the 10 years of turmoil on the party's ideology and work style has not yet been completely eliminated. In addition, there has been some increase in the corrosion caused in our ranks by decadent capitalist and feudalist thinking while opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy.

Comrade Chen Huiguang said: In accordance with the spirit of the speeches of leading central comrades and in light of the current state of party style in the regional organs, the regional CPC Committee has decided to grasp the question of straightening out party style and set examples for the whole region. These organs must now concentrate forces to grasp this work really well and achieve results this year, as an example for the whole region.

He also stressed the following points:

1. Seriously study the documents to unify thinking.

2. Focus on key points and start with the leading organs and cadres.

3. Investigate to the end all major and important criminal cases and deal seriously with them.

4. Strengthen leadership and establish responsibility systems at all levels.

5. Improve organ work style and efficiency.

HUNAN URGES STUDY OF CENTRAL LEADERS' SPEECHES

HK180542 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 Jan 86

[Text] On 14 January, the provincial CPC Committee and government issued a circular to party committees and governments at all levels, urging them to earnestly study and implement the spirit of the speeches delivered by central leading comrades at the central organ cadres rally, to deepen their understanding, to strengthen their confidence, and to resolutely correct party style.

The circular read: The CPC Central Committee decided to start the correction of party style in the central organs first. This important policy decision and action has set an example for party and government organs throughout the country, and will have a great impact on the style of the whole party. The provincial CPC Committee and government demand that provincial organs set an example for organs at all levels and for the whole province in correcting party style. Party and government organs in the province must grasp the correction of party style level by level. Party and government leadership organs at all levels must set a good example for organs at lower levels and local units in this respect. In particular, leading cadres at all levels must set a good example for all cadres. It is necessary to promptly dismiss and transfer to other positions those leading cadres who have a bad style and refuse to mend their ways after being criticized and educated by others and who are incompetent and fail to exercise effective leadership in correcting malpractices. We must resolutely and continuously correct malpractices. It is necessary to strengthen ideological education, to perfect the system, to enforce discipline, to seriously investigate and deal with important and major cases, and to perfect the system of democratic life within the party. We must continue to grasp the work in a down-to-earth manner so as to greatly improve the work style of organs at all levels.

HUNAN REGULATIONS ON CORRECTING PARTY STYLE

[Text] Recently the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee formulated eight regulations on correcting party style. When announcing the eight regulations, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Mao Zhiyong urged party committees at all levels and comrades inside and outside the party to carry them out. The provincial CPC Committee also demanded that leading organs and cadres at all levels set a good example and correct their own party style first so as to encourage cadres and the masses with their model deeds.

Over the past few days, the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee members have earnestly studied the spirit of the important speeches delivered by the central leading comrades at the central organ cadres gathering. They have deeply understood that to seriously correct the unhealthy practices of a handful of party-member cadres and leading cadres, such as bureaucraticism, individualism, liberalism, selfish departmentalism, ignorance of the principle of party spirit in employing people and doing things, and lax organization and discipline, the essence is that leading organs and cadres at all levels must set a good example themselves. Provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee members must particularly set a good example in this respect. To make supervision easy, the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee has formulated eight regulations:

1. When going to work in grass-roots units, they need not be accompanied by local cadres at different levels, need not be greeted and sent off by local cadres and people; must refuse to attend dinner parties; must adhere to the scale for boarding charges; must not buy low-priced goods; and must refuse to accept gifts.

2. They are not allowed to go on sightseeing trips using public funds or make trips overseas without normal purposes.

3. They must be provided with cars in accordance with the relevant regulations stipulated by the CPC Central Committee and State Council on the use of cars by leading cadres. When taking part in collective activities, they should join others in using cars provided in a unified way.

4. They must teach their wives and children to observe discipline and abide by the law. If their wives or children engage in serious malpractices, they must report the cases to party democratic life meetings and must carry out self-criticism if they make mistakes themselves.

5. If their relatives or friends are involved in illegal or criminal cases, the cases should be dealt with by the relevant departments. They are not allowed to interfere in the cases or to connive and shield relatives or friends.

6. Promotion and employment of cadres must be examined by organization departments and approved after collective discussions. Appointment by favoritism should be abandoned. They are not allowed to promise others promotions.

7. They must spend 2 to 3 months in grass-roots units every year to conduct systematic investigations and study, to discover the facts, and to help solve problems there.

8. They must observe discipline in keeping secrets. They are not allowed to talk about party and state secrets in the presence of their wives, children, or other irrelevant persons.

A responsible comrade of the provincial CPC Committee pointed out that to bring about a basic turn for the better in party style throughout the province, the organs of the provincial CPC Committee and government and other provincial organs must first improve their own style and set a good example for the whole province in correcting party style.

HUNAN'S MAO ZHIYONG DISCUSSES MILITIA WORK

[Text] At a conference of prefectural and city CPC Committee secretaries, the principal responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee have listened to reports from the provincial military district on militia and reserve service work in 1985, on the transfer of the Armed Forces departments to the local authorities following the streamlining and reorganization of the PLA units, and on arrangements for militia work in 1986.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Mao Zhiyong and Deputy Secretary Liu Fusheng spoke at the meeting. Comrade Liu Fusheng fully affirmed the great role played by the provincial military district, the military subdistricts, and the people's Armed Forces departments in the past 2 years in building the two civilizations while subordinating themselves to the overall national situation, and praised the good experiences of Qidong County in developing and employing dual-purpose talented persons.

Mao Zhiyong put forward hopes regarding militia and reserve service work in 1986. He demanded that the party committees at all levels carry forward the fine tradition of party control of the Armed Forces. The provincial military district, the militiary subdistricts, and the local party committees should work together to raise militia and reserve service work to a new level.

GUIZHOU VICE GOVERNOR SPEAKS ON BIRTH CONTROL

HK211322 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Jan 86

[Text] After listening to a recent work report of the provincial investigation group for birth control, Vice Governor Zhang Yuqin stressed that this year, we must further act in the spirit of relevant documents of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee. We should strengthen propaganda work and the building of service centers at the grass roots. We should provide services to individuals, improve the work method, and strive for winning the first victory in birth control work in the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

In December 1985, the provincial investigation group for birth control organized five small groups for examining the implementation of birth control work in Guiyang City, Lupanshui City, Bijie Prefecture, Qian Dongnan Autonomous Prefecture, and Qian Xinan Autonomous Prefecture. The small groups visited 26 cities, counties and special zones; as well as 42 districts, towns, townships, villages, neighborhood offices, factories and mines, where they held more than 26 forums and work report meetings. They also carried out propaganda activities, and extended regards to the localities.

Through investigation, the investigation group held that these counties and cities have done well in birth control work during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Their achievements are remarkable. Between 1980 and the end of 1984, Guiyang's survival rate for newborn babies was increased from 54.28 percent to 83.19 percent, the rate of having an additional child was decreased from 18.13 percent to 5.1 percent, and the rate of issuing certificates to one-child families was increased from 27.93 percent to 76.6 percent. Between 1 January to November, the city's survival rate for newborn babies was 78.67 percent and its rate of having an additional child was 4.02 percent. It is estimated that by the end of this year, the natural growth rate for the population will be about 7 per thousand.

In the course of investigation, the provincial group found out that the localities set a clear goal, were determined, and adopted correct methods when carrying out the work. Many of them improved their work style and methods when checking the population growth. Therefore, the situation of stability and unity has been constantly consolidated.

XIZANG PARTY LEADERS INSPECT PREFECTURES

[Excerpts] According to XIZANG RIBAO, from late December 1985 to early January 1986, in order to implement the principles formulated at the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee on the region's work in a down-to-earth manner and as soon as possible, and in order to turn them into the conscious acts of the people of various nationalities in the region in their endeavors, Wu Jinghua, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, and Raidi, Dangzin, Gyanincain Norbu, deputy secretaries of the regional CPC Committee, made inspection tours to Shannan, Nagqu, Xigaze, and Medog to conduct in-depth investigations despite the winter cold. They promptly discovered and solved problems during the inspection, thus greatly promoting the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee.

Following the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee in November last year, all prefectural and city CPC committees immediately held various meetings to earnestly study and implement the spirit of the enlarged meeting. In the course of study and implementation, all localities laid particular stress on conducting education in going further in three respects [negating the Cultural Revolution, eliminating leftist ideological influence, and straightening out the ideological line].

They mobilized people to further eliminate leftist ideological influence, to thoroughly negate the Cultural Revolution, and to further straighten out the ideological line in connection with reality. Through the study and implementation, both cadres and masses said that the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee was a good meeting. Provided that we act in accordance with the spirit of the enlarged meeting, Xizang is full of promise.

In this situation, the regional CPC Committee held that as a result of relaying, studying, and implementing the spirit of the enlarged meeting, the cadres and masses' minds are at ease and are in high spirits. The situation is excellent. The crux of our work in the next stage is to firmly grasp the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting. To properly implement the spirit, the regional CPC Committee absolutely cannot be content with giving orders, but must get out of the office and into the grass roots, properly conduct study and investigation, give specific guidance effectively help grass-roots units solve practical problems, and guide the masses to turn their initiative into getting rid of poverty and becoming rich and doing practical things. Motivated by this guiding thinking, the regional CPC Committee decided that secretaries and deputy secretaries in office should go to the grass roots to implement the spirit of the enlarged meeting.

When conducting study and investigation in Shannan Prefecture, regional CPC Committee Secretary Wu Jinghua drove a thousand li to inspect rural areas in four counties. After the masses told him that they felt pressure in the past when the higher author-authorities requested them to double and quadruple the output value of production, Comrade Wu Jinghua said: We must adhere to the principle of seeking truth from facts and must make practical efforts and do solid work. We must eliminate the practice of seeking undeserved reputation and flourishes. So long as we do our utmost and work hard, go about things steadily and surely, and make people rich, it means our target is attained.

On learning that leftist influence and the erroneous influence of the Cultural Revolution still exist in rural areas, Comrade Wu Jinghua told the cadres in Shannan Prefecture: Judging from the situation in grass-roots units, the decision made at the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee on conducting education in going further in three respects is absolutely correct. No other places in the country are now conducting this kind of education, except for Xizang. This precisely indicates that we have adhered to the principle of doing everything in accordance with Xizang's reality. Therefore, we must properly conduct education in going further in three respects.

In his contacts with rural cadres, Comrade Wu Jinghua deeply felt that it is absolutely necessary to grasp the building of rural grass-roots regimes in the region. He said: In the building of township-and village-level administrative organs, the thousand threads at high levels are pulled by a needle at the lower level. Without establishing and perfecting grass-roots regimes, it will be very difficult for us to carry out our work, let alone lead the masses in getting rich. Therefore, we must do our utmost to properly build regimes at township and village levels so as to guarantee grass-roots work organizationally.

Through conducting study and investigation, Comrade Wu Jinghua obtained a basic idea governing the region's work in this year, namely, the region must be stable this year. Party organizations at all levels and cadres must conduct study and investigation in a down-to-earth manner, firmly grasp the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting, combine subjective desires with objective reality, and implement the spirit in all fields. We must treat this year as an implementation year.

When conducting study and investigation in Nagqu, regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Raidi gave up his holiday on New Year's Day and contacted and talked extensively with cadres at county and district levels. He found that quite a few comrades had various ideological worries over the correct guiding idea raised at the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC committee Standing Committee on going further in three respects. After patiently listening to various opinions, Comrade Raidi, in light of the comrades' ideological problems, spoke in simple terms of the importance, necessity, and urgency of conducting education in going further in three respects from the high plane of combining theory with practice.

Comrade Raidi said that the education in going further in three respects not only corresponds with the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates, but is an important policy decision and step for implementing the spirit of the three central conferences in accordance with Xizang's reality. Only by properly conducting education in going further in three respects, will we have a firm ideological foundation in uniting, fighting, and attaining a higher target, and will it be possible for us to meet the general requirements and attain the general target in going further in three respects.

When conducting investigation in Xigaze Prefecture, Comrade Dangzin, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, found that some cadres and masses failed to fully understand the defects of being large in size and collective in nature. A handful of areas cannot bear to part with it. He said that the economy in rural and pastoral areas must switch from the supply-type economy to the operation-type economy as soon as possible and a benign economic cycle must be established. It is necessary to thoroughly eliminate the idea of being large in size and collective in nature.

In his conversations with some cadres at the county and district level, Comrade Dangzin found that the idea of unitary production is still prevalent. He held that this is a big problem concerning whether the masses can get rich very soon. At a cadre meeting he said that agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, and it is true that grain production should not be relaxed, but sticking to the idea of unitary production will result in a stagnant rural economy. We must use our brains, try every means to give play to our superiorities while avoiding our weaknesses, and develop a diversified economy, including economic crops, animal husbandry, forestry, sideline production, rural handicraft industry, rural building industry, rural transportation, and rural service industry. We must develop a diversified economy to [words indistinct] and develop agricultural production to promote the development of a diversified economy so as to bring about a coordinated development between them. In this way, the rural economy can become prosperous in an all-round way.

During the period, Comrade Gyanincain Norbu, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, led a regional comfort group to Medog County, the only county in the region not serviced by highways, to help residents of various nationalities there solve difficult problems. The people in the border area were greatly inspired.

To sum up the experiences gained by the leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee from their study and investigation in grass-roots units, the regional CPC Committee, the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, and the regional people's government not long ago held a meeting to listen to the reports given by several leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee. They all believed that this kind of study and investigation is good and should be continued in the future.

ZHOU HUI AT NEI MONGGOL MILITARY MEETING

SK230441 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Text] On 18 January, Zhou Hui, secretary of the autonomous regional CPC Committee, made a speech during his visit to the leading cadres who came from the PLA units at or above the division level and who were attending the enlarged meeting of the party committee under the Nei Monggol Regional Military District.

In his speech, he stated: Having the Army be a vanguard in straightening out party style has great significance and will certainly play a tremendous impetus role in bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party style throughout the region. Such a role cannot be underestimated. In undertaking construction, we should build the two civilizations simultaneously and give priority first to material civilization and spiritual civilization second. However, the reaction of the spiritual civilization is very great and the more profound connotation of the spiritual civilization is the realm of human thought, such as whether we have firmly fostered the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly, had ideals, taken the whole situation into consideration, stressed morality, and observed discipline.

In his speech, he stated: Achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party style has a vital bearing on building socialism that reflects Chinese characteristics. If some seriously corrosive practices cannot be corrected in a timely manner and are left to spread, we will not be able to make a success in the program of building the four modernizations. Though we have introduced advanced foreign technology while enforcing the open policy in order to enliven the domestic economy, we have also introduced some corrosive things along with the technology, which will affect our comrades who do not have strong wills. For this, we should have sharp vigilance, constantly conduct education among the party members and the masses, and should eliminate the malpractices in a timely manner.

In his speech, Comrade Zhou Hui stated: In currently conducting reforms in economic systems, we will not be able to fulfill the great cause of reforms without fine party style. He urged the broad masses of commanders and fighters of the regional military district to set examples for the region as a whole and to continuously carry forward the glorious tradition of the party and Army as they did in the past in order to make new contributions to bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

Accompanying him in the visit to the military district party enlarged meeting was Bu He, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and chairman of the regional people's government. He also urged the broad masses of commanders and fighters of the regional military district to continuously carry forward the glorious PLA tradition of supporting the government and cherishing the people, to help the local units make a success in various work, and to strive to build the autonomous region into a northern border area full of unity, wealth, and culture.

NEI MONGGOL CHAIRMAN ON TAX COLLECTION

SK230547 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 20 January, at a regional financial and tax work conference, Bu He, chairman of the region, stressed in his speech that financial and tax departments should strengthen management over the work of increasing revenue, exert great efforts to organize for revenue, abide by policies when spending money, and pay attention to the returns of funds, to economic results, and social benefit.

Comrade Bu He said: In 1985, our region realized a revenue of 1.125 billion yuan, exceeding 1 billion yuan for the first time. This was a great achievement. This showed that since 1985 when the system of cooking with separate stoves was applied to financial work, party and government leading departments at all levels have attached importance to financial and tax work. The masses of grass-roots tax personnel, in particular, have worked in the frontline all year round, and have done a great amount of work. Such good financial achievements of today of our region cannot be separated from the diligent labor of these comrades.

Comrade Bu He pointed out: Recently several evil cases of beating up and inflicting wounds on tax collectors and administration personnel occurred in succession. These cases should be sternly handled according to law. Taxes are the major sources of state revenue. Collecting and paying taxes according to policy stipulations are a glorious responsibility of tax departments at all levels and staff and workers of various nationalities. They should be supported by various fields. However, some units and individuals fail to fully understand the important significance of the state tax policies, and support the work of tax personnel. They evaded taxes to a rather serious extent. We should extensively and thoroughly publicize the state tax policies, and educate the people to actively pay taxes on the basis of developing production and invigorating circulation. This is their obligation to the state's four modernizations. In the meantime, tax collectors and administrative personnel sould also enhance their political consciousness and professional competence, and strive to collect taxes in a civilized manner.

Speaking on the arrangements for this year's expenditures, Comrade Bu He said: We should strictly control the increases in the scope of capital construction and in consumption funds. Expenditures should be used in such a way that key areas are guaranteed. We should pay attention to economic results and social benefit when spending money, and make every penny count. In the future, leagues and cities should delegate some financial power to banners and counties in order for them to make better arrangements for production and other undertakings in line with specific local conditions, and open up financial sources to increase revenue.

Comrade Bu He emphasized: Comrades of financial and tax departments should study well the principles and policies concerning urban and rural economic reforms, and resist anything incompatible with policy stipulations so as to imporve party style and social conduct and promote the smooth progress of reforms.

SHANXI PARTY WORK CONFERENCE OPENS 21 JAN

HK220237 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Excerpts] A Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee work conference opened in Taiyuan on 21 January. The main agenda of the conference is to further implement the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates, and to sum up the province's work in 1985 and make arrangements for this year's work. A total of 588 persons are attending the conference. Comrade Wang Senhao presided on 21 January.

Comrade Li Ligong delivered a report, dealing with three topics: 1) basic evaluation of work in 1985; 2) the basic tasks and focal points in work for 1986; 3) brace spirits, improve work style, and vigorously grasp implementation.

Comrade Li Ligong said: In 1985 the party committees at all levels in the province seriously implemented the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee and the National Conference of Party Delegates and did a lot of work, scoring great success.

The general guiding principle for work in 1986 is to further mobilize the party organizations and the people throughout the province to focus on reform and straightening out party style, centering on economic construction, which is the key task. We must promote the building of the two civilizations in an all-round way and ensure that our socialist modernization drive can record sustained, steady, and coordinated development in all respects.

Comrade Li Ligong stressed: The reason why we must lay particular stress on implementing this year is that the party's major guidelines have been basically laid down, and the key lies in implementing them and translating them into reality in a thoroughly sound way. We must grasp and solve each issue that arises.

NI ZHIFU ADDRESSES CPC COMMITTEE PLENUM

SK170540 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Dec 85 p 1

[Text] The Fourth Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee held its fourth enlarged plenary session from 25 to 28 December, at which participating comrades further studied the documents adopted at the National Conference of Party Delegates, unified their viewpoint on the current situation and tasks, and discussed and adopted the "main points" of municipal committee work in 1986.

On the afternoon of 28 December the session held a plenary meeting presided over by Li Ruihuan, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee. At the meeting, Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, delivered a summation. Qiao Shi, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, on an inspection tour in Tianjin, also delivered a speech.

At the meeting the 57 members and 11 alternate members of the municipal CPC Committee and the principal party-member leading cadres from the units at or above the district-county-bureau level unanimously adopted the "main points" of municipal committee work for 1986.

Also attending the meeting were leading comrades, including Wu Zhen, Tan Shaowen, Nie Bichu, Zhang Zaiwang, Yan Dakai, Zhang Huaisan, Tan Songping, Yang Jingheng, Wang Xudong, Ji Zenghu, He Guomo, Chen Yiyi, Zhang Dinghua, Zheng Guozhong, Bai Hualing, Xing Yanzi, Li Huifen, Zhang Lichang, Hao Tianyi, Wang Peiren, Bai Hua, Li Zhongyuan, Zhao Jun, Liu Zengkun, Xu Ming, Yu Fujing, Shi Jian, Liu Jinfeng, Li Lanqing, Lu Xuezheng, Li Changxing, Mao Changwu, Xiao Yuan, Zhao Jinsheng, Zhou Ru, Yu Songting, Kang Tiejun, Liao Canhui, Zheng Wantong, and Huang Yanzhi. Attending the meeting as observers were veteran comrades including Li Gang, Li Yanwu, Wang Enhui, and Lu Da; and nonparty responsible comrades including Yang Jianbai, Han Tianyao, Yao Jun, Huang Difei, Huang Yusheng, and Yang Tianshou.

During the session, Comrade Li Ruihuan delivered a speech entitled "Close Our Ranks and Strive to Consolidate and Develop the Municipality's Excellent Situation," in which he detailed the discussion material of main work points of 1986. He pointed out: The general guiding ideology running through the main work points supports consolidating and development of excellent situation, which also means that various fronts should exert an all-out effort in further consolidating and developing the political situation of stability and unity. He stated: Efforts should be made to clearly discern the excellent situation, to maintain a trend of actively making progress, to set new targets in order to make a new step in the implementation period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, to consolidate and popularize the results scored in the transformation drive in order to carefully deal with sensitive questions, to do a good job in building the two civilizations in order to reap bumper harvests in both the material and spiritual aspects, to uphold the target of serving the people wholeheartedly in order to do concrete deeds for the masses in a down-to-earth manner, to trust and rely on the masses as well as respect the people's position of being the masters of the country and their pioneering spirit, to earnestly do a good job in conducting the party recitifcation drive in order to improve social morale by improving party style, and to enhance the work of building leading bodies in order to bring into practical play their supportive roles.

The "main points" of the municipal committee work in 1986 comprises the following eight aspects: 1) the situation and major tasks; 2) transformation and the open policy; 3) industrial and agricultural production and tertiary industry; 4) education and science and technology; 5) urban construction and the people's livelihood; 6) spiritual civilization construction and ideological and political work; 7) improvement of party style and the construction of leading bodies; and 8) efforts should be made to unite as one in striving to make new progress in various work. The "main points" points out that during the implementation period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, our municipality has scored marked achievements in earnestly implementing the central line, principles, and policies and building the socialist modernization. The political situation of stability and unity has become more and more stable, and economic development has begun to enter a period full of exuberant vitality. We possess the favorable foundations for making steady progress and are enjoying a very good situation.

The "main points" points out that the major tasks for 1986 will be to deeply implement the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and to further consolidate and develop the excellent situation. Efforts should be made to persistently regard economic construction as a central task, to readjust structures on the premise of serving the state program of conducting macroeconomic control, and to firmly grasp the two key links of production and construction, such as increasing economic results and the volume of foreign exchanges, in order to maintain an adequately expanding economic rate. On the basis of developing production, efforts should be made to continuously improve the people's livelihood. A good job should be done in conducting party rectification work, straigtening our party style, and in giving priority to the programs of conducting ideological and political work and building spiritual civilization in order to provide a powerful political guarantee for conducting reforms and building the four modernizations.

In his summation, Comrade Ni Zhifu pointed out: The enlarged plenary session of the municipal CPC Committee is a meeting full of unity and inspiration. The "main points" of the municipal committee work in 1986 has better embodied the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and of the directives recently issued by the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee. The arrangements for the work in 1986 should be carried out in line with these main points:

In his speech, Comrade Ni Zhifu put forward the following five suggestions for 1986 work: 1) Efforts should be made to regard from beginning to end economic construction as a central task, although many things must be done, and the work tasks are heavy; 2) a good job should be done in vigorously mapping out the municipal grand plans for the Seventh 5-Year Plan period; 3) the key to improving party style lies in paying true attention to work, and by no means should we hold discussion on work alone; 4) one of the work emphases imposed on party committees at all levels is to enhance the work of building socialist spiritual civilization and conducting ideological and political work; and 5) a good job should be done in continuously readjusting and building the leading bodies that will be the organizational guarantee of making a success of various work.

NI ZHIFU AT TIANJIN MEETING ON INDUSTRY

SK231118 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 22 January, the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal people's government held a meeting to sum up investigations and studies of the three basic links in industry.

Comrade Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, made an important speech at the meeting. Li Ruihuan, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee and mayor of the municipality, presided over the meeting. The first part of this meeting opened on 20 January, while the second part of the meeting was held on 22 January. Present at the second part of this meeting were Ni Zhifu, Li Ruihuan, Wu Zhen, Tan Shaowen, Nie Bichu, and Zhang Zaiwang, as well as responsible comrades of pertinent departments, commissions, offices, and bureaus under the municipal CPC Committee and of some companies, enterprises, universities, colleges, and research units.

Ni Zhifu pointed out: The current investigation into the three basic links in industry has been conducted within the machinery and electronics industrial enterprises. But the result of the investigation should attract the attention of the comrades on the vast economic front of the municipality, and should be used by various trades for reference in some aspects.

Ni Zhifu said: Being an open coastal city, Tianjin plays a pivotal role in linking our country with foreign areas. Confronted with a new situation and new challenges, Tianjin's industry is backward in many aspects. Therefore, it should be a major policy for Tianjin to take advantage of the excellent Seventh 5-Year Plan period, in which the economy will develop steadily and coordinatedly, to actually strengthen the building of the basic links in industry so as to prepare the necessary ground for the upcoming revitalization of industry.

With regard to handling the relationship between the basic and other links in industry, Ni Zhifu offered the following six suggestions: 1) To raise the level of finished products, we must start with improvement in the basic links; 2) in carrying out technical renovation, we should attach importance to strengthening the basic links; 3) in importing and drawing in advanced foreign technologies, we should pay attention to tackling problems in the basic links; 4) in strengthening the construction of the basic links, we should take the road of specialization, cooperation and integration; 5) in developing new industries, we should make breakthroughs in the basic links; and 6) in popularizing modern and scientific management, we must strengthen the work of the basic links.

In conclusion, Ni Zhifu set forth specific policies and measures for strengthening the construction of the basic links in industry.

At the conclusion of yesterday's meeting, Li Ruihuan pointed out: This meeting will play an important role in further developing Tianjin's industry, raising Tianjin's functions, and promoting the progress of Tianjin's modernization drive.

Li Ruihuan said: Fundamentally speaking, the strengthening of the three basic links should not be confined to machinery and electronics industrial enterprises. In fact, we should strengthen the work of all basic links. We must note that at present many units are weak in their basic work. These units have not yet clearly understood their basic sitaution, paid attention to their basic links, and formed their basic methods. This is a universal sitaution in the municipality. To effect a fundamental improvement in Tianjin's work, we must pay attention to building these basic links.

Nie Bichu, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee and vice mayor of the muncipality, and Yang Jingheng, Standing Committee member of the municipal CPC Committee, also spoke at yesterday's meeting. The meeting continues today.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

[Text] In his speech at the provincial conference on the township-level party rectification on 20 January, Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, stated: Efforts should be made to have the leading organs and cadres take the lead in running the party strictly and making a success of building the party.

In his speech, Sun Weiben stated: The Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee recently held a conference of cadres from the central-level organs, at which the central leading comrades delivered important speeches in which they all urged the central leading organs to set examples in straightening out party style throughout the country. The party organizations at all levels, including those that have completed the party rectification work, that are at present conducting the work, and that have not begun the work yet, should organize their party members to earnestly study these speeches. The current striking issue in running the party strictly and enhancing party construction is to straighten out party style that is deeply related to the life and death of the party and that incurs very strong complaints from the masses. Though party style has continuously achieved a turn for the better along with the party rectification drive and through the common efforts exerted by the masses, some serious problems still remain. Of them, some have adversely affected social morale. In his speech at the conference of cadres from the central organs, Comrade Wang Zhaoguo mentioned the six manifestations in the central organs' party style, which generally exist in our province, and which have cropped up in various forms and varying degrees in the organs at all levels. What is especially serious is that some leading organs and cadres have taken the lead in committing some malpractices, such as turning a deaf ear to the central repeated injunctions concerning discipline by sticking to their old ways of doing things, and adopting countermeasures in coping with the policies. Though these malpractices have been committed by a few units and individuals, they can damage party style and the reputation of the party and the country, if they are not corrected, and they can adversely affect the activities of creating a turn for the better in social morale and the economic construction and reform programs.

In straightening out party style, we should currently make a start by implementing the circulars issued by the General Offices of the State Council and the CPC Central Committee. The party organizations and party members at all levels should earnestly study the central directives concerned, examine themselves in line with every provision of the directives, and correct their mistakes in a down-to-earth manner. In conducting this work, we should have a sense of emergency and responsibility and race against time to firmly carry out the work. No one is allowed to adopt an attitude of perfunctorily performing one's duty and paying no heed to the directives on activities to improve party style. It is imperative to refrain from adopting a wait-and-see attitude toward the activities, relying on the higher authorities in dealing with problems, and hankering after gains; and to have all party members and units set examples in carrying out the activities. The main reason for the failures of the past in correcting the malpractices is that we have talked too much and done too little. Therefore, we should first be determined and second continue to correct future malpractices. To be successful in this regard, we should do a good job in grasping the following three tasks:

1. Efforts should be made to have the leading organs and cadres resolutely take the lead in carrying out the activities.

In view of the province as a whole, first of all the provincial level organs and leading cadres should be examples in this regard, take the lead in observing discipline and abiding by the law, and resolutely combat and correct the malpractices. Among the prefectures, cities, and counties, the leading personnel of the prefectural, city, and county party committees should take the lead in carrying out the activities; and compare, examine, and sum up their experience and lessons in line with the six manifestations given by the central circulars, as well as correct their discovered problems, while conducting the activities.

2. Efforts should be made to boldly conduct management, grasp the work, and overcome the knotty difficulties. We should firmly grasp the work of dealing with the malpractices and the cases of violations. As for party members who have committed general mistakes, we should concentrate on conducting ideological education among them. Those who have committed serious problems should be dealt with strictly without sparing their feelings and tolerating their mistakes. As for the major and serious cases, it is imperative for us to examine them by placing them on file. Those who have violated law and discipline, no matter how high and how strong their positions and power may be, must be called to legal account. All Communist Party members should take a clear stance and handle matters impartially to spread justice and to combat malpractices.

3. Efforts should be made to put the work of straightening out party style and examining and dealing with cases on the important schedule of the party committees in order to see to it that the work of examining cases and dealing with them can be done every day in the upcoming several years and to ensure the party's fine work style is continuously carried forward.

In his speech, Sun Weiben stated: The most fundamental task for running the party strictly is to train party members to enhance their sense of party spirit and to continuously upgrade the political quality of party members. Party style is the external indicator of party spirit which is the foundation of party style. If party members become weakened in party spirit, they are liable to forget the party's principles and public duties and commit all malpractices and cases violating the law and discipline. Therefore, the fundamental measure for straightening out party style is to enhance the training on party spirit among party members and also to strengthen the education among them on the party's fundamental objective, on communist ideals, on the relationship among the existing policies, and on the relationship between the leeway created by the policies and the principle of upholding party spirit. Efforts should be also made to conduct education among party members on observing the discipline and abiding by the law, and on the knowledge of science and culture. In addition, current attention should be paid to vigorously improving party life. All leading cadres of the party organizations at all levels cannot perform their duties well without the effective supervision of the party organizations and the mutual support of party members. The key reason we lack vitality in party organizational life at present and strong fighting capacity lies in not truly carrying out formal criticism and self-criticism. Hereafter, all-out efforts should be made to restore the party's fine tradition and to carry out criticism and self-criticism. The party committees at all levels should set examples in this regard for the masses.

In his speech, he urged the party organizations at all levels to further do a good job in separating administrative work from the party affairs in order to enable themselves to exert all-out efforts to engage in self-improvement.

TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS FEDERATION COUNCIL MEETS

[By reporter Fan Liquing]

[Excerpt] Beijing, 19 Jan (XINHUA) -- The second meeting of the second council of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots has decided to continue to publicize, in the new year, the CPC's "one country, two systems" proposal and its various other policies for the peaceful reunification of the motherland. It has also decided to vigorously promote mutual exchanges between the peoples on both sides of the Taiwan Strait, to actively unfold economic exchange work with Taiwan compatriots residing abroad and in Taiwan, and to simultaneously do a good job in the work concerning Taiwan compatriots on the mainland.

The meeting was held in Beijing from 13 to 19 January. A total of 78 council members and concerned cadres from 29 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions attended the meeting.

Yan Mingfu, director of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee; Su Ziheng, chairman of the Council of General Office of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League; and Liao Qiuzhong, president of the Taiwan Fellow-Students Association, were invited to give speeches at the meeting.

Lin Liyun, president of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, made a report entitled: "A Summation of the Work of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots in 1985 and the Scheduled Tasks for 1986." The council members held full discussions on the report. In her report, Lin Liyun said: In 1985, the federation, regarding work at home as the foundation and work overseas as the focal point, has striven to play its role as a bridge and created a new situation in the work.

JIANGSU LEADERS AT SOIREE FOR TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS

[Excerpt] On the evening of 22 January, the reception offices for Taiwan compatriots under the Jiangsu Provincial and Nanjing City People's Governments, the provincial and Nanjing City Federations of Taiwan Compatriots, and the Jiangsu People's Broadcasting Station jointly held a soiree at the Great Hall of the People in Nanjing to greet the Spring Festival and extend regards to Taiwan compatriots and their dependents.

Attending the soiree were leaders Jiang Weiqing, Han Peixin, Shen Daren, Gu Xiulian, and Sun Han; responsible persons of concerned dependents of the Nanjing PLA Military Region; some Taiwan compatriots and their dependents in Nanjing; as well as responsible persons of provincial and city political and mass organizations and people of various circles, totaling nearly 3,000 people.

At the soiree, Governor Gu Xiulian made an ebullient speech. She said: The reunification of the motherland and the reunion of our kith and kin is an irresistible historical trend. We deeply believe that this day will surely come. Governor Gu also said that Radio Voice of the Heart [Xin ling zhi sheng] will be inaugurated soon to establish communication between the peoples on both sides of the Taiwan Strait.

DENG XIAOPING 'CONCERNED' ABOUT RECTIFICATION

["Special Dispatch" from contributing correspondent: "Deng Xiaoping Concerned About Rectifying Party Style"]

[Text] Shanghai -- According to informed sources here, since the CPC Central Committee convened a meeting attended by 8,000 persons, the work of correcting unhealthy trends has unfolded in an all-round way in the departments, commissions, and offices subordinate to the CPC Central Committee and State Council. A number of organs have temporarily ceased working in the mornings, spending the time instead on rectification. With regard to the major economic crimes involving collusion between upper and lower levels and between inside and outside, the Central Secretariat is determined to regard these as the focal point in the work and to organize forces to investigate and deal with them in a thoroughgoing way. Deng Xiaoping is personally concerned with the work. He has sternly warned high-ranking leading cadres that they must set an example and avoid favoritism. It is said that the central authorities will deal with two children of well-known leaders, and will name them. A high-level meeting also recently decided that elements guilty of particularly serious crimes should, after due legal process, be executed, so as to "kill one to warn a hundred." After an example has been set by the central organs, this rectification work will spread throughout the whole country, from top to bottom, in 1986. A turn for the better in party style and social mood is expected.

TRAIN EXPLOSION CAUSED BY PEASANT SUICIDE

["Special dispatch" from correspondent Chou Wen-chiamg: "Truth About the Train Explosion Revealed; Peasant Took Dynamite on Board To Commit Suicide"]

[Text] The truth about the explosion on the train at the border of Hunan and Guangdong Provinces has been revealed: A peasant took dynamite on board the train to commit suicide, thus killing innocent people and causing a calamity.

An explosion on the Wuhan-Guangzhou express train No 247 at the border between Hunan and Guangdong Provinces on the evening of 15 January killed or injured 46 people. After the incident, all the public security departments of the provinces, cities and counties along the line immediately sent people to investigate. According to the survivors and a document found on the spot, and after carrying out complete investigation, the truth about the explosion was finally revealed:

A Hunan peasant about 27 years old was caught in a family dispute and was unable to extricate himself. He once told his wife and a girlfriend that he wanted to die, and even asked some of his friends about how to commit suicide. The peasant also bought six jin of dynamite and a bundle of fuses, and ignited the dynamite several times as an experiment near the village where he lived. On the day of the incident, his wife saw him go out with a package of dynamite. Soon afterward, she heard a loud explosion from the railroad and guessed that he had been killed. So his wife went back to her parents' home at once and tearfully told her brother what had happened. But they did not know that he had also killed many innocent passengers while killing himself.

According to the survivors, most of the passengers were sleeping when the explosion occurred. Two young parents sitting beside him were playing with their baby at the time of the explosion. As a result, the baby was thrown out of the train, his head severed from his body.

A girl sitting in the seat opposite him escaped death because she had exchanged seats with her boyfriend before the explosion occurred, but her boyfriend was seriously injured and later died in the hospital. Another young couple escaped death because they had left their seats to go to watch others playing cards.

Postscript: From 16 January, all railroad stations in China began to adopt strict security measures to ban people from taking flammable items and explosives on board in order to ensure the safety of the passengers during the Chinese new year.

MING PAO ARTICLE NOTES RISING PRICES IN BEIJING

Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 22 Jan 86 p 5

["Beijing Scene" by Liang San-po: "A Tide of Rising Prices"]

[Text] In order to follow the fashion, I bought some exquisite postcards on the eve of the new year so that I could send them to my relatives and friends in the United States. As usual, we put an 0.8 yuan stamp on each overseas airmail letter.

It was a holiday on 1 January. After making dumplings, I suddenly remembered that I had forgotten to send a new year card to a friend in New York. I wrote a few words hastily, put a 0.8 yuan stamp on the airmail envelop, and went directly to the post office. Unexpectedly, the lady at the counter returned the letter to me and said: "That is not enough postage." I argued: "It was 0.8 yuan 2 days ago." The lady replied contemptuously: "Starting today the price has increased."

I was struck dumb by the news. Prices changing so quickly. I had to admit that I am too bookish and pay no attention to current affairs. Still unconvinced, I asked the lady: "The news about a postal rate increase has not been carried in the newspaper." She took no notice of my "objection," but went on looking at a mirror and making up her eyebrows.

I had to mail the airmail letter. Our friendship, after all, was more important than money. With a change in my attitude, I asked the lady humbly: "How much should I pay then, comrade?" "1.1 yuan!" I put another 0.3 yuan stamp on the envelop. Later, I learned that the price of domestic airmail letters also rose from 0.1 yuan to 0.5 yuan.

I went home perplexed and discussed the matter with my wife: "We often said in the past that the price of everything rose except stamps. We can no longer say that now!" My wife was shocked by the figures. She calculated them by herself: "If the price of an overseas airmail letter rises from 0.8 yuan to 1.1 yuan, it would be an increase of 26.66 percent!"

"Domestic and Hong Kong and Macao airmail letters have also increased from 0.1 yuan to 0.5 yuan, up 400 percent. Easy to calculate, isn't it?" I said with a smile.

She shook her head and heaved a deep sigh. People say that the price of matches will not increase, she told me, now it has increased by 50 percent. When I went to a store to buy matches a few days ago, the clerk told me: "There will be a further increase after the new year!"

The dumplings were cooked and ready to be served as our conversation went on. We forgot about the price increase topic when the dumplings sent forth an appetizing smell. We set the table and were ready to celebrate New Year's Day.

A friend of mine came at this moment. He took off his overcoat and presented a bottle of famous Sichuan brand "Wu Liang Ye" wine.

Then he said casually: "Damn it! This wine could be brought for 6 or 7 yuan in the past. Now it costs 30 yuan." I blamed him for not buying it from a state-owned shop. With a long face, he said: "You simply can't get such fine liquor from a state-owned shop."

The famous wine embarrassed me. Dumplings actually do not go very well with wine. I persuaded my friend to keep the wine until dinner. After enjoying the dumplings, I had a talk with my wife. With such a nice bottle of wine, I told my wife to buy some meat to entertain our friend. I said that there were prawns for sale in the market. She asked me about the price and I replied 22 yuan per jin. "My god," she put out her tongue: "We only have 30 yuan left and the next pay day is on the 4th."

My wife took a basket and went to the market. When she returned, she showed me the things she had purchased: A frozen chicken, a grass carp, two packs of "555" cigarettes, and some Chinese flowering cabbage. She told me quietly: "I spent more than 20 yuan for all this."

After all, we had a fish on the table which was a sign of prosperity according to Chinese custom. During the dinner, the friend said: "At the party last night, the mayor said that there will be an all-round growth in Beijing's work in the new year." When my wife heard the word "growth," she reacted quickly: "What? All-round growth? Thank goodness, we hope that there will be an increase in our wages."

HONG KONG BISHOP VISITS PRC FOR FAMILY REUNION

HK24045 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 24 Jan 86 p 1

[By Walter Cheung in Wuhua]

[Excerpt] Hong Kong's Roman Catholic Bishop, the Most Reverend John Baptist Wu, was reunited with his youngest brother at a guesthouse in Wuhua County last night after being separated for 40 years. Bishop Wu will meet his 85-year-old mother and two other younger brothers this morning on his return to Cai Dong village in Hekou, Wuhua.

The Bishop plans to celebrate Mass for his Catholic family at their house.

It is believed that no Catholic bishop from outside China has said Mass in the country since the Chinese Government severed links with the Vatican in the 1950s.

Bishop Wu left his village after finishing secondary school and went to Hong Kong in 1946 to study at the then South China Regional Seminary. Subsequent lost contacts and political considerations have prevented Bishop Wu from returning to Cai Dong. After being ordained in 1952, Bishop Wu went to Rome, then the United States and finally Taiwan before returning to Hong Kong in 1975 to become Bishop.

After dinner with the head of the county, Mr Deng Chaoji, Bishop Wu met his youngest brother, Mr Wu Telu, who went to the guesthouse where Bishop Wu was staying.

Bishop Wu asked his brother whether he recognised him. His brother replied that he had seen his photographs. Reporters were asked not to disturb their 45-minute talk and his brother did not speak to reporters afterwards.

PRC TO CONTRIBUTE TO IFAD DROUGHT RELIEF FUND

[Text] Rome, January 24 (XINHUA) -- Representatives from 139 member states of the U.N. International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) today agreed on ways to raise 500 million U.S. dollars in aid for drought-striken African countries. The agreement came at the end of IFAD's 9th conference of fund management after four days of difficult negotiations over how much two major international organizations would have to contribute to the fund. IFAD had achieved only half its one billion U.S. dollars fund collection target before the conference because of differences over sharing.

According to one resolution, IFAD will collect over the next three years 500 million U.S. dollars as its supplementary fund, of which 300 million U.S. dollars will come from the 20 member states of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and the rest from the 12 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). During discussions on the sharing, representatives from the OPEC states said that because of the decline in oil prices in the international market, they could donate only 184 million U.S. dollars. The OECD countries also wanted to reduce their donations from 300 millions to 276 million U.S. dollars. But they said they'd agree to the resolution if the OPEC countries agreed to donate their share of 200 million U.S. dollars by February 20. China, as a developing country, also offered 1.8 million U.S. dollars.

The meeting also adopted another resolution, "on special assistance program for the drought-hit south area of the Sahara Desert". Only Belgium, Sweden and Denmark promised to donate to that fund, however. France and Canada agreed to participate in the program, but made no promises of donations. Describing the adoption of the two resolutions as the success of the conference, IFAD's President Jazairy said that with the fund, the IFAD can do much more in helping the poorer countries develop their agriculture.

GUANGMINO RIBAO VIEWS SHEVARDNADZE'S JAPAN VISIT

[Article by Jiang Daoding, staff correspondent stationed in Tokyo: "Soviet Foreign Minister's Visit to Japan"]

[Text] On 15 January, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze arrived in Tokyo to begin a 5-day official visit. Observers held: Resumption of the regular consultations between the foreign ministers of Japan and the Soviet Union, which were discontinued for 8 years, means that tense relations between the two countries have eased. However, with the barrier -- the issue of the "northern territories' -- difficult to remove, improvement in bilaterial relations remains very limited.

In 1979, together with the United States, Japan imposed economic sanctions against the Soviet Union in protest against its military invasion of Afghanistan. Since then, Japanese-Soviet relations have been in a "cooling" state, economic exchanges have gradually diminished, and trade volume has dropped sharply. Since the beginning of last year, with the changes in the international environment, both sides have been seeking ways of extending dialogue between themselves.

After achieving the objective of turning Japan into "a member of the community of Western countries," to strive for the status of "a big country politically," Yasuhiro Nakasone has further regarded the improvement of Japanese-Soviet relations as the final topic of setting "the postwar political final accounts" in foreign affairs. In March last year, prevailing over all domestic censures, he determinedly went to Moscow to attend the funeral ceremony of Konstantin Chernenko and held talks with Mikhail Gorbachev. In October, while attending celebrations marking the 40th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, Nakasone expressed to the press his wish "to take a visit to the Soviet Union into account." Nakasone held that it was necessary to maintain a dialogue with the other superpower in upgrading Japan's international standing. The moment Gorbachev assumed office, he demonstrated an active stance of "attaching importance to Japan." In order to push his domestic economic reforms ahead, Gorbachev regards Japan as his important partner in economic cooperation. For this reason, he has conducted a series of "smile diplomacy" activities, creating an atmosphere for resuming regular consultations between the foreign ministers of the two countries.

The Soviet policy of attaching importance to economic development has great appeal to Japan. Japanese economic circles have a particularly strong interest in the four large chemical plants designated as key development projects in the Twelfth 5-Year Plan, which began this year. Since the beginning of last year, with an enlivened atmosphere of dialogue between the governments of the two countries prevailing, some active trends have emerged in nongovernmental economic exchange activities. In December last year, both sides signed a contract on joint development of chips and wood pulp for industrial use. This is another quite important economic cooperation move following the third contract signed by both sides 4 years ago on the development of the Soviet Far East's resources. Both sides also decided that the Japanese-Soviet Joint Economic Commission would hold a meeting in Moscow in April of this year to discuss development plans for petroleum and coal gas on the Sakhalin continental shelf. Many Japanese enterprises have decided to hold a large-sized "comprehensive exhibition of Japanese industry" in October of this year.

Changes in Soviet policy toward Japan hinge on Japan's strategy toward the United States. It has been reported that, at the present foreign ministerial consultations, Shevardnadze will ask Japan to support Gorbachev's tentative plan for convening "an all-Asia security protection meeting" aimed, first, at containing Japan's actions and breaking up the "relationship" between Japan and the United States as allies; second, at making the boundary lines formed after World War II permanent through the proposed meeting and thus shelving the issue of "northern territories"; and third, at reversing its present inferior position in the Pacific region. The Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs has indicated that it will reject the Soviet proposal.

The most important barrier hindering Japanese-Soviet relations is still the issue of the "northern territories." Japan has repeatedly stressed that solving the issue of the "northern territories" is the important topic at the present foreign ministerial consultations. Only when the issue of the "northern territories" is solved can a peace treaty be concluded and cooperative relations in various fields be developed in a stable political environment. However, as of Shevardnadze's arrival in Japan there has been no indication that the Soviet Union has changed its stand that "the issue of territories has been solved." A fierce debate between Japan and the Soviet Union focusing around this issue is expected. According to Japanese newspapers, on the premise of adhering to the notion of "politics and economics are inseparable," the Japanese side will barter expansion of economic and cultural exchanges for Soviet concessions on the issue of the northern territories so as to return the status to that of "the issue of the northern territories has not been settled," a status affirmed by the 1973 Japanese-Soviet summit. However, in any case, the momentum for expanded Japanese-Soviet dialogue, which is already under way, will not change.

ZHAO ZIYANG SPEAKS ON OPEN POLICY TO BUSINESSMEN

[Text] Beijing, January 27 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said today China's drive against economic crimes and other unhealthy tendencies would "by no means affect its policy of opening to the outside world." "As for those unhealthy tendencies," he said, "we should neither take a laissez-faire attitude and let them go unchecked, nor should we give up eating because some things don't go down well."

Zhao was speaking here to a delegation from the board of directors of Pepsico, the U.S. soft drink manufacturer, in China for the opening of the company's second Pepsi-Cola bottling plant -- in Guangzhou, capital of Guangdong Province in southern China. "The day we adopted the policy of opening to the outside world and invigorating our domestic economy, we decided we would consistently crack down on illegal economic practices to ensure smooth implementation of the policy," he said. Zhao said the food processing industry -- including soft drinks -- had an "important place" in government development plans for light industry, along with household electrical appliance and garment manufacturing. He said China had abundant resources and a large domestic market for its food industry, but its food processing technology was outdated. In order to upgrade that technology, he said, China wanted to work with foreign enterprises in ways that would help met the needs of the Chinese people, including joint research. Zhao predicted that Sino-U.S. trade would continue to grow. But he added that the two countries should work together to correct their current trade imbalance -- which favors the United States. Donald M. Kendall, chairman of Pepisco, said that there was great potential for cooperation between his company and China, and the two sides could explore ways of cooperation in many areas.

ALLIES RELUCTANT TO SUPPORT LIBYAN SANCTIONS

[Text] Washington, Jan. 24 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead returned here this afternoon after ending a 10-day trip to Canada and eight European countries, having apparently failed to persuade the Western allies to support Washington's economic sanctions against Libya. During the trip, which included stops in Canada, Federal Germany, France, Turkey, Italy, Greece, Belgium, Britain, and the Netherlands, Whitehead met with the leaders of the nine countries and proposed a four-step program for Western allies to take economic action against Libya. Whitehead's proposal included reduction in Libyan oil imports, a ban on shipments of high technology to Libya, curtailment of air traffic to Tripoli, and cuts in embassy staffs. However, most of the countries expressed reluctance to follow the American lead and to take action against Libya, agreeing only not to take up the slack left by the withdrawal of American trade and investment from Libya. Many of these countries made it clear that while they agreed with the American objectives in seeking to curb terrorism, they disagreed with the tactics pursued by the Reagan administration, such as the application of punitive economic measures against Libya.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan announced January 7 a comprehensive economic boycott against Libya, which Washington has accused of backing the terrorist attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports last December 27. The U.S. has since urged its allies repeatedly to support its actions. Although the reactions from some countries have been somewhat cool, and even critical, Whitehead said earlier today in The Hague, the last stop on his European tour, the United States will continue to consult with the allies on what steps can [be] taken to combat terrorism. Meanwhile, Pentagon sources said today that fighter planes from American aircraft carriers have begun to conduct a week-long series of flight operations off the Libyan coast in the central Mediterranean.

GORBACHEV SENDS MESSAGE ON TEST MORATORIUM

[Text] Moscow, January 23 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has stated that his country's unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing cannot go on forever if the United States fails to join it, the official news agency TASS reported today. Gorbachev made the statement in a message to the leaders of Argentina, Greece, India, Tanzania, Mexico and Sweden, hand-delivered by special envoys, TASS said.

The Soviet leader stressed in the message that it is vital to tap all opportunities "to get the imposition of a bilateral Soviet-U.S. moratorium" and "to move forward towards complete and universal prohibition of nuclear tests." "The U.S.S.R.'s unilateral moratorium cannot, certainly, be extended ad infinitum," the Soviet leader declared.

TASS said that Gorbachev has informed the leaders of the six countries of the new Soviet initiative on arms limitation and disarmament. He explained the essence of the concrete stage-by-stage program of complete and universal elimination of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, and stressed the need for an agreement on banning the development, testing and deployment of space-based weapons, TASS added. The Soviet initiative was announced by the Soviet leader on January 15, the eve of a new round of U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks in Geneva. The initiative included the extension of the Soviet unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests to March 31 of this year. The moratorium had originally been for the period from August 6 to the end of 1985. The leaders of the six countries last year issued a joint call for the two superpowers to stop their arms race.

SOUTH YEMEN'S AL-'ATTAS LEAVES MOSCOW FOR HOME

Al-'Attas and Al-Dali were stranded in India when fierce fighting broke out in his country on January 13. Since their arrival in Moscow on January 16, Soviet party Politburo member Yegor Ligachev and alternate member Boris Ponomarev held two rounds of talks with them on the situation in Democratic Yemen. Ligachev assured them of continuing Soviet support for that country.

A TASS despatch from Aden yesterday reported that Al-'Attas was named provisional head of state to replace President 'Ali Nasir Muhammad by the Socialist Party of Democratic Yemen at a plenum on Friday. His appointment was confirmed the same day by that country's Supreme People's Council (national parliament). The TASS despatch also reported that the military actions in Aden had been "completely stopped" and the situation there was "gradually normalizing." At its Friday plenum, TASS said, the Socialist Party reviewed the developments in that country since January 13, and pledged its "adherence to the ideals of scientific socialism and the principles of proletarian internationalism." TASS added that the party meeting "highly valued" the support and solidarity from the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. Strengthening and developing the relations with these countries will be the "cornerstone" of the foreign policy of Democratic Yemen, the meeting emphasized.

TOLKUNOV COMMENTS ON MIDEAST, GENEVA TALKS

[Text] Paris, January 24 (XINHUA) -- A senior Soviet official said here today that the Soviet Union will cooperate with "the new leaders" of Democratic Yemen if they would honor the friendship and cooperation treaty between the two countries, the AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE reported. The rivals of Democratic Yemeni President 'Ali Nasir Muhamed seemed to have already "taken" the country, said Lev Tolkunov, chairman of Soviet of the Union of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., according to AFP.

Democratic Yemen was thrown into a civil war as President Nasir reportedly declared he had 'Abd al-Fattah Isma'il, secretary-general of the Yemeni Socialist Party, and several other rivals "executed" on January 13. The situation there has become unclear since then, with both warring sides claiming control over the country.

Tolkunov, who arrived here Wednesday for a visit at the invitation of the French-Soviet friendship group of the French Senate, also told reporters that the relations between the Soviet Union and Israel should be normalized only after, not before, the convocation of an international peace conference on the Middle East. "It would be better to wait for the results of the peace conference," he said. This is because a normalization of the relations before the conference, plus hardliner Yitzhaq Shamir in power, would harden Israel's position in the Middle East conflicts, he added. The Soviet Union severed its diplomatic ties with Israel following the outbreak of the Israeli-Arab War in 1967.

About the nuclear disarmament talks in Geneva, Tolkunov reiterated that his country will not reduce its nuclear weapons if the United States goes ahead with the "star wars" program.

YELTSIN CRITICIZES GRISHIN AT MOSCOW CONGRESS

OW251921 Beijing XINHUA in English 1859 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Moscow, January 25 (XINHUA) -- The newly-appointed first secretary of Moscow City's Committee of the Soviet Communist Party (CPSU), Boris Yeltsin, at a Moscow's party congress Friday severely criticized the previous party committee for "serious mistakes" in the presence of his predecessor Viktor Grishin who is still a member of the CPSU's Politburo, the Soviet newspaper MOSCOW PRAVDA reported today. In his lengthy speech at the congress published by the paper, Yeltsin bitterly censured a number of Moscow's party and government top officials by name and blamed them for their bad management of Moscow's food supply, urban traffic, housing and other matters.

In the past two years, some 86 party officials of enterprises and organizations in the city have been expelled from the party and a large number of officials punished administratively. Grishin was removed from his post last December. The meeting were attended by the Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, and many other members of the party Politburo or Secretariat.

BEIJING RADIO ON KOREAN REUNIFICATION PROSPECTS

["International Current Events" program: Part One: "The Situation on the Korean Peninsula and the Cause of the Division of Korea"]

[Excerpts] The division of Korea into Southern and Northern parts has been a fact for 40 years, and it has caused immense sufferings to the Korean people, both in the South and in the North. Today, every patriotic Korean with a sense of national pride -- regardless of where they live or their age -- yearns for an end to the division of the Korean people and the reunification of their beautiful country through serious negotiations. In short, early reunification of Korea is the unanimous aspiration of the 60 million Korean people.

Why is it then that reunification still cannot be achieved? What is the main problem? Let us now discuss this issue briefly.

With U.S. support, the Southern part of Korea became the so-called Republic of Korea, whose first president was the proverbial reactionary Syngman Rhee, who willingly served the imperialists, violently opposed communism and the independent and peaceful reunfication of Korea, and time and again raised a hue and cry to invade the North and unify Korea militarily. On 25 June 1950, U.S. imperialists wantonly launched an aggressive war and invaded the DPRK in the North by force. On 25 October the same year, Chinese volunteers went to Korea to support the Korean people's just war against aggression. On 27 July 1953, the United States was forced to sign an Armistice Agreement with Korea and China.

Although it has been more than 30 years since the signing of the armistice accord U.S. troops are still stationed in South Korea. Moreover, they have made it a practice each year to hold mammoth military exercises with the troops of the South Korean authorities. The United States has also been supplying all sorts of military equipment and modern weapons to the South Korean authorities. All this has seriously violated the spirit of the Korean Armistice Agreement. The greatest obstacle to Korea's independent and peaceful reunification, therefore, is the stationing of U.S. troops in South Korea and U.S. interference in Korea's internal affairs.

During the past 4 decades, the KWP [Korean Workers Party] and the DPRK have made unremitting efforts to achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea. According to incomplete estimates, the KWP and the DPRK Government have put forward more than 200 relevant plans and proposals, including specific measures for reunifying the country. Since 1985, there has appeared in the Korean peninsula a tendency to ease the tension there. Both the North and the South have had dialogues and contacts at all levels, and they have made some practical progress.

Of course, there is still a long way to go before Korea can achieve its independent and peaceful reunification. Dialogues and relaxation of tension, however, are what the Korean people want, and they are also conducive to Asian security and world peace. Such being the case, the prospects are bright for the independent ad peaceful reunification of Korea.

Part Two

["International Current Events" program: Second of two parts: "The Situation on the Korean Peninsula and the Cause of the Division of Korea"]

[Text] Listeners, yesterday we introduced the situation in the Korean peninsula and the origin of partition between the South and North. Today let us discuss the developments in dialogue and contacts between the two sides in the past year or so.

On the basis of progress in 1984, the trend to reconciliation in the Korean peninsula further developed in 1985. The major characteristics of this development were that the North and South, which had long faced each other in a tense atmosphere, were conducting dialogue and contacts at different levels, and through different channels, with some concrete results.

The North-South dialogue began in the 1970s. There have been two high points: One was the talks between the Red Cross Societies and Coordination Committees of both sides in the early 1970s; the other was the preparatory talks for a meeting between the premiers of both sides in the early 1980s. Dialogue has been held intermittently in the past decade or so, and was resumed in 1984 after a 3-year suspension. However, an incident occurred in Panmumjom on 13 November of that year in which U.S. and South Korean security guards killed security guards from the North. Afterwards, the United States and South Korea again staged the largest joint military exercise since 1976, creating a discordant atmosphere for North-South dialogue. People were worried that the resumed dialogue might again be suspended.

However, it was, after all, the mid-1980s, and the major world trend was toward peace and development. North-South relations, which reflect the ups and downs of the situation in the Korean peninsula, should, as was pointed out by the Supreme People's Assembly of the North in a letter to the South, not seek confrontation within the nation or enhancement of tensions; instead, dialogue should be held to open up a way to reconciliation and peace.

There were contacts, either official or unofficial, in many fields, including political, economic, sports, and visits by separated families, between the North and South in 1985 and various degrees of success were achieved. These, plus contacts through hot lines between the two sides, made 1985 an unprecedented year in terms of frequency of contacts in the 40 years of South-North division. Some world news agencies selected the North-South dialogue and exchange of personnel as one of the 10 top news events of 1985. This is an encouraging, good sign.

In 1985, the two sides altogether held four rounds of economic talks, three of Red Cross talks, and two of preparatory negotiations for parliamentary talks. The Olympic Committees of both sides also discussed, under the sponsorship of IOC President Samaranch in Lausanne, Switzerland, the possibility of co-hosting the 1988 Olympic Games. These talks involved a wide variety of subjects, and the atmosphere was relatively harmonious. Both sides were able to calmly exchange views, earnestly consider the other side's proposals and suggestions a[illegible], on the basis of each making concessions and seeking common ground while reserving differences, reach agreement or identity of views in some areas.

During the four rounds of economic talks, the two sides agreed, in principle, to form a North-South Economic Cooperation Joint Committee, with vice premiers as chairmen. It was also proposed that each side set up an economic cooperation committee and a draft plan for economic cooperation, and an exchange be worked out. The talks laid a foundation for item-by-item discussions and the conclusion of a final agreement in the future.

The Red Cross Societies of both sides held three rounds of official negotiations last year, alternately in Pyongyang and Seoul. They discussed a package of five subjects, and reached agreement in principle on the question of free interaction between separated families and relatives. Although they did not make substantive progress on the question of reunion of 10 million separated familes and relatives, the two sides accomplished the exchange of visits by song and dance troupes and groups of divided family members on 20-23 September. Although the number of personnel from each side was limited to 151 and the venues were confined to Pyongyang and Seoul, this exchange was the first concrete action toward reconciliation in the 40 years of division and confrontation between North and South. It was the first exchange of personnel. It not only gave the 10 million separated families and relatives hope and confidence for a reunion, but also played a positive role in relaxing tensions in the Korean peninsula and promoting the peaceful reunification of Korea.

A new development in the North-South dialogue last year was the two rounds of preparatory negotiations for parliamentary talks, expanding from specialized subjects to the political field. The proposal for parliamentary talks was advanced in April last year by the Supreme People's Assembly of the North in a letter to the National Assembly of South Korea. Governments and legislatures of many nations expressed their active support for the proposal. After studying it for a relatively extended period, the South accepted the proposal and preparatory negotiations were held. During the discussions, the two sides confirmed the need to hold parliamentary talks, and reached an identity of views on the composition of delegations, the form and venue of the talks.

The dialogue and contacts between the North and South in 1985 enhanced mutual understanding and created an atmosphere of national harmony and trust. However, the two Koreas, after all, have been divided for 40 years. They have considerable differences in structure, system, and ideology and, moreover, there are many other factors standing in the way of national reunification. Therefore, there are, inevitably, many difficulties and obstacles in North-South relations. This requires both sides to exert concerted efforts to overcome or remove these obstacles.

Currently, there are still major differences in the fundamental stand and policies of the two sides on relaxing tensions in the Korean peninsula and bringing about peaceful reunification of the fatherland. The North holds that the two sides should hold parliamentary talks at an early date, in order to sign a joint statement of nonaggression and end military competition and confrontation. Moreover, it also hopes that the United States will join the North-South talks, making them tripartite, replace the Armstice Agreement with a peace treaty, and finally bring about the correct plan for the North and South to found a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo. However, the South sidestepped these proposals. In the North-South dialogue, it only valued a material exchange in the economic area and freer interaction between separated families and relatives. Moreover, it wants U.S. troops to remain in South Korea. Such an attitude is certainly not conducive to the real relaxation of the situation in the Korean peninsula. It is also detrimental to the development of closer relations between the two sides.

What merits our attention is that the United States and the South Korean authorities did not accept the DPRK's proposal, and insist on staging large-scale joint military exercise in South Korea, beginning on 10 February. This is, apparently, not conducive to further contact and dialogue between the North and South. How to further push forward North-South dialogue, achieve concrete results, pave the way for a summit meeting of the two sides, and bring about a new situation for peaceful reunification -- this is an important task facing the North and South of Korea this year. It is also of interest to all people who want to see the tensions in the Korean peninsula alleviated.

ABE ADDRESSES JAPANESE DIET ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

[Text] Tokyo, January 27 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, stressed today that he is determined to make the May summit of the seven industrialized countries in Tokyo a success and to make further efforts for the establishment of lasting and stable relations between Japan and China. In a speech to both houses of the Japanese Diet, the foreign minister said that Japan will do its utmost to enable the summit to fully discuss ways of cooperation among themselves in achieving a stable development of the world economy. Abe said that Japan's relationship with the United States is a cornerstone of Japan's foreign policy.

As regard to Japan-China relations, Abe said a stable foundation has already been established for friendly bilateral cooperation. In future, he added, the two countries will continue to work for lasting and stable bilateral relations through continuous dialogues and on the basis of the Japan-China joint statement, the Japan-China treaty of peace and friendship and the four principles governing their relations -- peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, mutual trust, and long-term stability.

Abe evaluated the recent Tokyo foreign ministers' talks between Japan and the Soviet Union as a very important step toward the of relations between the two countries and a fresh start. He said he will continue to seek talks with Moscow on the northern territorial issue and the conclusion of a peace treaty. Abe pledged that Japan will open its door wider to other nations and will make greater efforts to help developing countries, especially in extending support and offering cooperation to Southeast Asian countries. He went on to note that the world has achieved progress in economic cooperation as a result of the agreement of the group of five nations on a weaker U.S. dollar and the holding of another round of trade talks. Yet there is a mountain of problems to surmount, which include budget deficits, growing protectionism and unemployment, he added. Under these circumstances, he said, there is a lot of things for Japan to do for the peace and prosperity of the world.

NAKASONE COMMENTS ON PRC RELATIONS TO DIET

[Text] Tokyo, January 27 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone today pledged to continue efforts to ease Japan's frictions with its trading partners in the spirit of its "international" stature. In his policy speech to the 104th regular session of the Diet (parliament), which was formally reconvened by Emperor Hirohito today after a new year's recess, the Prime Minister said: "Overcoming external economic friction is an urgent task for making Japan a truly international state...and I will work steadily on this problem."

Japan's trade surplus with the United States was estimated at about 50 billion U.S. dollars last year, and it has a chronic surplus of more than 10 billion U.S. dollars with West European nations. Nakasone said his country will do its utmost to make contributions, worth of its international status, to the development of the world economy, because there will be no peace and prosperity for Japan without a peaceful and prosperous world. He stressed the importance of the Tokyo summit of industrial countries to be held in May and pledged to make this 12th seven-nation summit a success "so that it can mark the beginning of a new era of Atlantic-Pacific cooperation."

He said that to maintain and develop good and stable relations with China has always been one of the main pillars of Japan's diplomacy and his government will further its efforts to improve Sino-Japanese ties. The Japanese Government will try to seek trade balance with China while expanding bilateral economic exchanges, he added.

He described the recent visit by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, the first by a Soviet foreign minister to Japan in a decade, as "highly significant" in improving Soviet-Japan relations. "Japan will continue to negotiate tenaciously with the Soviet Union to further improve the relationship and build relations of true stability," he said.

Saying that today's global peace and stability is based on the balance of nuclear and other forces, Nakasone urged the United States and the Soviet Union to make "drastic cuts in their nuclear arsenals." The 67-year-old prime minister also reiterated that Japan's alliance with the United States "is basic to Japanese foreign policy and further development is an important cornerstone for peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region and all the world."

Nakasone said his government will work for the "steady implementation" of a new five-year defense buildup program, starting this year. He said Japan's security policies are designed to ensure its survival "in the harsh international climate." He added that Japan will "firmly maintain" its security arrangements with the United States and work to acquire "the minimum well-ordered and effective defense capability" to ensure its security.

He also pledged to carry out a series of reforms in the fields of administration, finance and education. The prime minister also noted that in contrast with Japan's own "zeal to assimilate foreign cultures and ideas, we have sometimes been derelict in our duty to help the rest of the world benefit from our Japanese ideas and cultural heritage." He therefore called on the country to seek "ways to show Japan off to the rest of the world and help people understand Japan better."

RENMIN RIBAO ON TRUTH BEHIND VIETNAM'S 'BRAGGING'

["Jottings" by Rong Jiu: "The Facts Behind the Bragging"]

[Text] Many people in the Vietnamese press are good at bragging. In the past, the chief editor of NHAN DAN, Hoang Tung by name, was promoted because of his cleverness at bragging. Today, the chief editor of the GUAN DOI NHAN DAN, Tran Cong Man by name, lauds the Vietnamese aggressor troops to the skies, saying how "serious" are the "setbacks" the Vietnamese troops caused to the Cambodian guerrillas in their last dry-season offensives.

However, like other trumpeters, this chief editor of the military press could not help revealing some facts in the face of the ironclad truth. Tran Cong Man said: The Cambodian guerrillas "harassed" the outskirts of Phnom Penh and Siem Reap, an important strategic point in the northwest, and other areas. This "rarely occurred" before 1984. For "security" reasons, foreigners "can no longer go" to most places in Cambodia, which were accessible to them in the past. What he said is true, but he dared not explain what had gone wrong. As a matter of fact, this is very simple. The patriotic Armed Forces of Democratic Kampuchea have gone to the hinterland to expand their operations, thus harassing the rear of the Vietnamese troops and making Vietnam afraid of having its sore spots touched by foreigners.

While referring to the current dry-season offensive, Tran Cong Man asserted that Vietnam need not "reduce its scale of combat in Cambodia." These words of his are worth pondering. Is the fact that authorities are moving troops and heavy weapons to western Cambodia, occasionally infringing on Thai territory, not enough to prove that Vietnam will on no account "reduce" the "scale" of its aggression against Cambodia? Why, then, did Tran Cong Man feel it necessary to clarify Vietnam's undoubted, fixed principle? From this remark of his, if people draw the conclusion that Vietnam has a phobia about telling the truth, Tran Cong Man will probably find it difficult to deny it!

THAI SPOKESMAN ON INDOCHINESE CONFERENCE

[Text] Bangkok, January 24 (XINHUA) -- Thailand does not recognize the ongoing "conference of the three Indo-China's Nations" nor the proposed "Indo-China's federation", Foreign Ministry spokesman Saowanit Khongsiri told a press conference here today. The conference of foreign ministers of Vietnam, Laos and the Hanoi-installed Heng Samrin regime in Kampuchea opened yesterday in Vientiane, capital of Laos.

The Heng Samrin regime cannot represent the Kampuchean people, Saowanit said. At the so-called foreign ministers' conference, he noted, the Lao people have no right to speak and the Kampuchean people have less right to speak, because their countries are under the occupation of Vietnamese troops. However, Saowanit said, Thailand will look into the joint communique issued after the conference in order to make clear Hanoi's actual attitude toward the Kampuchean issue, which has been changeful. Judging by the recent contact between Vietnamese and Indonesian officials, Saowanit said, Vietnam's attitude toward the problem remains unchanged. A country should not interfere in the internal affairs of another, he said, and Vietnam should leave the Kampuchean people to hold their election independently to determine their own fate.

JINGJI CANKAO ON THAILAND'S ECONOMIC DIPLOMACY

["Special Report" from Bangkok by reporter Zhu Zhenguo: "Thai Foreign Ministry Energetically Develops Economic Diplomacy"]

[Text] The economic diplomacy of the Thai Foreign Ministry has played a more and more outstanding role in promoting Thailand's trade and economic relations with every country. Achievements in economic work have become important criteria for assessing the work of diplomatic personnel in the Foreign Ministry.

Last year was "a year of economic activities" for the Thai Foreign Ministry. Foreign Minister Sitthi and Deputy Foreign Minister Praphat, who is especially in charge of economic affairs, made frequent trips to foreign countries and regarded developing bilateral trade as one of the main tasks in their diplomatic activities. The Thai Foreign Ministry diplomats stationed at embassies and consulates in foreign countries worked as "salesmen" and went about cultivating new markets for Thai commodities in the countries to which they are accredited. In order to help the government solve difficulties in commodity exports, Foreign Minister Sitthi especially set up in the Foreign Ministry a "brain trust" composed of people from industrial and financial circles. Every time when he went abroad to visit foreign countries, he always brought with him a number of economic experts as advisers to offer advice and suggestions, so as to enhance the effectiveness of trade negotiations. Last year, as the EEC countries limited the import of cassava from Thailand, Thailand's cassava exports plunged into a difficult position. Therefore, Foreign Minister Sitthi led a number of cassava exporters on a visit to South Korea, resulting in a deal to export 600,000 tons of cassava products to South Korea this year. In February of last year, the United States placed an embargo on the import of textile products from Thailand, seriously hindering Thailand's apparel exports. The Foreign Ministry immediately sent a delegation headed by Under Secretary Asa Sarasin to Washington for negotiations and made the United States lift the embargo on the import of textile products from Thailand.

Last year, the Thai Foreign Ministry called a meeting of Thai diplomatic envoys to foreign countries, instructing its diplomatic missions to take expanding Thai commodity exports as a special task. In addition, the Thai Foreign Ministry also asked its organizations stationed in foreign countries to attract foreign capital and tourists.

PRC DELEGATE ATTENDS SAN MARINO CP CONGRESS

[Text] San Marino, January 24 (XINHUA) -- The eleventh National Congress of the Communist Party of San Marino (CPSM) opened here today. At the opening session tonight, CPSM General Secretary Gilberto Ghiotti delivered a speech entitled "A Role Played by Communists and Progressives in Political and Social Reforms."

Ghiotti said since the Communist Party is the ruling party, this congress should be a good chance to sum up its experience. The reductions of public deficits and unemployment, and the increase in production investment, he said, are good signs of what we have accomplished. The general secretary pointed out that his party will make continuous efforts to develop the national economy and culture, protect the environment and create more jobs.

Referring to foreign policy, he said that it is the CPSM traditional policy to uphold national independence, maintain world peace and strengthen unity among all nations. In his speech, he also demanded a negotiated just solution to the Palestinian issue and called for recognization of the Palestine Liberation Organization by all European countries.

The party congress was attended by 138 delegates representing 1,098 party members in the country. Representatives of more than 10 foreign communist parties and national liberation organizations were also attending the congress.

Wang Fu, representative of the Chinese Communist Party (CPC) and general consul of China to San Marino, today read at the congress a congratulatory message from the CPC Central Committee. The message said the Communist Party of San Marino, with its glorious tradition of struggle, has made continuous efforts to promote national economic, social and cultural development and maintain world peace. "We believe that the traditional friendship between our two parties and peoples will certainly be developed further," the message stressed.

Founded in 1941, the Communist Party of San Marino won 15 parliamentary seats in the 1983 general election. At present, the three-party coalition -- the Communist Party, the Socialist Party and the Unitary Socialist Party -- is in office. San Marino is a small republic on the Adriatic Sea in north central Italy with a population of about 22,000.

USSR DENIES ESPIONAGE CHARGE OF BRITISH MAGAZINE

[Text] London, January 22 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Embassy today denied the claim of a British defence magazine that Soviet-trained agents had infiltrated a group of anti-nuclear movement campaigning outside an England Air Force base. A statement issued by the embassy said the report in JANE'S DEFENCE WEEKLY was "malicious slander... an attempt to arouse anti-Soviet hysteria and incite feelings of mistrust and animosity towards the Soviet Union."

The report in the magazine published today quoted unidentified Soviet defectors as saying as many as six agents had infiltrated the group of women who, for the past four years, have been camping outside the Greenham Common base to protest the stationing there of U.S. cruise missiles. Last September, the Soviet Union and Britain each expelled in a tit-for-tat struggle 31 diplomats, businessmen and reporters on charges of espionage.

PDRY CABINET MEETS; NASIR MUHAMMAD MASSES TROOPS

[Text] Djibouti, January 26 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Yemen's new Cabinet met for the first time today amid reports that former President 'Ali Nasir Muhammad was massing troops in his home province for a "showdown battle" with the rival forces. The Cabinet meeting was chaired by former Prime Minister Haydar Abu Bakr al-'Attas, who was appointed provisional president by the Yemen Socialist Party leadership Friday, according to radio Aden monitored here today. The radio report did not identify the ministers who attended the meeting but said those at the session discussed ways to resume production and water and electricity supplies, and to resettle the homeless residents in Aden, the war-torn capital of Democratic Yemen. A technical committee was also set up at the meeting to assess demages caused by the 12-day fighting and mapped out plans for reconstruction, the radio said.

Al-'Attas returned to Aden from Moscow Saturday when the situation in the capital reportedly was returning to normal. In a statement upon his arrival, he said he was satisfied by the outcome of talks with Soviet leaders. Meanwhile, Nasir Muhammad was reported to have mustered a 40,000-strong force of regulars and tribal warriors at his hometown in the Abyan Province east of Aden for what diplomats in Sanaa described as an "imminent showdown" with the rival forces.

In Sanaa, capital of neighboring Arab Yemen, one Arab diplomat said Nasir Muhammad has warned the opponents to lay down arms, or risk a counter offensive by Wednesday. The diplomat said the ultimatum was broadcast over a makeshift radio believed to be operating from the Abyan Province, 50 miles (80 kilometers) east of Aden. The radio quoted Nasir Muhammad as saying "our forces will march on Aden if they do not lay down their arms and return to the barracks by Wednesday."

In another development, the United Arab Emirates' newspaper AL-KHALI said the Soviet Union was providing the new leadership in Aden with unspecified numbers of military planes and tanks and ammunition. The Soviet Union has a air base in the Hadramawt Province and another base near Aden. According to reports from Aden, the new leadership has pledged to maintain relations with the Soviet Union and to continue efforts to improve ties with other Arab countries. The reports said Al-'Attas met Soviet Ambassador Vladislav Shukov and told him that Soviet support was important for the country's development. They also discussed ways to stabilize the situation.

Foreign Minister 'Abd al-'Aziz al-Dali, in a meeting with the Kuwaiti ambassador, assured him that his country would continue its policy of improving relations with other Arabian Peninsula countries, the reports said. However, one diplomat in Djibouti said Democratic Yemen was now virtually divided with the Abyan, Shibrhoh and Lahij Provinces under Nasir Muhammad's control and the other three provinces in the hands of the new leadership.

BUREAUCRATISM BLAMED FOR ECONOMIC CRIMES

[Commentator's article: "The Harm Done by Bureaucratism as Viewed From Economic Crime"]

[Text] The press and radio have recently reported a number of cases of economic crime and swindling in particular. The seriousness of some cases, which involves a huge sum of money, has shocked the public. The leading cadres of some localities and units, who are imbued with bureaucratism, have given the green light to these criminal offenders, thus causing enormous losses to the state and people. This matter deserves our attention.

Although the swindling activities present a false impression, they cannot withstand careful examination. So long as we concentrate our efforts on investigations and studies, they can easily be exposed. Some leading cadres have failed to conduct investigations and studies and have relaxed their vigilance against the illegal offenders. Consequently, they have done the foolish thing of helping the bad elements to do evil. Du Guozhen disguised himself as a "god of wealth" and committed crimes by performing his swindling tricks. Without making any investigation and study, the leading cadres of the Fuzhou government, the Fujian Federation of Trade Unions and the credit department of the Fuzhou branch of the Bank of China gave credence to his false account and gave the green light to his speculative and swindling activities. They agreed to engage in a joint business with him and prepared documents for him to start business, or publicized for him and provided places for him to commit crimes, or granted him funds with false supply and marketing contract papers. Du Guozhen could get more than 200 million yuan within a short period of only a few months because he relied to a great extent on the assistance of bureaucratism.

In China, laws and regulations stipulate in explicit terms business registration, the granting of bank loans, export trade, and so on. However, some of our leading cadres have neglected their duties and failed to follow the rules and regulations. A swindler named He Jiaqing asked the secretary of the Chengbei District CPC Committee of Puqi County, Hubei to offer him a license for running a steel rolling mill. According to regulations, one must have funds, raw materials, factory building, equipment, and guarantees of energy to run a mill. However, He Jiaqing had nothing to start with. How could his application for running a steel rolling mill be approved? With the personal influence of the leading cadres of the Chengbei District, a responsible comrade of the county CPC Committee ordered the industrial and commercial bureau to offer He a business license. Hence, He Jiaqing made use of the name of the "steel rolling mill" to swindle loans totaling over 1.8 million yuan.

It has always been our important principle to lay stress on politics while making use of personnel. However, some leading cadres have ignored and forgotten this principle. They neglected to examine the people they have chosen. As a result, they regarded the unprincipled people and even the offenders as good cadres and paid no heed to the serious problems reported by the masses involving these people. Li Changlan, a responsible person of the Yuanlongge Village post office in Daxing County, Beijing, took advantage of her post and embezzled more than 40,000 yuan from 1973 to 1981. As her practices were not exposed, she was chosen as an "advanced worker" of the county and municipal post offices and "outstanding party member" of Daxing County and was promoted to deputy director of the Daxing County post office. Some people suspected her because of her extravagant habits. But the leading cadres took no notice of this mass opinion, which actually sheltered her criminal activities. The materials of almost all major economic criminal cases and particularly swindling cases show that taking no heed of politics while making use of personnel has become a prominent question in a number of localities and departments, the economic departments in particular.

Bureaucratism is a chronic and stubborn disease. It would be impossible to eliminate bureaucratism without determination. Even with determination it would be impossible to eliminate bureaucratism for many years. Yet there are some cadres who stick to their old way of doing things and act as bureaucrats and overlords. They lack the rudimentary sense of responsibility to the party and people and have even neglected their duties. The lack of determination and ineffective measures adopted by some party and government leading organs in dealing with bureaucratism is the main reason that has encouraged such practices. The following phenomena have been common in recent years: Although some cadres have made serious mistakes, they are not sternly dealt with. Some are lightly punished or criticized. Those who have committed crimes owing to dereliction of duty do not have to bear responsibility for their crimes. Furthermore, they are punished according to party and administrative discipline rather than law. It is correct to educate and criticize those who have committed bureaucratic mistakes in general. However, those who have made grave mistakes in bureaucratism, thus causing enormous losses to the state and people, must be punished according to party discipline and state laws. Those who should be expelled from the party and removed from their posts must be dealt with accordingly, and those who have committed a crime should bear the responsibility according to law. Only in this way can we awaken the deaf, heighten the vigilance of those who have neglected their duties, and encourage the vast numbers of party members, cadres, and state functionaries to conscientiously perform their duties.

LESSONS LEARNED IN DU GUOZHEN CASE ANALYZED

[Article by Sun Qimeng: "Do Not Sum Up a Lesson Lightly as 'Neglecting Class Struggle'"]

[Text] Based on a report in FUJIAN RIBAO, the 9 January issue of RENMIN RIBAO carried a news item on the Ningde Prefectural CPC Committee and Commissioner's Office in Fujian summing up the lessons of the case of the swindler Du Guozhen, saying "they all reviewed and drew lessons from the incident in three respects." The bitter lesson in the first respect was that "attention was attached to economic work only, while neglecting class struggle."

It is correct to draw lessons from mistakes. The leadership of Ningde Prefecture holds that "it is imperative to draw a lesson actively, which should not be dealt with passively," it is necessary to persist in the principle of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world, which is also correct. However, the lesson they have drawn in the first respect is rather confusing. In the event that it might exert some bad influence, I would like to pose a question and try to analyze it.

First, in their own words, "what they had on their minds, what they saw, and what they had in their hands was money and encouraging cadres to make money; and that those who had made the most of it were the able." Thus Du Guozhen had taken advantage of this "leak," and cheated them into rendering services for Du the criminal. How could they have such erroneous ideas and commit such mistakes? It is said the cause lies in "the one-sidedness in their ideology," "as the work focus had been shifted to economic construction since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee," "they forgot that class struggle will continue to exist in certain realms over a long period, and relaxed their vigilance." Have they pinpointed the root cause of their mistake? It seems questionable or at least it was not done correctly. They seemed to have affirmed they were "attaching importance to economic work only," when the one-sidedness in their ideology was regarded as "neglecting class struggle." But, in their own words, "they were looking forward to money in everything," which has nothing in common with the economic work stressed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Likewise, it is also groundless to make "neglecting class struggle" the root cause of "looking forward to money in everything."

Therefore , they should first ask themselves if they have studied in earnest the nature, purpose, principles, and policies of economic work the party has focused on? Do they have a clear idea of them or not? If they have, they should seriously examine themselves as to whether they have such problems as "forgetting righteousness when they see their own interests near at hand, losing the party spirit of communists, running counter to the party's purpose and program" as pointed out by the office of the Commission for Guiding Party Rectification Work under the CPC Central Committee? In short, they should attach attention to, grasp, and solve whatever problems in their true nature. Failing to examine themselves seriously in these respects, and to draw lessons from them, but summing up their problems in general as "neglecting class struggle" will not accord with the facts, and will not explain the crux of the problems; therefore, it will be very difficult genuinely to fulfill the aim of learning from past mistakes to avoid future ones.

Superficially, the leading cadres of Ningde Prefecture are not for "taking class struggle as the key link," but in reality, they have not genuinely and thoroughly negated this "key link." Does class struggle still exist in our economic realm? Class struggle will continue to exist in certain realms over a long period; this is positive. Back in 1979, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "In socialist society, counterrevolutionaries, enemy spies, all kinds of criminals sabotaging socialist order, other bad elements, and new elements of the exploiting class engaged in graft, embezzlement, and speculation will continue to exist, and such phenomena will not be entirely exterminated over a long period of time. Our struggle against them cannot be the same as the struggle of one class against another in history (it is impossible for them to form into an open, complete class). However, it is still class struggle of a peculiar form, or the remainder of class struggle in history emerging in a peculiar form under socialist conditions." We must study social phenomena with such a Marxist class concept. In this way, we will not be led to being one-sided in ideological understanding on the question of class struggle during the present phase, or neglecting it or inflating it.

If the lessons are summed up in general as "neglecting class struggle," then we should like to ask "How we are to guide our actions with this lesson in the course of persisting in reform and the principle of opening up and invigorating the domestic economy?" Should we be vigilant against the "new trend of class struggle" in everything? Will we not go back to the old track of "grasp class struggle, and every problem will be solved"? If that is the case, we will be going back to the mistake of enlarging class struggle. We should by no means let it happen. It seems that we should establish a due concept of discipline, a concept of legal system, and a concept of serving the people heart and soul, and do away with any ideas and conduct of abusing power and bureaucratism on the one hand, and on the other, severely crack down on economic criminals and other criminals. By no means should we be lenient toward them. Only then, will it be possible to unfold our normal activities and do a good job in our economic work in implementing the principles of reform, opening up, and invigorating the domestic economy.

COMMENTATOR ADDRESSES PURPOSE OF WAGE REFORM

[Commentator's article: "Correctly Understand the Purpose of the Wage Reform"]

[Text] The enterprises' wage reform is gradually being carried out. What is the purpose of the wage reform? This is an important question about which the leaders of enterprises and the broad masses of workers should be clear. For a long time, there have been a lot of disadvantages in our country's system of distribution of workers wages, and all of us have deeply felt this problem. The ongoing reform of the wages of distribution system and the implementation of the principle of distribution according to work are needed for the building of the four modernizations and demanded by the broad masses of workers.

In recent years, along with the progress of the reform, many enterprises have stopped the practice of "eating from the same big pot," and have improved their method of distribution. However, this is only the initial reform. Generally speaking, many aspects of the wage relations in the factories and enterprises need to be rationalized. The main purpose of the wage reform is to further implement the principle of distribution according to work, create conditions and lay a good foundation for the rationalization of wage relations in the enterprises, and gradually rationalize the distribution between mental and manual labor, between simple and complicated labor, and between strenuous labor and general labor. Of course, it is an extremely complicated task to rationalize wage relations completely and establish a complete set of scientific and rational wage systems. This work will take a long time and cannot be completed in one wage reform. The present wage reform aimed at rationalizing wage relations is only an initial one, but this step is very important. The success of this first step will lay a good foundation for the further reform of the wage distribution system in the future.

Over the past few years, workers' wages have been increasing very fast. It is somewhat like paying an old debt which is quite necessary. However, the increase in the consumption funds and the increase in the workers wages must conform with the increase in national income and the increase in labor productivity, otherwise our country's economic development will lack follow through, and will probably become prematurely senile, which would not conform with the fundamental interests of the people of the whole country, and of the broad masses of the workers. So, the increase in wages must conform with our country's economic strength. Although the wages of most of the workers will be increased because of the wage reform, the rate of increase will not be too big, and the long-standing problems concerning wages will not be solved at once. All the workers must regard the wage reform by taking into consideration the overall situation of our country's economic reform and development, and actively show concern for, support, and participate in the wage reform so as to ensure the smooth progress of the reform. If the wage reform is successful, the people's enthusiasm will be aroused, and production will develop fast, the long-term interests of the working class will be secured, and the living standards of the workers will continue to be improved and raised. We must attach utmost importance to the reform, and pool the wisdom and efforts of all the people in carrying out the wage reform so as to successfully accomplish the task of the wage reform.

PLANT DIRECTOR'S IDEOLOGICAL WORK SKILLS LAUDED

[Commentator's article: "Make Ideological and Political Work Full of Vitality"]

[Text] Ideological and political work is the science of influencing people's minds. So this work must be rich and colorful in its forms, full of vigor and creativity. At present, we are undergoing some major historical changes, and new things and new questions keep emerging. How will we adapt this work to the requirements of the new situation and add creativity and vitality to our ideological work? Many people are considering this question and are exploring ways to solve this question. The whole party has also paid attention to this question. In recent years, many report groups composed of heroes and models have given speeches among the masses. They used their personal experiences to tell people about lofty ideals and the sense of discipline. Many leading cadres have also gone among the masses to hold candid and frank talks with people in all walks of life. These are all effective methods and have enriched the content of ideological and political work. The masses also welcome these vivid forms. Today, this newspaper reports about the experience of Zhang Mingrui, party branch secretary and director of the Dongsheng Chinese medicine plant, in handling ideological and political work, and it is sure that his story will help people greatly.

The characteristics of Zhang Mingrui's ideological work can be summarized into two points: First, making friends with people; and second, convincing people by telling the truth.

In order to make a socialist enterprise a success it is important to strengthen management, improve the economic responsibility system, strictly enforce the regulations and rules, and act according to economic laws. In our opinion, however, it is more important to attach high importance to people -- the most active factor of productive forces. The vigorous and creative socialist cause must be based on the joint efforts of the people. People are not machines. They have thoughts, feelings, desires, and worries. No computer program can make people operate mechanically. An important purpose of our ideological and political work is to guide our workers to pursue lofty ideals and to cherish higher aspirations in their work and life so as to arouse their enthusiasm for creating a bright future as masters of their fate. Zhang Mingrui treats all of his workers as his relatives. He is always thoughtful toward them and shares their concerns and worries. He often talks with the workers as if talking with relatives and friends to help them solve the questions on their minds in a pertinent way. So his ideological work always sends warmth to people's minds and shows his loving care for the people. He respects people's feelings and understands other people's positions. He never puts on airs as a leader with a superior position. The masses feel that he is accessible, amiable, and respectable. There are no mental barriers between this factory director and his workers. They can smoothly exchange their ideas and feelings. That is the foundation for achieving satisfactory results in ideological work.

If we want to do appealing ideological work, we should move people with sincere feelings and convince people by reasoning. Zhang Mingrui not only shares common feelings with the masses but also raises people's consciousness by reasoning. Yang Genwang, a young worker in his plant, was deeply moved by his remarks about being a good and useful man. Yang accepted his instructions and became a hardworking and promising young man. This reflected the effectiveness of Zhang Mingrui's arguments, which in fact are known to all people. But why are the workers in his plant so glad to accept his advice? This is because he can vividly integrate ideological education with people's daily activities. When talking about production, work, study, family, marriage, recreation, and other things, he skillfully conducts education in ideals, morals, discipline, and policies among the masses. When helping people solve questions in their minds, he also settles problems in actual work and in people's livelihood. So his ideological work is serious but not rigid, and is candid and conforms with the party's principles. People can learn a lot from his instructions and can widen their visions. So workers treat him as their elder brother who can always see farther, and they are willing to accept his instructions without reservation.

Forming close ties with the masses and convincing people through reason are the fine traditions of our party in the handling of ideological and political work. During the years of the revolutionary wars, officers and men in our army shared weal and woe and lived on intimate terms with one another. Cadres always showed concern for soldiers and helped soldiers solve problems in mind. Although the conditions were extremely hard, revolutionary ranks were brimming with warm feelings like in a big family; the people were full of revolutionary enthusiasm. This was an important factor in how our party was able to overcome all difficulties and win victories under the extremely hard conditions. However, the fine traditions were seriously undermined in a past period. In the years when "political work could overwhelm all other work," a report might cause a political incident; an article might stir up a political storm; and a slogan might make some people forfeit their lives...political work in those years was full of the smell of gunpowder and lacked human feelings. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," the methods and ways of political and ideological work have been changed, and it can no longer be used as a means of insulting people. The method of harsh criticism has also been discarded.

However, we need to make further efforts in order to restore the fine traditions. Now, some people's political instructions are still empty and hard to understand. It is hard for the masses to accept their indoctrination when it is not convincing or effective. The reason for Zhang Mingrui's successes lies in the fact that he proceeds from today's realities, carries forward the party's fine traditions, works meticulously, builds close friendships with his workers, and develops a united and harmonious atmosphere in his plant. All this is necessary to make a socialist enterprise a success and to modernize our country.

From the example of Zhang Mingrui, we see a fresh and vigorous trend in our ideological and political work and see the respectable and amiable image of our political cadres. Of course, Zhang Mingrui's plant is a small one with merely 100 workers; it is hard to require the leaders of big enterprises to imitate his practice. However, his work methods and work attitude can be taken as a good example for all people. Leaders in all departments and units and comrades in charge of party affairs and political work should, like Zhang Mingrui, show concern and loving care for people, respect other people's feelings, sincerely help others, accurately determine what people are thinking so as to effectively do ideological work and to make their ideological instructions acceptable and convincing. Then, our party style and our socialist conduct will be more rapidly and obviously improved.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON CONTROVERSIAL NOVEL

[Article by Yi Ping: "How To Evaluate the Novel 'The Other Half of Man Is Woman'"]

[Text] "The Other Half of Man Is Woman" is Zhang Xianliang's work following his previous novel "The Tree in the Desert," both belonging to a series of novels Zhang plans to write. After this novel was published in the fifth issue of SHOUHUO magazine in 1985, it evoked strong repercussions among readers and critics. WENYI BAO, WENHU BAO, BEIJING RIBAO, and QINGNIAN PINGLUNJIA have successively published comments and critical articles on this novel. Some institutions also held forums to discuss the novel.

As for the novel's ideological content and social significance, some people say that it "seriously, bravely, and deeply exposes the cruel suppression of normal human nature by feudal autocracy and asceticism through a shocking story," and it "not only profoundly recalls and condemns that inhuman period, but also sincerely and ardently taps the elements that can recover human nature." But some people warn that the writer should "use refinement to replace vulgarity and use profoundness to replace superficiality." They hold that this book will have an unhealthy social influence. "This novel deepens rather than relaxes our worries about the crisis in our serious literature."

As for the description of sexual relations in the novel, some people say that the novel includes too much explicit description in this regard, which dilutes social relations. Others hold that the novel "exposes, condemns, and analyzes the special atmosphere in that period that caused the distortion of people's sexual psychology, which is a basic element of human nature. The thriving vitality, the burning sexual passion, and people's piquant and frank character under unpropitious circumstances are all the elements of healthy human nature, and these human feelings present a protest against the dark years." They affirm that the novel "positively describes people's self-struggle and their body-and-soul struggle to a profound extent unprecedented in China's modern literature.

Some articles affirm the vivid and colorful artistic feelings of the author, but at the same time they also point out that some surrealistic rational "sublimation" in the novel is harmful to the authenticity of art. This shortcoming is expressed in the contradictory character of the hero, Zhang Yonglin: "His sober and rational mind finds it hard to exist in harmony with his burning sexual passion." "There is no necessary media to link the two extremes of man's natural sexual passion and his serious political and economic ideas." So the story appears a bit farfetched. Some people say that Zhang Yonglin "is merely a hypocrite created by a hypocritical period." Some commenting articles said that it is regrettable to see that the author's vivid and rich feelings were limited and narrowed by "rigid and excessively clear reasoning," and the authenticity of art was spoiled by this.

Some articles expressed regret about the last part of the novel, saying that the author could not accurately describe the mentality of the hero. At the end of the story, Zhang Yonglin tried to free himself from married life under the control of a woman. "This seems to be too unreasonable."

Zhang Xianliang, the author of the novel, openly said during his recent visit to the United States that the criticisms of his works "are normal, and such literary criticism should exist in any country where literature is thriving. Authors should welcome such criticism."

CHALLENGES FACING MARXIST PHILOSOPHY DETAILED

HK230853 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Tao Delin: "Marxist Philosophy and Reform" -- excerpted from inaugural issue of Guangdong's XIANDAI ZHEXUE [MODERN PHILOSOPHY]]

[Text] How should Marxist philosophy serve reform? This is a question in which many people are interested. I think that in order to better serve reform, our philosophy theoretical work should first be reformed.

Now people are talking about the fact that Marxist philosophy has encountered some serious challenges or some difficulties. I think that this mainly refers to two aspects. On the one hand, modern science and modern life have raised a series of questions that did not exist in the past, and Marxist philosophical theory has not given convincing answers to these questions. On the other hand, some non-Marxist schools of philosophy have used viewpoints contradictory to Marxist philosophy to answer these questions or have directly attacked Marxist philosophy by name, but Marxist philosophy has not been able to stage successful refutations of these non-Marxist philosophical viewpoints. I do not quite agree with regarding the first state of affairs as a "challenge," because Marxist philosophy itself is closely related to science and people's actual life and neither side will "challenge" the other side. The fact is that science and actual life constantly raise new questions for Marxist philosophy.

As far as the second state of affairs is concerned, it can be regarded as a kind of challenge. Things in both aspects always exist, but we simply turned a blind eye to these facts in the past. Are these things good or bad for us? In my opinion, they are certainly good things. A science will certainly meet new questions and difficulties in the course of its development. Is it not a fact that mathematics, physics, and biology have also encountered difficulties in the course of development? Is it not precisely these difficulties (or "crises") that have promoted their advances? Without dealing with difficulties continuously, the life of a science will come to an end. Religions do not encounter any difficulty, because they never try to deal with any questions which are difficult for them. Because of the limitations of application, some scientific theories will not meet any new questions they cannot solve.

For example, no one expects Newton's mechanics to explain the phenomena that fall into the category of the unified field theory, nor will people attack Newton's mechanical theory for its failure to explain the questions of the unified field theory. Now people require Marxist philosophy to explain new questions, and some people criticize it for its failure to successfully answer these questions. This simply shows that Marxist philosophy has close ties to practice and is a developing science full of vitality. The moment it encounters a difficulty is in fact the eve of its major development. Why do we not regard this as a good thing? It is not terrible whatever "challenges" and "difficulties" Marxist theory may encounter. The terrible thing is that we do not acknowledge the existence of facts and do not take action to meet the "challenges" and to overcome difficulties so as to develop Marxist philosophy. Do we have problems in this regard? I think so. We are not satisfied with our own work, and we feel anxious when it is necessary to reform our philosphical theoretical work in order to adapt our theory to the needs of the overall social reforms. We should review and examine our work in connection with our modernization drive, with changes in the world, and with future development so as to acquire a correct evaluation of the situation and to improve our work.

ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE REFLECTS ON HU FENG'S DEATH

[Report by ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE reporter Lin Hua: "After the Death of Hu Feng"]

[Text] Winter sun shines into the room which was Hu Feng's study when he was alive. In the room, the leaves of the potted plants are freshly green and full of vigor. On the wall hangs a portrait of the old man who led half of his life in frustration. On a table there is a black cinerary urn, on which are inscribed in small characters "Though I had to die nine times, yet I should have no regret, since I am doing what I think is good!" and "Hu Feng (Zhang Guangren) 2 October 1902 - 8 June 1985."

Postponed Memorial Meeting

Half a year ago when Hu Feng died of illness, that study was filled with an atmosphere of grief. A young reporter and I came to gather news and talked sadly with Hu Feng's two sons and his daughter, to find out and report something about Hu Feng's life. For some time, and for various reasons, the memorial meeting for Hu Feng was postponed. People showed concern about this and Hu Feng's relatives felt even more uneasy.

Not long ago, Hu Feng's daughter Zhang Xiaolan called by phone to tell me that her father's memorial meeting would be held in mid January this year and the memorial speech had already been written. When I visited the family again, I saw that their previous grim mood had been swept away and they were much more relaxed when talking with me.

A Definite Conclusion at Last

Zhang Xiaogu, Hu Feng's eldest son and a teacher at the Nanjing Aeronautical Institute, happened to be in Beijing on business and was thus able to attend his father's memorial service. He said that although the memorial meeting was postponed, there was, after all, a correct and definite conclusion after his father's death. With the attitude of seeking truth from facts, the CPC Central Committee confirmed Hu Feng's contribution to revolutionary literature and art and his constant and firm faith in the party, the people and socialism. This would console his dead father's soul.

I inquired about the work of sorting out and publishing Hu Feng's literary works. Zhang Xiaogu told me that the "Collection of Hu Feng's Commentaries" had already been reprinted (in three volumes) at home and that soon the "Collection of Hu Feng's Essays," five collections of Hu Feng's poems and a collection of his translations will be reprinted. They hope that in the future Hu Feng's collected works will be published.

Grandson Zhang Ben

As we were talking, a baby toddled out of a bedroom and Hu Feng's youngest son Zhang Xiaoshan took it into his arms. Xiaoshan is 38 this year, and the baby is his only son. His elder brother Zhang Xiaogu is 51 this year and has two sons, of which the eldest is only 10 years old. All Hu Feng's five grandchildren are grandsons.

"Don't you know that even a tiger often looks back at its baby tiger when it roars fiercely." Hu Feng's youngest grandson was born a few months before he died. He Feng was happy to see his "baby tiger," and named him Zhang Ben. He said that there were few strokes in the character of his name so it was easy to write, and the name had good implications. Today, the baby's grandfather has already left this world for over 200 days, and the baby Zhang Ben, is already 15 months old. His fresh young face is so lovely that it adds warmth and pleasure to that peaceful family.

A Grandson Follows Hu Feng's Instructions and Majors in Engineering in College

"Do not major in arts, do not major in arts." In his lifetime, Hu Feng enjoined his grandson who was soon to take his entrance examination, not to major in arts. Zhang Xiaofeng said that last fall her eldest son entered college to major in engineering related to printing machinery. None of Hu Feng's descendants has ever majored in the arts. His eldest son Xiaogu majored in engineering in Nanjing in the early 1950's. His youngest son Xiaoshan previously settled in Nei Monggol as a peasant and entered the Chinese People's University 5 years ago to major in agricultural economy. Now, he is working in this field at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. His daughter did manual labor for a long time in a farm in the suburbs of Beijing. She took the college entrance examination to major in science or engineering 20 years ago but was not recruited. After Hu Feng was rehabilitated and returned to Beijing to take the post as a member of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee, she was transferred to the post of secretary to her father at the Art Research Institute of the Ministry of Culture. She said that after Hu Feng's death, the task of sorting his work fell to her.

Meizhi, Hu Feng's Wife, Is Grateful

Hu Feng's widow Meizhi, 72, was weak and slim but looked elegant. In the 1930's, she joined the Federation of Leftwing Writers together with Xiao Hong and Xiao Jun. In the 1950's when Hu Feng was wrongly punished, she was also put into prison for many years and suffered much hardship. The old women has retired and now plays with her grandsons, spending her older years in peace. But she is a writer after all, and she still persists in writing something every day. A collection of poems she wrote for children 30 years ago has already been published by the Hunan Children's Publishing House. After Hu Feng's death, she has spent relatively more time in writing her memoirs to fulfill a task that Hu Feng left unfinished. When the elderly Meizhi showed me out of the living room, she said with emotion that for all his life Hu Feng pursued brightness and loved his motherland and had felt no regret in doing so even though he would have been put to death nine times for that. That spirit of his was confirmed in the memorial speech and the conclusion is just. She felt boundlessly grateful for this.

YANG SHANGKUN ON WRITING MARTYRS' BIOGRAPHIES

[Article by Yang Shangkun: "Writing Biographies for Revolutionary Martyrs -- Speech at the Third Meeting of Editorial Work on Biographies of Revolutionary Martyrs Held on 11 December 1984" -- originally carried by ZHONGHUA YINGLIE [CHINESE HEROES AND MARTYRS] magazine, published 5 January]

[Text] The first volume of "Biographies of Revolutionary Martyrs" will be published very soon. I wish to extend my warm congratulations.

How many martyrs were there during the Chinese revolution? I am afraid there were tens of millions. It is not an easy job to write a biography for each one of these tens of millions of martyrs. It is better to choose from among them one thousand or more whose deeds were representative of the exploits of the martyrs. Although we do not write biographies for all martyrs, it is of great significance to gather information about the deeds of the martyrs for whom we will not write biographies, because in so doing, we can find supporting evidence for the deeds of the martyrs whose biographies we will write. We may also find still more representative figures. Without the activities of these people, there would not be history. Writing biographies of revolutionary martyrs is a matter of great significance. Comrade Li Weihan talked about this question before he died. He was very enthusiastic in this matter. It is a pity that he has left us.

In writing biographies of the revolutionary martyrs, we must apply the historical-materialist viewpoint, neither exaggerating their role nor denying their contributions. We should record their merits and demerits as they were. Everyone has his shortcomings, and no one is perfect. The biographies of the martyrs must be accurate and correct so that these martyrs will be justly appraised. Comrade Chen Yun has given instructions on how the events in northeast China should be recorded.

With regard to Lin Biao, we should say that he played a positive role in the war of liberation in northeast China. As a matter of fact, he fought many battles and was a fighting general in the campaign against "encirclement and suppression" during the civil war. During the criticism against the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, he was described as knowing nothing about war. This was not true. How could he serve as commander of an army group for many years if he knew nothing about war? He did commit a big mistake later. His right and wrong should be recorded as they were. It is incorrect to write him out of history as if there never was such a person simply because he did bad things during his last years. Chairman Mao made a similar appraisal of Chen Duxiu, saying that Chen did meritorious service in founding the party but later was really very bad and turned against the party. Zhang Guotao also made contributions during the early period of the workers' movement but became a renegade later. Such persons are numerous. Some made contributions toward the party but later turned bad. Some were no good during the early period but became good later. That is why the comrades doing biographical work must apply the historical-materialist viewpoint in writing biographies. Comrade Li Weihan said that accounts must be "accurate." Those who made positive contributions toward the Chinese revolution but turned bad later must especially be justly appraised, otherwise history will be distorted. It is hoped that the comrades will pay particular attention to this point.

I have not read many biographies, and I have read only a few memoirs because I have been busily engaged. Some memoirs have exaggerated some persons and me, and many accounts do not tally with facts. This is pardonable because one is always subject to limitations and if one does not put oneself in a correct position in making observations, one can hardly avoid making mistakes.

Comrade Li Weihan set an excellent example in this respect. In his several memoirs, he cited historical data and gave accounts of how the events had taken place. He also summed up experience and made self-criticism. These memoirs were well written. Nie Rongzhen's memoirs have been published in three volumes, justly appraising many historical events. "Peng Dehuai's Accounts in His Own Words" was written while he was being persecuted and in the hospital, where no reference material was at hand, so some of his accounts are inaccurate. I once discussed this book with a few comrades. We agreed that because this book was written under special circumstances, his examination of his mistakes was made under duress.

A biography must be accurate and correct. At present the biographies written by some people are not very accurate or correct. I once mentioned to the committee for collecting historical data of the party in the Army that collecting data is one thing and publishing it is another. A biography should be written after repeated deliberations. Generally speaking, the data which has been collected should not be published, or should be published only selectively, because a biographer's view is limited, after all. In particular, a responsible comrade or a comrade who has a relatively high position in the party may have written an account of soemthing which he remembers incorrectly. Once his account is published, other comrades will take it as true history. Actually, his account is not true and his view is limited. In the final analysis, biographies must be written with great care. First, representatives must be selected and repeatedly screened. Second, the biographies must be very accurate, neither denying or exaggerating one's contributions nor hiding one's errors. As far as a comrade who is influential in the party is concerned, his biography is a conclusion. Final judgment can be passed on a person when the lid is laid on his coffin. Such a judgment should be made cautiously and discussed by the group responsible for compiling party history. The biographies of the greatly influential figures written by someone or by a few people should not be taken as final conclusions.

Conclusions for questions concerning the whole situation, major historical events, and prominent people must be examined and approved by the central authorities. No one is permitted to draw conclusions as he wishes. I do not agree with the method of writing and publishing a biography as soon as some biographical data has been collected. In particular, the responsibility of the comrades in charge of the collection of historical data of the party is to collect data and write accounts for future reference. It is up to the higher authorities to decide whether such accounts should be published, but these comrades are not permitted to publish the accounts as they wish. I was told that some comrades of the group responsible for the biography of a certain leading comrade did a great deal of work to gather some material, wrote an article on it, and released the article through another publication for their own good. This is no good I believe that you, as biographers, will not do such a thing. Why publish articles in a hurry? Moreover, such accounts may not be accurate. Some things are very simple. Take the Zunyi Meeting for example. When was it held? The exact date has yet to be checked. The resolution adopted by the Zunyi Meeting was dated 8 January. This was incorrect, because the meeting had not yet opened on that day. Many things have yet to be checked. We should not draw a conclusion the moment we see a bit of the data. Even if the data is carried in some official documents, the accuracy of some of the data has yet to be verified. It is possible that some dates had been listed incorrectly during the revolutionary war. In short, comrades are asked to be very cautious. In the future when people talk about party history, they will make references to the activities of various people and base their views on the biographies. Wrong biographies will adversely affect party history.

It is my hope that you will continue working hard to complete the biographies of revolutionary martyrs of the four great periods (see footnote) as quickly as possible. Comrades, may you enjoy good health and work hard.

Footnote: Biographies of revolutionary martyrs of the four great periods refer to the "Biographies of Revolutionary Martyrs" presently edited by the Revolutionary Martyrs' Biographies Editing Committee of the Party History Research Center of the CPC Central Committee. Biographies of revolutionary martyrs are scheduled to be published in many volumes covering the period of party founding, the period of the first revolutionary civil war, the period of the second revolutionary civil war, the period of the anti-Japanese war, and the period of the war of liberation. The first volume of "Biographies of Revolutionary Martyrs" was published by the People's Publishing House in November 1985 and distributed by the Xinhua Bookstores throughout the country.

MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON AERONAUTIC DEVELOPMENT

[Text] In an interview today with a reporter of this station, Mo Wenxiang, minister of aeronautics, said: The development objective of the Ministry of Aeronautics during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is to ensure the production of goods for military use, to transfer military technology to civilian use, and to increase output of products for export. The ministry will strive to have the output value of aircraft and other products for civilian use account for 80 percent of its total output value in 1990, doubling the present percentage.

Mo Wenxiang said: The current situation in the development of civil aircraft is very good. The Ministry of Aeronautics has decided that in developing civil aircraft during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, emphasis will be on the development of passenger planes for feeder lines and planes for special agricultural and forestry purposes. New types of aircraft will be developed through the introduction of advanced foreign technology and international cooperation; and efforts will be made to deliver more than 200 planes of various kinds to users in 5 years.

On products for civilian use, Mo Wenxiang said: Various enterprises should switch from turning out products for civilian use as an expedient measure in the past to conscientiously doing so in order to serve economic construction by producing more exports and earning more foreign exchange.

PLA IMPROVES FACILITIES FOR BORDER TROOPS

HK250722 Hong Kong LIAOWANG Overseas Edition in Chinese No 3, 20 Jan 86, pp 12-14

[Article by Wu Kelu: "The Might of the Nation as Observed From the National Gates -- A Chronicle of China's Border and Coastal Defense Construction"]

[Excerpts] Over the past 30 years and more, China has gradually built up its border and coastal defenses. For a variety of reasons, however, the troops which garrison frontier and coastal forts could only live in simple and crude barracks built with stones and wood. In some new border guard stations and coast guard stations, soldiers could only live in thatched sheds, caves, tents, or crude huts built with asphalt felt. This situation lasted for a long time in the past. Moreover, many garrison outposts are located in remote places which are sparsely populated. The natural conditions in those places are generally very bad. There are many problems in water and electricity supply and transport facilities. Over a long time, the task of garrisoning the frontiers was arduous, and our frontier and coast guards have endured great hardships.

Military Expenditure Should Be Used in the Most Needed Places

In 1980, General Hong Xuezhi was reappointed director of the PLA General Logistics Department. During the Korean war, this general made important contributions to the victory by ensuring logistical support for our troops; but during the "Cultural Revolution," he was forced to leave the leading post of the General Logistics Department when falsely charged of being a member of an "antiparty clique." After he reassumed office, the first thing he had to handle was to read piles of papers requiring money for various undertakings. However, the national economy was undergoing a readjustment, and military expenditures had been cut down by some 2 billion yuan.

Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Military Commission, said at a meeting of senior Army cadres: The first thing I did after becoming chairman of the Central Military Commission was to reduce military expenditures. The Army should subject itself to the overall interests of national construction. Can we increase our military expenditure any more? It is impossible. That will certainly affect our economic construction. So, our comrades in the Army should consider how to most economically and reasonably use the money appropriated to the Army in order to really enhance the Army's combat capability.

On the one hand, many undertakings in the Army required money; on the other hand, military expenditures were cut down. That was the difficult problem that the General Logistics Department, which holds the financial power of the Army, had to deal with at that time. The personnel of the General Logistics Department like to quote a famous remark of their chief Hong Xuezhi: "One cannot be considered capable if one succeeds in handling things with sufficient money; only by handling things successfully with insufficient money can one be regarded as capable." The party committee of the General Logistics Department decided to carry out general investigations in the 10 major sectors of the Army's logistics work, including the border and coastal defense facilities, the Army units' finances, hospitals, vehicles, and vessels, the supply of fuel, and warehouses. Then, some major policies would be made on the basis of these investigations. First priority in the investigations was given to the border and coastal defense facilities. Under the direction of five leaders of the General Logistics Department, 10 joint investigation groups were formed and sent to investigate the conditions in all frontier and coast guard stations. The groups were composed of 250 cadres from the logistics departments of all military regions, the Navy, and the Air Forces.

Going to the Remotest Corners of the Country

It was the first time in our Army's history that such a large-scale overall investigation was made. The General Logistics Department required that the investigation groups "visit every sentry post, guard station, and island forts." The investigators overcame all kinds of difficulties, including attacks by snowstorms, lack of oxygen at high altitudes, and the lack of the means of transport. They went to all borders and coasts of the country and paid visits to all guard stations.

Through painstaking efforts in 8 months and after covering a total distance of 200,000 kilometers, they eventually completed the arduous investigations and gathered first-hand information for the making of major policies for the construction of border and coastal defenses. Through overall and careful consideration, the General Logistics Department efficiently worked out a feasible plan for carrying out necessary construction projects for border and island garrison forces.

The plan was approved by Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPC Central Military Commission, and Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council. Then, the largest-scale construction program for border and coastal defenses since the founding of the PRC was officially started.

Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the CPC Central Military Commission, particularly instructed that "the money allocated for this construction program must be earmarked for this special purpose and must be managed by special personnel. The quality of the construction projects must be guaranteed, and the completed projects must be subject to examination before they are accepted by the Army."

Dedication to the Construction of Border Defenses

In the 3 years between 1983 and 1985, the PLA General Logistics Department did not ask for extra appropriations from the state for the construction projects for improving border and coastal defenses; instead, it raised the funds by itself and took nearly 800 million yuan from military appropriations to start more than 20,000 construction projects. Apart from leaders of the General Logistics Department, senior commanders of the Army units stationed in various border provinces and regions also took an active part in these defense construction projects having a bearing on our country's safety and security. Some of them even sacrificed their lives in carrying out these projects.

The PLA troops responsible for the construction tasks, under the leadership of their commanders, worked with high enthusiasm for improving our border defenses. They completed 70 percent of the civil engineering works by themselves and saved more than 70 million yuan in expenses. In the course of carrying out these construction tasks, they overcame various difficulties and worked under extremely hard conditions. They successfully fulfilled the tasks in 3 years of efforts.

Offer the Most Advanced Equipment and Technologies to the Army Units Which Garrison the Frontier and Coasts

Director Hong Xuezhi instructed that we must provide the Army units guarding the borders and coasts with the best equipment and technologies. So much new equipment and technologies that had not been generally introduced to the whole Army were first used in the construction of border and coast defenses. These things included solar energy generating systems, wind-driven generators, plastic sheds, glasshouses, and construction of houses on permafrost layers. At present, the Army units garrisoning the borders and coasts have all moved into solid, spacious, and bright new barracks. They also have conference rooms, entertainment rooms, storage rooms, canteens, and arms depots.

The borders and coasts are the doors of our motherland. The new appearance of the national doors shows the changes which have occurred in the whole country and reflects the increasing national strength. In the past, the border defenses of some of the 12 neighboring countries were built better than ours. Now, when coming across the border to meet our border defense personnel, border defense officers of some neighboring countries feel surprised at and envious of the improvements in our border defense facilities. An officer of the border guards of a neighboring country was surprised to see the fresh vegetables grown by our soldiers in the Gobi Desert. Another officer said: "Your soldiers' barracks are better than the houses of our officers." In the past, when seeing the shabby huts of our border guards, a soldier of a neighboring country used to stretch his little finger; now, when seeing the new barracks of the Chinese border guards, he held up his thumb to express his envy. The new construction works have boosted the prestige of our Army and our country. Our soldiers are also proud of the motherland's strength.

10. Carry out international banking activities approved by the State Council or the People's Bank of China.

Article 15: When a specialized bank sets up a branch, it shall meet the following requirements:

1. There exists such a need in order to develop the economy, and there is an amount of business commensurate with the scale of the branch to be set up.

2. The establishment of the branch is in conformity with the scope of division of labor.

3. There are qualified personnel to manage the banking work.

4. The establishment of the branch agrees with the principles of economic accounting

The main office of specialized bank shall exercise vertical leadership [chu zhi ling dao 0987 4160 7325 1418] over its branches.

Article 16: The following matters of the main office of the specialized bank shall be reported to the main office of the People's Bank of China for examination and approval:

1. Matters involving work principles and policies stated in the first part of Item 1 of Article 5 of these regulations.

2. Matters beyond the prescribed scope of division of labor.

3. Regulations and rules which are outside the scope of the current fundamental banking rules or involve other specialized banks and which need to be formulated under a unified plan.

4. Formulation and revision of rules of organization.

5. Establishment of branches outside the area.

Matters listed above, if beyond the scope of the central bank's functions and powers stipulated by these regulations, shall all be reported by the main office of the People's Bank of China to the State Council for examination and approval.

Article 17: The following matters of a branch of the specialized bank shall be reported to a branch at the provincial level of the People's Bank of China for examination and approval:

1. Major work regulations formulated in light of the specific conditions of the respective areas.

2. Major changes in the use of credit funds.

3. Regulations and rules that involve other specialized banks in the respective area and need to be formulated under a unified plan.

Article 18: Specialized banks shall send their reports on implementation of credit plans, statistical reports, accounting reports, and work reports to the People's Bank of China in accordance with the regulations.

Article 19: Establishment of specialized banks shall be reported to the authorities concerned for approval in accordance with the following provisions:

1. Establishment of the main office shall be examined by the main office of the People's Bank of China and reported to the State Council for approval.

2. For establishment of a branch at the provincial level, application shall be filed by the main office of the specialized bank to the main office of the People's Bank of China for approval.

3. For establishment of a central branch at the prefectural or city level or a branch at the county level, an application shall be filed by the provincial-level branch of the specialized bank to the provincial-level branch of the People's Bank of China for approval.

4. For establishment of a business unit under the county-level branch, an application shall be filed by the prefectural- or city-level central branch of the specialized bank to the prefectural- or city-level branch of the People's Bank of China for approval.

Article 20: Main offices of specialized banks, as well as the branch offices established with approval, should be issued "Licenses for Operating Banking Business" by the main and branch offices respectively of the People's Bank of China. In accordance with the provisions in the "Regulations for the Registration and Management of Industrial and Commercial Enterprises," they will begin business operations only after they have gone through the registration procedures and acquired business licenses.

Article 21: When it becomes necessary to close down a branch office of a specialized bank which has been established with approval, application should be filed with the original approving units 2 months before the close of its operations. After approval has been given, the branch office should straighten out matters related to its assets and liabilities under the supervision of the original approving units. After this has been done, the "License for Operating Banking Business" and the business license should be turned in and nullified.

Chapter IV: Other Kinds of Banking

Article 22: Other kinds of banking institutions referred to in this chapter include trust and investment companies, rural credit cooperatives, urban credit cooperatives, as well as other banking institutions set up with the approval of the People's Bank of China. Provisions in this regulation that concern specialized banks, with the exception of those contained in other state regulations or those specifically mentioned in this chapter, apply to other banking institutions.

Article 23: In establishing other kinds of banking institutions, in addition to the requirements stipulated in Article 15 of this regulation, there must be a minimum fund required by the People's Bank of China, as well as the articles of association.

Article 24: If truly justified, trust and investment companies may be set up in large and medium-sized cities to handle and look after capital and property on commission, conduct loan business, provide economic consulting service, issue negotiable securities, make investments, and so on. Trust and investment companies will carry out their business activities according to the plan approved by the People's Bank of China.

Article 25: When applying for the establishment of a trust and investment company, the following rules should be followed to obtain approval:

1. Trust and investment companies at the national level will be examined and verified by the main office of the People's Bank of China and submitted to the State Council for approval.

2. Trust and investment companies at the provincial level will be examined and verified by the provincial branch office of the People's Bank of China for approval.

3. Trust and investment companies at the prefectural and city levels will be examined and verified by the prefectural and city branch offices of the People's Bank of China and submitted to the provincial branch office of the People's Bank of China for approval.

Article 26: Trust and investment companies set up by specialized banks in large and medium-sized cities should be independent legal entities, carry out independent accounting, and receive guidance from the People's Bank of China in vocational matters. Specialized banks with no independent trust and investment companies but engaged in credit and trust business, should incorporate all sources and uses of their capital into their credit and loan plans. The revenues are subject to unified accounting by the specialized bank.

Article 27: Credit cooperatives may be set up in rural areas, and large and medium-sized cities. Credit cooperatives are cooperative banking organizations of a mass nature and exercise democratic management. Rural credit cooperatives deal with rural deposits, loans, final accounts, and personal savings. Urban credit cooperatives deal with deposits, loans, and final accounts of collective organizations in urban neighborhoods, as well as industrial and commercial establishments run by individuals. They also handle personal savings deposits and other businesses on commission. The methods for managing, examining, and aproving credit cooperatives will be formulated separately by the People's Bank of China.

Article 28: Local people's governments at all levels are not allowed to establish local banks. Individuals are not allowed to set up banks, banking institutions, or operate banking businesses.

Chapter V: Issuance and Control of Currency

Article 29: Centralized and unified control shall be exercised over the issuance of currency. Based on the needs of national economic development, the main office of the People's Bank of China shall submit a currency-issuance plan to the State Council for approval and then make arrangements for its implementation.

Article 30: Financial departments shall not overdraw from the People's Bank of China. The People's Bank of China shall not make direct purchases of government bonds.

Article 31: When handling and transferring funds for issuance of renminbi, the currency-issuing treasuries [fa xing ku 4099 5887 1655] at various levels in the People's Bank of China shall act in accordance with the instructions of such treasuries at the higher level. No units or individuals shall be allowed to violate the regulations to use funds of currency-issuing treasuries.

Article 32: When specialized banks withdraw cash from the People's Bank of China, the amounts withdrawn shall not exceed the balance of their deposits remaining in the relevant branches of the People's Bank of China, and no overdraft shall be allowed. When specialized banks deposit cash into the People's Bank of China, they should follow the latter's cash-handling procedures.

Article 33: Specialized banks shall conduct investigations and study of the circulation of currency and submit periodic reports to the People's Bank of China accordingly.

Article 34: Broken and damaged renminbi notes and coins shall be exchanged for good ones by the specialized banks, according to the regulations of the People's Bank of China, which shall be responsible for recovering the broken and damaged notes and coins for destruction.

Chapter VI: Management of Credit Funds

Article 35: Receipts and disbursements of credit funds by specialized banks shall be included in the state credit program according to the regulations. The state credit program shall be worked out by the main office of the People's Bank of China, and disseminated by the same office to lower levels for execution after approval by the State Council.

Article 36: Deposits in the State Treasury are sources of credit funds for the People's Bank of China. Banks handling the credit business shall not use or transfer such deposits. Procedures for organizations, groups, and PLA units to deposit money connected with their financial management shall be formulated by the People's Bank of China.

Article 37: Specialized banks shall put into the relevant branch of the People's Bank of China a deposit reserve for each deposit acquired. The ratio of the reserve to the deposit shall be decided by the People's Bank of China and shall be subject to adjustment according to the need to ease or tighten the money supply on the market.

Article 38: Branches of the People's Bank of China extend loans to specialized banks on the basis of the credit policy and program and in accordance with a plan approved by the higher-level bank.

Article 39: Specialized banks may borrow money from each other.

Article 40: Specialized banks shall set up reserves for bad debts. The amount of such reserves shall be decided by the main office of the People's Bank of China through consultations with the Ministry of Finance.

Article 41: Foreign exchange credit funds of specialized banks shall be handled in accordance with the provisions of the state foreign exchange control regulations.

Chapter VII: Management of Interest Rates

Article 42: The maximum interest rates for various types of deposit and the minimum interest rates for various kinds of loans shall be set by the main office of the People's Bank of China. After they have been reported to, and approved by, the State Council, the main office of the People's Bank of China shall set differential interest rates pursuant to the state economic policy and make adjustments according to the change in the situation. The main offices of specialized banks shall have a certain authority to float interest rates. The range for floating interest rates shall be decided by the main office of the People's Bank of China. Credit cooperatives may float their interest rates on deposits and loans, based on the rules stipulated and the authority given by the People's Bank of China.

Article 43: In the case of loans for developing priority trades and products in the state development plan, and for projects with good social, but less conspicuous, benefits to the enterprises concerned, an interest subsidy may be given in addition to the preferential treatment granted by the bank. The interest subsidy shall be given by the locality and department approving the subsidy.

Article 44: The interest rates on deposits and loans between the People's Bank of China and specialized banks shall be decided by the main office of the People's Bank of China and subject to adjustment according to the need to ease or tighten the money supply on the market.

Article 45: The interest rate applied to money borrowed by one specialized bank from another shall be decided through negotiations between the debtor and creditor.

Chapter VIII: Management of Deposits, Loans, and Settlement of Accounts

Article 46: The state protects the legal rights and interests of depositors. Depositors can use their deposits independently; no one else can use them.

Article 47: The state protects individual savings deposits and implements the voluntary principle in making those deposits, freedom to draw money from deposits or interest yielded, and ensured privacy for depositors.

Article 48: In extending loans, specialized banks shall strictly comply with the procedure for examination and approval and with the responsibility system. They shall extend loans in accordance with the loan policy and related regulations to ensure the security and effective use of loans. Specialized banks have the authority to examine and supervise the use of loans and to know how the borrowing enterprise is carrying out its plan, as well as the conditions of its operations and management, financial activities, and warehouse inventory.

Article 49: Specialized banks enjoy decision-making power in extending loans. No units and individuals shall be allowed to force the extension or to obstruct the recovery of loans. Without the approval of the State Council, no units have the authority to grant exemption from repayment of a loan.

Article 50: Specialized banks shall maintain sufficient paying capabilities to ensure the timely repayment of various debts.

Article 51: When specialized banks cash drafts or post-dated promissory notes at a discount rate, the drafts or notes shall be limited to those issued in connection with legitimate business activities.

Article 52: When specialized banks transfer money from one account to another in order to help settle payment, it is imperative to safeguard the just rights and interests of both the payer and the payee. Rules and regulations governing such settlement shall be worked out by the People's Bank of China.

Chapter IX: Treatment of violations

Article 53: Branches of sp ialized banks or other banking organizations established without proper authorizatio and in violation of the provisions of these regulations shall be ordered to stop operations by the People's Bank of China, their illegal receipts confiscated according to law, and persons directly responsible shall be subject to investigation to determine their administrative liability.

Article 54: In the case of violation of the provisions of these regulations to use the funds of a currency-issuing treasury without proper authorization, it is imperative to recall the money and investigate the person directly responsible for the case to determine his administrative liability.

Article 55: Banking personnel taking advantage of their jobs to seek private gain through extension of loans shall be subject to investigation to determine their administrative liability, and their illegal gains confiscated.

Article 56: Concerning losses suffered in connection with loans, due to dereliction of duty on the part of banking personnel, those directly responsible for the losses shall be subject to investigation to determine their administrative liability.

Article 57: In the case of a branch of a specialized bank or any other banking organization forced to extend a loan, resulting in loss, the person directly responsible for this shall be subject to investigation to determine his administrative and economic liability.

Article 58: Directly responsible personnel referred to in Articles 54 through 57 of this chapter, if their acts constitute criminal offenses, shall be prosecuted by the judicial organ according to law for their criminal liability.

Article 59: In the case of a specialized bank or any other banking organization violating the provisions of these regulations to use or transfer the deposit made by units in connection with their financial management, or failing to put into the People's Bank of China the necessary reserve deposit within the required time limit and in accordance with the prescribed ratio, the People's Bank of China shall deduct the same amount from this specialized bank's deposit, and impose penalty interest at the same rate as that of the loan interest. At the same time, the personnel handling this work and the principal responsible persons shall be subject to investigation to determine their liability.

Chapter X: Supplementary Provisions

Article 60: These regulations are not applicable to banking organizations established in our country as joint ventures with Chinese and foreign investment, or as entitles solely owned by foreign interests.

Article 61: For the management of branches of specialized banks and other banking organizations in special economic zones, supplementary regulations shall be enacted by the People's Bank of China on the basis of these regulations.

Article 62: The main office of the People's Bank of China shall be responsible for interpretation of these regulations. Detailed rules for implementation of various parts of these regulations shall be formulated by the main office of the People's Bank of China.

Article 63: These regulations shall take effect on the date of the promulgation.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Regulatory Functions of Banks Must Be Legally Guaranteed"]

[Text] A pressing task confronting the current reform of the economic structure is the establishment of a financial regulatory system suited to our national conditions, organically combining macrocontrol and microflexibility in the financial field. The promulgation and implementation of the "Provisional Regulations of the PRC on Bank Managment" is the legal guarantee of performance by the banks of their regulatory functions.

It is extremely important to define the position of banks in the financial activities. In recent years, the People's Bank has performed the functions of a central bank. As some regulations regarding the responsibility for financial management were not specific and clear, there have been differences and contradictions in the financial activities between the central bank on the one hand and special banks and financial organizations on the other. Moreover, it has been difficult to coordinate and arbitrate these problems. Now the "regulations" clearly state that the People's Bank of China, as the central bank of the state, should perform its duty of exercising overall leadership and management over the financial undertakings of the whole nation. The special banks, as economic entities practicing independent accounting, should independently perform their duties and financial activities. Consequently, the legal position of various banks and financial organizations is clearly defined and the relations between the central bank, on the one hand, and special banks and financial organizations, on the other, have been straightened out, helping promote the work and business activities carried out within the scope of the functions and powers of each.

To strengthen management is the essential prerequisite for the banks in fully performing their regulatory functions and for credit funds to yield better social benefits. Due to poor managment in banking, the abnormal practices of excessive issuance of currency, granting of loans in a blind manner, and several banks vying with one another in granting loans to the same client ran rampant for a time. In accordance with the requirements of the state on strengthening macrocontrol, the banks achieved certain results in controlling credit and the excessive issuance of currency in 1985. On the basis of a review, the "regulations" make clear stipulations on strengthening management over the issuance of currency, granting of credit funds, and adjustment of interest rates. These measures are absolutely necessary.

According to the "regulations," the special banks have the decision-making power to grant loans. In the past, a number of localities did not respect the functions of banks. The leading cadres there approved applications for loans as they leased and the practice of indiscriminately asking for loans was quite common. Some localities even tried to write off, without authorization, loans already granted and exempt the units concerned from repaying loans, thus incurring financial losses for the state. In accordance with the stipulations of the "regulations," no unit or individual will henceforth be allowed to compel the banks to grant or recall loans. Without the approval of the State Council, no one will have the right to exempt any unit or individual from repaying loans. The banks concerned should undertake economic responsibility and risks in granting loans. Those who abuse the power of granting loans to seek personal gains will be punished according to law.

The "Provisional Regulations of the PRC on Bank Management" is one of China's important financial laws. All localities, departments, and banking organizations should conscientiously abide by the regulations and effectively perform the banks' regulatory functions in the economy.

INCOME TAX TO BE LEVIED ON PRIVATE BUSINESSES

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- Interim Regulations of the People's Republic of China on Income Tax Concerning Urban and Rural Individually-Operated Industrial and Commercial Businesses (Promulgated by the State Council on 7 January 1986)

Article 1: All those engaged in industry, commerce, service trades, construction and installation trades, transport, and other trades, as well as individually-operated industrial and commercial businesses operating with the approval of the administrative departments of industry and commerce, are taxpayers with incomes derived from urban and rural individually-operated industrial and commercial businesses (hereafter referred to as taxpayers). They should pay income tax according to the provisions of these regulations.

Article 2: The taxable income of a taxpayer shall be the excess of his gross income in a tax year over his deductible costs, expenses, wages, losses, and those before-tax expenses permitted by the state.

Article 3: Income tax concerning urban and rural individually-operated industrial and commercial businesses is computed according to the "Ten-Level Tax-Rate Table of Income Tax at Progressive Rates on Sums in Excess of Specified Amounts of Taxable Income" attached to these regulations.

Article 4: A 10 to 40 percent surtax will be levied on any taxpayer's taxable income above 50,000 yuan. The specific measures for this surtax will be determined by the people's government of the province, autonomous region, or municipality directly under the central government.

Article 5: The people's government of the province, autonomous region, or municipality directly under the central government may grant tax reductions and exemptions for given periods to the following taxpayers who have experienced difficulties in paying taxes.

1. The childless elderly, handicapped, and those family members of martyrs engaged in individually-operated businesses;

2. Those providing badly needed services requiring high labor intensity and yielding lower incomes than given standards.

Article 6: Income tax concerning urban and rural individually-operated industrial and commercial businesses shall be computed on an annual basis, and paid in advance in monthly or quarterly installments. The final settlement shall be made at the end of each tax year, with a refund for any overpayment or a supplemental payment for any deficiency. The specific time limit for tax payment shall be decided by the county or city tax authorities.

Article 7: Income tax concerning urban and rural individually-operated industrial and commercial businesses should be paid to the local tax authorities.

Article 8: When a taxpayer starts to operate his business with the approval of the administrative organ of industry and commerce, he should present the pertinent certificates to, and go through tax registration with, the local tax authorities within 30 days after his business license is issued.

Article 9: When a taxpayer ceases to operate, merges and integrates his business with another establishment, sets up a branch, reorganizes his operations, changes the nature of his business or moves his business to another location with the approval of the administrative organ of industry and commerce, he should present the pertinent certificates to the local tax authorities to change or cancel registration, pay all taxes due, and hand in the blank invoices for cancellation within 30 days of the date of approval.

Article 10: The taxpayer should have a set of account books, correctly calculate his profit or loss, and file tax returns with the local tax authorities according to the regulations.

When a taxpayer is unable to present vouchers to accurately calculate costs and expenses and correctly calculate the amount of taxable income, the local tax authorities have the right to appraise and decide the amount due on his income tax.

Article 11: The tax authorities have the right to conduct investigations into the taxpayer's business operations. The taxpayer must make reports according to the facts, and present account vouchers and books and pertinent information. Under no circumstances should he refuse to present the necessary vouchers, books, and information or conceal facts.

Article 12: The taxpayer must make tax payments within the prescribed time limit. In case of failure to do so, the tax authorities, in addition to setting a new time limit for tax payment, shall impose a surcharge for overdue payment equal to 1/2 of 1 percent of the overdue tax for every day in arrears, starting from the first day payment becomes overdue.

Article 13: The tax authorities may exercise their discretion in light of the circumstances to impose a fine under 5,000 yuan on a taxpayer who has violated the provisions of Articles 8, 9 and 11 of these regulations.

Article 14: In dealing with a taxpayer who has evaded or refused to pay tax, the tax authorities, in addition to pursuing the tax payment, may exercise their discretion in light of the circumstances to impose a fine of up to, but not exceeding, 100 percent of the amount of tax that should have been paid. Cases of tax evasion in gross violation of the penal code should be referred to the judicial organ by the tax authorities in order to pursue criminal liability according to law.

Article 15: In case of a dispute with the tax authorities over tax payment, a taxpayer must first pay the tax as prescribed before applying to higher tax authorities for reconsideration. The higher tax authorities must reply within 30 days of receiving the application. If he does not accept the reconsideration decision, he may bring suit in the local people's courts.

Article 16: The Ministry of Finance is responsible for interpreting the regulations. Rules for the implementation of these regulations shall be formulated by the people's governments of various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government, and the copies of the rules sent to the Ministry of Finance for the record.

Article 17: These regulations shall go into effect from the beginning of 1986.

INTELLECTUALS EXPRESS ENTHUSIASM AT TEA PARTIES

OW Beijing XINHUA in English 1434 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese intellectuals are now enjoying better working and living conditions than ever before, and are most enthusiastic about serving the country's modernization program. This is because the government holds knowledge and intellectuals in high respect, and has effectively implemented the policies of the Communist Party of China (CPC) on intellectuals since the Third Session of the Eleventh Party Central Committee in 1978.

This sentiment was unanimously expressed by some 30 noted intellectuals at tea parties held over the past three days. They reviewed the achievements on all fronts in implementing the Sixth Five-Year Plan, (1981-85), and voiced their own determination to contribute to the fulfilment of the Seventh Five-Year Plan, which starts this year. The tea parties were given by the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee to observe the Spring Festival that falls on the ninth of February. Attending were more than 350 non-party intellectuals in the Chinese capital from the fields of education, health and medicine, culture, publishing, science and technology, economics, and physical culture and sports. Some of them were middle-aged or young intellectuals who have distinguished themselves in recent years in academic research and in carrying out reforms.

The speakers also pointed out that many problems await attention. In education, more funds were called for in order to improve middle and primary school education, and better efforts are needed, they said, to strengthen pre-school education. A publications law should also be worked out better equipment and more doctors of traditional medicine were needed, they stressed. A noted chess player proposed that chess classes be added to middle and primary schools.

Yan Mingfu, director of the United Work Department, said that the opinions and suggestions would be conveyed to the party Central Committee and that his department would cooperate with other party and government organizations in helping the intellectuals. He called for frequent contacts with the intellectuals to exchange ideas and discuss ways to solve problems.

POPULATION EDUCATION MEETING HELD IN BEIJING

[By reporter Lei Xiaolu]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- A national meeting on exchanging experiences in population education began in the Beijing College of Pedagogics this morning. Some 50 population education workers from 14 provinces and municipalities in China are attending the meeting.

Currently, China's population education is mainly conducted in middle schools. More than 6,000 middle schools are teaching population education subjects. Nearly 4 million middle school students have learned population theories in a more systematical way. In 1981, China and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities [UNFPA] signed an agreement on cooperation in population education in middle schools and training of relevant teachers. Since then, the colleges of pedagogics in various provinces and municipalities have trained more than 16,000 population education teachers and compiled a number of middle school textbooks for population education and auxiliary teaching materials.

The primary contents of present population education are China's population policy, the history of population development and the present population situation, population and environment, population and development, human physiology and family planning, inheritance and variation, and population statistics.

The participants at the meeting hold that to control the size of population and improve its quality will depend on several generations making efforts, and that population education should be an important part of middle school education.

Present at today's meeting were Wang Mingda, vice minister of the State Education Commission; and (Jane Chiang), a high-ranking official from the Beijing Office of UNFPA.

COMPARISON OF WU XUEQIAN SPEECH TO NPC SESSION

The ultimate paragraph of the XINHUA English item reads: China hopes that the U.S. will mean what it says in supporting China's efforts for peaceful reunification of the country, and discard its discriminative policies toward China.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN CHAIRS CPC COMMITTEE MEETING

[Text] "To be the leading example for the whole province, provincial organs should first focus on having the leading bodies and cadres take the lead. To rectify organs' party style we should start by strengthening ideological education and correcting malpractices in six areas." The above request was made at the enlarged conference of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, which was held yesterday afternoon to discuss how to study and carry out the guidelines of the conference of cadres of central organs. Comrade Xiang Nan presided. Attending were leaders of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, and the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; responsible comrades of party groups of the provincial People's Congress, the provincial government, and the provincial CPPCC Committee; as well as secretaries of prefectural and city party committees.

During their discussion, the participants reviewed the actual situation in our province, and pointed out that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, especially after party rectification, the economic and political situation in the province has been good. However, we have learned from past experience that we tend to neglect the dark side of things as well as ideological and political work when the situation is excellent. In recent years, we have scored remarkable results in strengthening our economy, and yet we have not paid enough attention to improving party style and social conduct.

Although we have made greater efforts in this respect since the second half of last year, we are still far from meeting the requirements of the central authorities. In the course of implementing the guidelines of the circular issued by the general offices of the central authorities, we have found, after tentative exploration and investigation, that malpractices in the six areas do exist in varying degrees in provincial organs. Many other problems, like bureaucracy, procrastination, inefficiency, departmentalism, and an elitist mentality also exist, some of which are fairly common and serious. It was timely and necessary that the party Central Committee proposed to rectify party style in organs, raise efficiency, study hard, tighten discipline, and enhance party spirit. Comrade Hu Yaobang urged party members and cadres in central organs to be examples to the whole country by displaying their excellent work style and noble spirit. By the same token, we, the leading organs of the province, should be an example to all provincial organs and the whole province. We should enhance ideological education, seriously investigate and handle cases of grave importance, further rectify guiding ideology in vocational matters, accelerate structural reform in organs, and combine management with service for grass-roots units. Only when leading organs and cadres strictly discipline themselves can they have the initiative and right to set strict requirements for others.

At yesterday afternoon's conference, the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee resolved to hold a meeting of cadres in provincial organs in the near future to mobilize them to study and implement the guidelines of the conference of cadres in central organs and to continue with their solid work in accordance with the central authorities' requirements, so that provincial organs will usher in the first spring of the Seventh 5-Year Plan with a new style and aspect.

XIANG NAN ADDRESSES FUJIAN CADRES FORUM

[Excerpts] The Fujian Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting of cadres of provincial organs at Fuzhou's Xihu Theater yesterday morning on implementing the guidelines of the meeting of cadres of central organs.

The meeting called on cadres of provincial organs with party membership to take concrete steps to quickly resolve the serious problems affecting work style in the respective provincial organs, seriously investigate and deal with big or major cases of violation, and set an example for organs at lower levels in achieving a fundamental improvement in party style and social conduct.

Xiang Nan, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Hu Ping, deputy secretary and governor; Hu Hong, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; Gao Hu, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; and Zhang Zongde, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and commander of the provincial Military District, spoke at the meeting.

Cheng Xu, chairman of the Standing Committee of the provincial People's Congress, and Yuan Gai, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, were present.

Jia Qinglin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the meeting.

In his speech, Comrade Xiang Nan pointed out: The party Central Committee's initiative in exposing the dark side of the party despite the current excellent situation, its determination to rectify unhealthy practices, and its call to central organs to set an example have rapidly received the enthusiastic support of the whole party, the whole army, and the people throughout the country.

Xiang Nan said: We are determined to greatly improve our party style this year. For certain units, departments, prefectures, and counties in our province, it is entirely possible to achieve a fundamental improvement in our party style this year.

How to rectify the unhealthy practices? Xiang Nan said: After discussions, the Standing Committee of the provincial Party Committee holds: First, it is necessary to strengthen ideological education. It is necessary to carry out study while simultaneously conducting criticism and self-criticism. We welcome criticism and advice from party as well as nonparty comrades, including from our friends of democratic parties. We should be glad to have our errors pointed out by others. We must seriously study Marxism-Leninism and modern scientific management. We must earnestly study the principles governing inner-party political life and last year's Document No 57 of the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in order to raise our understanding and improve our immunity against corrosive bourgeois ideologies. Second, it is necessary to start from rectifying unhealthy practices in six areas and carry out comparison and investigation in each area. Third, it is necessary to seriously investigate and deal with big or major cases of violation. On no account should we be soft toward them. Fourth, it is necessary to stress the need for leading organs and cadres to take the lead with their own conduct.

Xiang Nan concluded: Our province has some 5,000 cadres of departmental and regimental level or above. The quality of the province's party style will be determined by these 5,000 cadres. Rectification of party style must start from these cadres and from the provincial organs.

In his speech, Comrade Hu Ping analyzed Fujian's economic situation. Speaking about strengthening organization construction and rectifying unhealthy practices, Hu Ping pointed out: The key to fundamentally improving our party style and social conduct lies in the six provincial leading bodies, the provincial organs, and particularly in the cadres of leading organs, who must set an example by their own conduct.

While affirming that the main trend in party style in provincial organs is good, Hu Ping sternly pointed out: Various malpractices exist in some departments and units and among a small number of party members and leading cadres. In a few cases, the problem is quite serious. The six problems of party style pointed out by the Central Committee also exist in our provincial organs. Bureaucratic work style, the use of one's position to seek personal gain, and illegal activities in the economic field must be singled out for our special attention.

Hu Ping said: On the part of our provincial government, we did not adequately study the new situation and problems arising from our opening to the outside world and carrying out reform. We were too engrossed in routine work. We erred in our policy decisions on certain specific issues. More often than not we were unable to grasp problems at the lower levels and to make up our minds before the problems worsened. Take the case of fake medicines in Jinjiang and the problems in our trade with Taiwan, for instance. These two incidents were, above all, the result of problems in guiding ideology in our work. In addition, our bureaucratic work style further worsened these problems. We should assume leadership responsibility for them.

Comrade Hu Ping concluded emphatically: Provincial government organs must consciously accept the supervision of the people's congress at the corresponding level or of its standing body. This is very important for improving party style in government organs.

Comrade Jia Qinglin announced at the meeting that the provincial party committee had decided to let its leading group for guiding party rectification exercise unified leadership over the work of rectifying the party style of provincial organs and to establish under the leading group an office in charge of rectifying the party style of provincial organs.

[Text] A meeting of the directors of finance and taxation bureaus from 13 cities closed in Nanjing on the afternoon of 22 January.

Addressing the closing session, Governor Gu Xiulian urged finance and taxation departments at all levels to support and vigorously promote production and development and to fulfill or overfulfill the financial revenue targets for 1986.

The meeting outlined the following major tasks for the province's financial work in 1986:

A. To extensively implement the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates and the third enlarged meeting of the seventh provincial party committee's Standing Committee;

B. To persist in reform and vigorously conduct education in this connection;

C. To increase tax revenue;

D. To control the scale of capital construction;

E. To increase financial and economic discipline;

F. To strike a balance between revenue and expenditure;

G. To advance persistently and steadily in supporting economic construction; and

H. To mete out expenses in accordance with the principles of spending within one's means, making overall plans and taking all factors into account, guaranteeing spending for key projects, and not reversing priorities.

Financial departments at all levels in Jiangsu should distribute their financial resources according to the following order of priorities this year:

A. Guaranteeing funds for increased administrative expenses in carrying out wage reform;

B. Reserving funds needed for subsidizing meat prices in rural and urban areas;

C. Supporting the structural reforms of education and science so that increases in the expenditures for carrying out these reforms will be slightly higher than those in regular incomes; and

D. Appropriately increasing the outlays for agriculture and reserving funds for combating natural disasters and launching relief operations.

The meeting noted: It is necessary to continue to propagate the principle of building the nation through arduous struggle, thrift, and hard work; to adhere to the principle of acting according to one's capabilities; and to avoid overusing one's resources in an attempt to attain all the goals.

HAN PEIXIN ADDRESSES NANJING ORGANIZATIONAL MEETING

[Excerpts] A provincial meeting on organizational work ended in Nanjing on 22 January.

Comrade Han addressed the meeting. The meeting pointed out: Efforts should be made to further improve the structure and quality of leading bodies this year.

It is now necessary to strengthen the staffing of leading bodies in propaganda, cultural, educational, judicial, procuratorial, public security, financial, trade, and city management departments. In observing and judging cadres, attention should be paid to their educational backgrounds, diplomas, and actual competence.

In his speech at the meeting, Comrade Han Peixin called on party committees at various levels to pay attention to strengthening party building organizationally. While working out their Seventh 5-Year Plan, party committees at various levels should also devote time to planning their organizational work.

Comrade Han Peixin called for party committees at various levels to further promote the improvement of the cadre and personnel system and to make preparations for further organizational reform. It is essential to thoroughly understand and implement the principle of cadres becoming more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and professionally more competent. The system of lifelong tenure for leading cadres should gradually be abolished.

In conclusion, Comrade Han Peixin called on party committees at various levels to strengthen the building of their organization departments in order to meet the requirements of the new situation.

SHENZHEN OFFICIAL DISCUSSES SWINDLING CASES

HK240608 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0213 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] Shenzhen, 22 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In the past year, Shenzhen City has tracked down 15 major fraud cases which involved a total sum of 40 million renminbi yuan, more than HK$10 million, and more than $1 million. The official of Shenzhen City's Discipline Inspection Department said that the swindlers' activities had the following characteristics:

-- More and more victims of the frauds are collective or state-owned units; and previously, most victims were individuals. In 12 out of the 15 major fraud cases exposed last year, collective and state-owned units were cheated. This category accounted for 180 percent of the fraud cases.

-- Swindlers were not merely jobless people, and many of the exposed swindlers were individual traders and enterprises contracted to individuals. Some frauds were committed by employees of these enterprises or by jobless people from Hong Kong. Most of these swindlers held business licenses, bank accounts, business seals, and invoices. In a fraud case, seven Hong Kong residents headed by one surnamed Xie contracted to run a shopping center in Luohu District in June last year. Then, they used the shopping center's business license, bank account, business seal, and invoices to practice fraud. In a period of 25 days, they swindled 2.13 million yuan out of some units by signing supply contracts worth 30 million yuan.

-- The swindlers mostly resorted to such means as signing false contracts, cheating on payments for goods, commissions, or downpayments, and supplying counterfeit goods of inferior quality. In June last year, the Dongfang Trading Company of Shenzhen City signed a contract to import 83,000 dozen Japan-made "Zebra" pens worth HK$1,095,600. But the supplier delivered more than 3,000 cartons of waste paper rather than the pens as ordered. The Shenzhen authorities immediately adopted a resolute measure to freeze the supplier's bank account and retrieve all money lost.

-- Some jobless people from Hong Kong practiced fraud by offering false remittance bills. For example, a "manager" of a Hong Kong company signed a contract to buy 50,000 pieces of snakeskin and promised to pay HK$215,000 in two installments. But after he took the copy of the remittance bill, he asked the bank to cancel the remittance. Then he used the false remittance bill copy to cheat the Shenzhen supplier who delivered 20,500 pieces of snakeskin to him and lost HK$200,500.

This official called on all people to keep high vigilance against swindling activities and to take measures to plug all loopholes so as to prevent themselves from being cheated.

HAINAN PAYS COMPENSATION TO PLANTATION OWNERS

HK210911 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0333 GMT 17 Jan 86

[Text] Guangzhou, 17 January (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Tongshi Region of Hainan Island has recently paid 600,000 yuan as the first compensation to the Overseas Chinese and returned Overseas Chinese who are former owners of rubber plantations.

In early 1950's, many Overseas Chinese and returned Overseas Chinese invested in Hainan Island to open up the uncultivated land on the island and plant rubber trees. They overcame enormous difficulties and built one rubber plantation after another, thus making contributions to our country's rubber industry. But, since 1956, because of the implementation of the joint state-private ownership, and the system of people's communes, some units confiscated as feudal property the rubber plantations owned by the Overseas Chinese and returned Overseas Chinese, or redeemed the plantations at a low price when merging them into the state-owned farms.

Some units have even made mistakes in their calculations concerning the number of rubber trees in some plantations. As a result, the former plantation owners had had a lot of complaints about these measures.

Last July, Tongshi Region began to investigate this issue. The results of the investigation show that in the early 1950's, there were, altogether, 11,000 mu of rubber plantations and 220,000 rubber trees owned by the Overseas Chinese and returned Overseas Chinese. Although these rubber trees have been redeemed by the state, generally speaking, the price of redemption was too low.

In order to solve this problem left over from history, apart from allocating funds to pay a reasonable sum of compensation to the former rubber plantation owners, Tongshi Farm Reclamation Bureau has also conducted a careful examination of the rubber trees which were not counted when all the rubber plantations were merged into the state-owned farms in the past, and retroactively paid compensation to the former owners.

HUNAN CONFERENCE DISCUSSES TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISES

[Excerpts] A Hunan provincial conference on township enterprises was held in Changsha from 19 to 23 January. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, Advisory Commission, People's Congress, and government Mao Zhiyong, Xiong Qingquan, Wang Zhiguo, Xie Xinying, and Cao Wenju attended and made speeches.

The conference held: If township enterprises develop rapidly, the level of the productive forces will improve, and agricultural production can then grow steadily and the peasants' incomes will increase. Their knowledge of culture and science can gradually improve, and the state can prosper.

The conference held: In common with other things, the development of township enterprises cannot but bring along some problems on the way of advance. We must by no means avoid these problems. We must continually solve them in our work. We cannot negate the principle on running township enterprises just because they have some specific problems.

Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government stressed five points on how to strengthen leadership over township enterprises and improve services.

1. Further enhance understanding. Agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, and township enterprises are the foundation of the foundation. Township enterprises represent new productive forces and modes in the rural areas. They are of great significance for developing new cooperative economy and promoting the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas.

2. Further relax the policies and support the development of the township enterprises.

3. Attach more importance to relying on science and technology, and closely integrate developing the spark [xinghuo] plans with developing township enterprises.

4. We should develop more ways of running these enterprises. They should be based on local raw materials, depend on the towns, and make joint efforts to tackle a number of different projects.

5. Service must be further improved. The party and government leaders at all levels, especially the number of one men, must be concerned for township enterprises. The six cities directly subordinate to the provincial authorities have the responsibility to organize coordinated service work.

SICHUAN SECRETARY DISCUSSES SPECIALIZED HOUSEHOLDS

HK241049 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 20 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 18 January, at a rally to commend 1 million young pioneers in rural areas in our province in getting rich through science and technology, Yang Rudai, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, emphatically pointed out: Specialized households are people taking the lead in developing the rural commodity economy, are demonstrators and disseminators of getting rich through hard work and through science and technology, and are pioneers in enriching our country and the people. We are firm and unshakable in developing the specialized households.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: Some comrades have said that specialized households have recently received slightly less publicity. Is there any change in the policy? No. The policy has not changed. We will, as always, support and develop the specialized households.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: With a view to guiding peasants to get rich through hard work, we must now do well in several aspects.

1. We must continue to support and develop the specialized households and encourage the peasants to get rich through hard work and through science.

2. Through the policies of rational taxes, we must properly readjust the economic interests among laborers so as to allow the discrepancies between income to remain within the sphere permitted by society.

3. It is essential to seriously help the poor.

In dealing with the second step of rural reform this year, Comrade Yang Rudai said: The general guiding ideology is to consolidate the fruits of reform last year and to make good preparations for taking an important step in reform next year.

In his speech, Comrade Yang Rudai fully affirmed the activities of 1 million young pioneers in the rural areas in our province in getting rich through science and technology. On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, he expressed four points to the young people in the rural areas throughout the province:

1. It is necessary to be the vanguards in rural reform.

2. It is essential to be the pioneers in getting rich through science and technology.

3. It is necessary to strive to become specialized households and science and technology demonstration households.

4. It is imperative to lead other people to get rich and to take the road of getting rich together.

At the commendatory rally, leading comrades, including Yang Rudai, presented silk banners, citations, and prizes to 53 advanced units and 199 advanced individuals in vigorously carrying out the activities of being pioneers.

NEI MONGGOL BANNER, COUNTY SECRETARIES MEET

SK260240 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Text] The regional meeting of secretaries of the banner and county CPC committees opened ceremoniously in Hohhot on 24 January. The main tasks of this meeting are to continue studying the documents adopted at the National Conference of Party Delegates; to review and sum up the work and experiences done and gained since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and, in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee; to seek unity of thinking, to make a plan for the major work for 1986 and a plan for the work of celebrating the 40th anniversary of the founding of the autonomous region; and to put forward principles and tentative ideas for working out the region's Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Leading comrades, including Zhou Hui, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, attended the meeting. Comrade Bu He delivered a report. Comrade Batubagen made a speech. Comrade Tian Congming presided over the meeting.

Comrade Bu He's report consisted of four parts: first, conscientiously studying and mastering the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates: second, briefly reviewing the work and summing up the experiences done and gained in 1985; third, working out the major tasks for 1986; fourth, improving work style and strengthening leadership.

Comrade Bu He emphatically pointed out in his report: The National Conference of Party Delegates and the 4th and 5th Plenary Sessions of the 12th CPC Central Committee which were held last September were of extreme importance and had profound historic significance for further consolidating and developing the current excellent situation, promoting the development of reform and the socialist construction, and realizing the grand goals set forth at the 12th CPC Congress. Party members of the party organizations at all levels and cadres and people of all nationalities across the region should conscientiously study the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates, seek unity of thinking, and act in accordance with the guidelines of the conference.

While reviewing and summing up the work done in 1985, Comrade Bu He said: Our region has made a sound start in urban reform. The second-step rural and pastoral reform has been carried out in a healthy fashion. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has been satisfactorily fulfilled. Practice has proven that, as with the entire nation, our region's political and economic situation has been improving year after year since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The political and economic situation in this period was really among the best since the founding of the PRC. Such a good situation basically resulted from the fact that the party organizations and people's governments at all levels and cadres and people of all nationalities correctly implemented the party's line, principles, and policies; held high the banner of unity and development, persistently carried out reform; and worked diligently.

Comrade Bu He said: Through summing up the experiences gained since the founding of the autonomous region and, in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we basically came to the conclusion that we successfully linked the line, principles, and policies of the central authorities with the region's actual conditions, and that we have held high the banner of unity and development. From now on, we must continue to persist in these experiences. We learned well from the experiences in reform and development gained last year that we must persistently carry out the principle of taking a sound and positive approach, striving for a fast but steady growth rate, acting according to our capability, and striving for real efficiency. We must persistently look inwardly and organically link material interests with ideological and political work in carrying out economic construction and work in other fields.

With regard to the major tasks for 1986, Comrade Bu He pointed out that we must continue holding high the banner of unity and development; deeply study and implement the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates; persistently attend to the two civilizations; unswervingly attach importance to reform; consolidate, digest, supplement, and perfect the existing achievements in and measures for reform; carry forward our strong points and eliminate our weak points in order to better achieve reform and to further promote a steady, coordinated development of the region's national economy; and make efforts to lay a good foundation for the next-step reform and the realization of the goal of doubling the economic targets next year and the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Comrade Bu He said: In the work for this year, we must focus on grasping the economic restructuring, fully tapping the potentials of the enterprises; developing large-scale agriculture to further promote a steady increase of the output of the agricultural, forestry, and livestock products, including grain; and doing well in grasping party style. The entire region has made notable achievements in improving the party style during the past year. First of all, the regional-level organs and Hohhot City should set an example in this regard.

Comrade Bu He pointed out: The key to fulfilling the tasks for 1986 and achieving new successes in the work in various fields hinges on whether or not leading bodies at all levels, particularly leading cadres at the banner and county level or above, have a spirit of unity and vitality and an attitude of taking the whole situation into consideration, and whether or not leaders maintain responsibility to the people, deal with the concrete matters relating to their work, and have the spirit of doing pioneering work.

The regional CPC Committee called on leading cadres at all levels to be united, take the whole situation into consideration, strive for real efficiency, compete with each other in making good contributions, unite and guide the people of various nationalities across the region to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains, make efforts to fulfill the tasks for 1986, arrange the celebrations for the 40th anniversary of the founding of the autonomous region with exceedingly good achievements, and make ceaseless efforts to achieve new successes in realizing socialist undertakings with Chinese characteristics.

Comrade Batubagen made a speech on how to implement the guidelines of the national rural work conference at the meeting.

NI ZHIFU, TIANJIN LEADERS MEET PLA LEADERS

[Text] On behalf of the organs of the CPC Committee of the Beijing Military Region, on 18 January Zheng Guozhong, commander of the Tianjin Garrison District; Lan Baojing, political commissar of the Tianjin Garrison District; and other leading comrades presented silk banners to the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, the municipal people's government, and 18 advanced units that emerged in the work of helping the PLA carry out the reduction-in-strength reorganization and the campaign of supporting the Army and giving preferential treatment to families of revolutionary armymen and martyrs. They expressed thanks to these units for their support to the PLA's work.

Responsible comrades of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government including Ni Zhifu, Li Ruihuan, Wu Zhen and Tan Shaowen met with the PLA leaders. They also held intimate talks on further strengthening the unity between armymen and civilizians and jointly engaging in the four modernizations.

GOVERNMENT WATCHING U.S. ARMS SALES TO PRC

OW271329 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Text] The Republic of China Government is currently paying very close attention on the United States Reagan administration's moves to sell Air Force radar and navigation equipment to Peking. According to ASSOCIATED PRESS reports in Washington, the Reagan administration and the congressional sources said today, 25 January, the United States President Ronald Reagan is preparing to notify Congress that he intends to sell Air Force radar and navigation equipment to Peking to upgrade its jet fighter planes. The deal, valued at about 500 million U.S. dollars would strengthen United States ties with the communist regime. This could cause strain with some European allies, Japan, and Taiwan. The equipment is designed to upgrade Peking's F-8 interceptor planes. The sale, under discussion for at least one year, would be the second since the United States established diplomatic relations with Peking in 1979. The first was the relatively minor U.S. $98 million sale of equipment, and the (?design) for Peking to build a factory for artillery and other ammunitions. The adminstration's effort to gain congressional approval of the sale was due to begin later in the day with the close of the Foreign Affairs Committee hearing. Additionally, the United States will soon seek the approval of NATO allies and Japan who coordinate control of Western technology sales to communist countries.

Foreign Ministry Spokesman

[Text] Taipei, Jan. 25 (CNA) -- Any free nation that provides the Peiping regime with weapons and technologies will beef up Red China's military strength and eventually undermine the security in the west Pacific region, Chiu Chin-yi, spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, warned Saturday.

Chiu gave the warning in response to press inquiries about foreign wire service reports that the U.S. Government is planning to sell radar and aviation guidance equipment to help Red China modernize its Air Force.

He indicates that the ROC Government is watching closely the development of this issue.

OFFICER STRESSES VITAL STRATEGIC VALUE TO WEST

OW250401 Taipei CNA in English 0312 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Taipei, Jan. 24 (CNA) -- Judging from its vital position in the Pacific region, the Republic of China in Taiwan, if it continues to stay in the democratic camp, will be very helpful to maintaining the stragegic and economic interests of the free world, a top Chinese military officer said in Taipei Friday.

But on the other hand, the free world will feel great pressure if Taiwan falls into the hands of the Peiping regime and becomes hostile to its neighboring countries, General Wego Chiang, [Chiang Wei-kuo] director of the Defense Ministry's Operational Training Department, told a group of foreign visitors who have come here to attend World Freedom Day activities.

Chiang made the comment on Taiwan's position in the world at a seminar sponsored by Tao Hsi-sheng, president of the ROC Strategic Society. Over 100 members of the society and foreign dignitaries were present at the seminar, listening to reports by experts and exchanging views on the strategic situation in the Taiwan Strait and the Pacific region.

If the free world lost Taiwan, the China mainland would lose its opportunity to restore democracy because the influence and pressure exerted by Taiwan on the mainland would no longer exist, and the Soviet Union would also accelerate its expansion in Asia, Chiang said.

Shaw Yu-ming, director of the Institute of International Relations of National Chengchi University, said Taiwan is not only a defend r of East Asian nations, especially Japan, but can also strengthen U.S. defense against Soviet expansion in Asia.

Although the U.S. is trying vigorously to associate with Red China to counter the Soviet Union, many strategists still believe that Red China will not help the U.S. fight against the Soviet Union and will remain neutral when the two superpowers clash, Shaw said. This is because Red China knows very well that remaining neutral will best suit its interests, especially when its military strength is still far inferior to that of the Soviet Union, he noted.

Ms. Chiu Chao-lin, an associate researcher at Academia Sinica, said it is impossible for the ROC to discuss its sovereignty with the Peiping regime which is noted for breaking its word. "The sovereignty of a nation is something that cannot be traded or bargained," she stressed.

ENVOY TO SAUDI ARABIA CALLS RELATIONS 'VERY GOOD'

[Text] Riyadh, Jan. 17 (CNA) — The Republic of China Ambassador Tsai Wei-ping and his wife have returned to their residence at the diplomatic quarter here.

Amb. Tsai flew back to Taipei late last month to report his duties, and latest developments between the Kingdom and ROC.

He told reporters in Taipei that he is confident that the relations between the two countries are very good and that Saudi Arabia's foreign policy toward China remains unchanged.

Meanwhile, an ROC official noted that the delayed ninth session of the Permanent Joint Sino-Saudi Committee on Economic and Technical Cooperation will be held in Taipei at the beginning of May this year.

JOURNAL VIEWS CHANGE IN RENMIN RIBAO DIRECTOR

HK270729 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 160, 16 Jan 86 pp 12-14

[Article by Ai Pi-hsi: "Inside Story of RENMIN RIBAO Change of Director"]

[Text] The RENMIN RIBAO change of director has attracted widespread attention abroad, giving rise to much talk and speculation.

In the Past, a Change in the Chief Responsible Person of RENMIN RIBAO Has Often Been Related to a Change in Politics in Mainland China

As the CPC mouthpiece, RENMIN RIBAO is in a very important and sensitive position. In the past, a change in the chief responsible person of RENMIN RIBAO has often been related to a change in politices in mainland China. Moreover, prior to the current reshuffle in personnel, a Hong Kong journal reported that an investigation group sent by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission had already been stationed at the RENMIN RIBAO office, in order to solve the problems of Liu Binyan and Wang Ruoshui, which has caused the current change of director at RENMIN RIBAO to attract greater attention.

A Sign of a Tightening Up of Beijing's Policy?

However, when the news spread that Qian Liren had replaced Qin Chuan as Director of RENMIN RIBAO, the Hong Kong press held differing views on the matter. For example, one journal held that the "sudden removal from office" of Qin Chuan was due to the fact that he has for a long time failed to draw a demarcation line between himself and Hu Jiwei and Wang Ruoshui; therefore this serves as "one of the signs of Beijing's tightening up of late."

A newspaper holds that Qian Liren is one of the comparatively younger cadres whom Deng Xiaoping has put into important posts, and the fact that he has been appointed director of RENMIN RIBAO is a measure of how the "opening up school" is strengthening its "important stronghold of culture and propaganda." These diametrically opposed analyses appeared simultaneously, which has rather confused people.

The True Cause Discovered During a Trip to Beijing

What is the real reason for the change of director at RENMIN RIBAO? When the author went to Beijing toward the end of 1985, he made wide contacts with some friends in the press, and received direct information from an experienced editor of long standing with RENMIN RIBAO, and finally obtained a clear picture of the background of the current reshuffle.

The "Earthquake" Has Greatly Weakened RENMIN RIBAO

The whole thing started from the "earthquake" in RENMIN RIBAO that took place in 1983. In the campaign to "eliminate spiritual pollution" at that time, the then director Hu Jiwei, who had twice handed in his resignation so that a younger person could replace him, but who had been twice rejected, found his third resignation readily approved. It was announced that deputy chief editor Wang Ruoshui had been removed from office and appointed to another position. Former chief editor Qin Chuan took over the post of director, and was succeeded in the post of chief editor by the previous deputy chief editor Li Zhuan. That reshuffle greatly weakened RENMIN RIBAO. The leading body at the top level has gone from five members, comprising the director, the chief editor, and three deputy chief editors, to only three, the director, the chief editor, and a single deputy chief editor.

The Emergence of a State of Semiparalysis

In an organ like RENMIN RIBAO, with each of its words and actions catching the attention of all, its internal work highly intense, and its external contacts wide and complex, the three sole members of the leading body at the top level have found it very difficult to cope with the situation. In winter 1984, preparations for the overseas edition began, and its initial issue was published in July 1985. Tan Wenrui, the sole deputy chief editor, exerted all his efforts in taking care of the overseas edition, and he had no time to take care of other matters. The two editions of the paper must certainly be published daily. However, concerning internal work, in the words of some office personnel, it seemed that a state of semiparalysis had emerged, with nobody able to make a final decision.

It seems that over the past 2 years and more, the CPC top echelon has been continuously considering strenghening the leading body of RENMIN RIBAO. It was said from the very beginning that several writers of the Research Office of the CPC Secretariat, with Deng Liqun as the director, would be transferred to the RENMIN RIBAO office to take charge of the commentary and editing work. Later, it was said that the provincial CPC committee secretary of a province in the central plains would be transferred to Beijing to take charge of RENMIN RIBAO. Still later, rumor had it that people from the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, or a provincial newspaper would be transferred to support RENMIN RIBAO. But none of these expectations were realized for various reasons.

All Members of the Leadership Stratum at the Top Level Are Over the Stipulated Age for Retirement

In order to implement the principle of the leadership being younger in average age, it is all the more necessary to strengthen the leading body of RENMIN RIBAO, which is pressing for readjustment.

Both the director and chief editor of RENMIN RIBAO enjoy ministerial treatment. At present, Qin Chuan is 66, and Li Zhuan is 67; both over 65, the age stipulated for cadre retirement at ministerial level. The deputy chief editor enjoys deputy ministerial treatment. Tan Wenrui is 63 this year, over 60, the age stipulated for the retirement of cadres at deputy ministerial level. Although the retirement age for professional personnel in press organs is not as rigid as for administrative cadres, personnel in leading posts are required to retire at a certain age. RENMIN RIBAO reshuffled its leading bodies at all levels in 1985, and the responsible persons of all departments over the age of 60 have now retired, and been replaced by younger personnel. It is certainly inappropriate for the leadership at office level to be occupied by a leading body which is over the stipulated retirement age.

Therefore, it is said that the Central Secretariat made the decision back in autumn 1985 that the director and chief editor of RENMIN RIBAO should be younger in average age; however, in order to guarantee work in the office, of Qin Chuan and Li Zhuan, one of them would remain in his post for the time being.

The Choice Between Qin Chuan and Li Zhuan

Who would finally stay? To make the choice, great efforts seem to have been exerted. It is disclosed that since the late thirties, Li Zhuan has been engaged in journalism, and he has worked for RENMIN RIBAO since its first issue. He is very familiar with running a newspaper. Qin Chuan was a propaganda cadre in the days of Yanan and in the fifties. Later, he was assigned to take up leading posts in factories and schools successively. He was assigned to work at RENMIN RIBAO only after the conclusion of the "Cultural Revolution," and obviously is not as experienced as Li Zhuan in running a newspaper.

However, for a long time Li Zhuan has been working on news items, and he is rather overcautious, while Qin Chuan is bold in his work, and is more capable than Li Zhuan in handling external ties. Therefore, the personnel in the RENMIN RIBAO offices and relevant departments held different opinions as to whose staying would be more favorable to the work in the future.

The CPC Central Committee Organization Department Sent Its People To Solicit Suggestions in RENMIN RIBAO Offices

It is precisely because of this that Qin Chuan remains a member of the CPC Central Committee, despite the reshuffle in the personnel of CPC Central Committee organs in September 1985, or his future in RENMIN RIBAO was quite unsettled, as to whether he was staying for leaving. It was not until November 1985 that the CPC Organization Department sent several persons to solicit suggestions widely in the RENMIN RIBAO office, and the final decision was made that Qin should go and Li should stay.

It Is Not a Sudden Removal From Office for Qin Chuan

So that is the whole story of Qin Chuan's removal from office. Our friends in the Beijing press say: In the eyes of Hong Kong people, Qin Chuan seems to have been "removed from office" suddenly. But those who know the inside story say this is a natural course of development for the leading stratum of the RENMIN RIBAO office to become younger in average age, which is nothing extraordinary.

Neither Has Qin Chuan's Removal From Office Anything To Do With Showing Sympathy for Hu Jiwei and Wang Ruoshui

So, is the decision to remove Qin Chuan from office related to his failure to "draw a demarcation line" between himself and Hu Jiwei and Wang Ruoshui? Regarding this question posed by the author, the experienced editor of long standing with RENMIN RIBAO answered: "To say all the people in our office have supported Hu Jiwei and Wang Ruoshui might be rather absolute, but at least the majority of them have done so. Some Kong Kong newspapers and journals have reported on this, have they not? When the personnel of the office made their suggestions on whether Qin should go and Li should stay, it was chiefly out of consideration for making the process of the replacement of the leading body smoother, and by no means did they take into consideration that Qin Chuan has shown sympathy for Hu Jiwei and Wang Ruoshui, and therefore would not let him stay for the time being." He holds that such an analysis by Hong Kong people seems to be oversensitive.

The Central Discipline Inspection Commission Did Not Send an Investigation Group to the RENMIN RIBAO Office

How to account for the investigation group sent by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission to the RENMIN RIBAO office? A veteran editor of RENMIN RIBAO disclosed to me: "This is entirely a rumor." As the matter stands, the Central Displine Inspection Commission had received material exposing some problems of RENMIN RIBAO, and summoned some personnel of RENMIN RIBAO in order to learn the actual situation. No investigation group was ever sent to the RENMIN RIBAO office. However, the CPC Central Committee Organization Department did send people to the RENMIN RIBAO office, to handle the reshuffle of the leading body. The two affairs have been mixed up in the course of the news spreading. Also, the cases of Liu Binyan and Wang Ruoshui were a concern of people outside the RENMIN RIBAO office. Thus, the whole thing was said to be CPC Central Discipline Inspection Commission, sending an investigation group to be stationed in the RENMIN RIBAO office in order to solve the problems of Liu Binyan and Wang Ruoshui.

Why Was the Director of the RENMIN RIBAO Office Not Selected and Promoted From Among Cadres Within the Office Itself?

When the Central Committee Organization Department sent people to the RENMIN RIBAO office, was it simply to find a solution in choosing between Qin Chuan and Li Zhuan? "Of course not." The veteran editor said: "It is necessary to enhance the leading body of the office. The Central Committee Organization Department has also solicited opinions on who could be promoted to the leading body."

"Why was the director of the RENMIN RIBAO office not selected and promoted from among cadres within the office itself?" the writer pressed further.

"I am afraid I am not in a position to answer that question." The veteran editor paused. and continued: "However, it is obvious that the director of RENMIN RIBAO must keep in constant touch with the central authorities, and he should be able to attend the meetings of the Central Secretariat as a nonvoting member. Therefore, it is best for a member of the Central Committee to take the post. At present, it is obvious that the office has failed to find within itself such an appropriate person to take the post. However, the deputy chief editor will be selected from among cadres within the office itself, I think."

Are There Any Disputes Concerning Reforms Within RENMIN RIBAO?

"It is said that disputes have emerged within the office concerning how to deal with reforms. Is that true?" At this question from the writer, the veteran editor looked surprised, and asked what the writer was referring to. The writer briefed him the fact that some Hong Kong journals had carried the article by Lin Li. He seemed to grasp the point and said: "Yes, it did happen. Lin Li has written many articles giving a briefing on the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. Some people feel that these articles have fully affirmed Shenzhen and overpraised its accomplishments, but have failed to point out its shortcomings and, hence, are one-sided. Lin Li does not agree with such criticism, and has written an article in refutation. That is the whole course of the matter."

"The personnel of RENMIN RIBAO resolutely support reforms, as can be proved by our newspaper. However, differing opinions often arise between editors and reporters as to whether some reports on reforms are well written or not. It is only normal for different opinions to exist and for there to be open discussions about them." Having briefed me on this situation, the veteran editor said somewhat humorously: "In fact, 'disputes' of this category are nothing new. They have a long history."

Why Was Qian Liren Selected?

Based on the author's coverage of Beijing, it seems that the current reshuffle of personnel in RENMIN RIBAO is not "one of the signs of the recent tightening up in Beijing," but is precisely one of the signs of Beijing persisting in reforms. Qian Liren, who has succeeded Qin Chuan, may well demonstrate this point with his personal experiences and political attitude; and the essence of RENMIN RIBAO since Qian Liren took office on 10 December 1985 may also demonstrate it.

Why has the CPC top echelon finally selected Qian Liren, who has no experience whatever in running a newspaper, to take charge of RENMIN RIBAO? One of the explanations the writer was given is: Under the situation of further opening up in mainland China with each passing day, RENMIN RIBAO should also be opening up as well, in order to make the essence of its reporting and work style suit the needs of facing the world. In the past, neither Hu Weiji nor Qin Chuan was good enough in this respect, because of the limitation in their experiences. It is precisely to open a new situation in this respect that Qian Liren, who has long been working on international liaison work abroad, was appointed to the post of director of RENMIN RIBAO.

As the CPC Central Committee organ, what will be the future trend of RENMIN RIBAO? From that we may understand the pulse of change in China.

NPC 4TH PLENUM NOT TO DISCUSS HONG KONG, MACAO

HK280403 Hong Kong HONG LONG STANDARD in English 28 Jan 86 p 5

[Text] The coming session of the National People's Congress of China in March will not discuss Hong Kong's Basic Law.

A visiting member of the NPC standing committee, Mr Hu Ke-shi told THE STANDARD he had received no agenda on any affairs on Hong Kong or Macao for the fourth plenum of the Sixth NPC which will begin on March 25.

Neither the NPC nor its Standing Committee had requested the Basic Law Drafting Committee to regularly submit progress report for scrutiny, Mr Hu said.

He was speaking to reporters after a launching ceremony of a Chinese publication in Hong Kong. He said the Standing Committee had fully entrusted the Drafting Committee to carry out the whole work and they would not step in the drafting process. The legislative body of China would only start discussion on the Basie Law after the Drafting Committee has completed the work or if it feels it necessary to hold discussion by the standing committee during the drafting process, he explained.

But if NPC delegates ask for a progress report, they may get one, Mr Hu said.

The full NPC will meet to approve the Seventh Five-Year Plan, for 1986-1990, the state's financial accounts for 1985, and the state budget and development plan for 1986.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

Sino-Japanese Meeting

OW291022 Beijing XINHUA in English 0954 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) — The sixth round of regular consulations between the authorities in charge of foreign affairs of China and Japan, respectively, will be held in Beijing February 3 and 4, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman announced at a weekly news briefing here today. During the consultations, he said, Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Liu Shuqing and Japanese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Yanai Shinichi will exchange views on bilateral relations and international issues of mutual concern.

Li Xiannian To Visit 5 Countries

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) — Chinese President Li Xiannian and his wife will pay a state visit to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia and Madagascar beginning from the first half of March. This was announced by a Foreign Ministry spokesman at a weekly news briefing here this afternoon. President Li will be guest of the presidents of these five countries, the spokesman said.

["China Says Vietnam Is Still Playing Tricks" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) — The recent communique issued by the "conference of foreign ministers of Vietnam, Laos and the Heng Samrin regime" was condemned here today as being a Vietnamese political and diplomatic trick.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official told a press conference here that the communique, concocted by the Vietnamese authorities, was nothing new. It was merely another version of the remarks made by the Vietnamese minister without portfolio attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Vo Dong Giang, not long ago. This showed that the Vietnamese authorities had no intention of changing their policy of occupying Kampuchea. The official said it was known to all that the heart of the Kampuchean problem lay in Vietnam's invasion of that country. All other issues stemmed from that. Therefore, he said, the key to the solution lay in the termination of the Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Kampuchea, and the immediate withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops from the country. Vietnam had evaded this central issue by proposing a so-called solution through internal international negotiations, in an attempt to absolve itself from responsibility for the invasion and to seek recognition of the puppet regime of Kampuchea from the international community.

Offers Condolences on Shuttle

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) — A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman today expressed profound condolences on the explosion of the U.S. space shuttle, the "Challenger", and the death of the seven astronauts on board. Speaking at the weekly press briefing here this afternoon, the spokesman said Chinese President Li Xiannian sent a message of condolences to U.S. President Ronald Reagan in this regard.

TRADE WITH USSR, EASTERN EUROPE TO BE PROMOTED

[Report by Li Changshou: "China to Promote Trade With the USSR and East European During Seventh 5-Year Plan Period"]

[Text] The volume of trade between China and the Soviet Union as well as the Eastern European countries will be increased substantially during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan as compared with that in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

Since the beginning of the 1980's, trade between China and the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries has developed every year. The total volume of trade concluded according to agreements and supplementary agreements exceeded 10 billion Swiss Francs in 1985. So far China has signed 1986-1990 long-term trade agreements with all the above countries. Readjustments and supplements to these trade agreements regarding certain commodites may be made at annual trade talks in the coming years and and greater development in trade can be expected.

As far as export trade is concerned, apart from such traditional export items as light industrial products, textiles, local products, grain, oil, foodstuffs, mineral products, and chemical industrial products, China's electromechanical products will also be exported to the Soviet and Eastern European markets. As far as electronic products are concerned, Chinese color television sets, their component parts, receiver-recorders, and other electronic products will be exported to some Eastern European countries. Meanwhile, the exports to these countries of machine tools, measuring tools, cutting tools, handwork tools, small-sized agricultural machines, telecommunications equipment, and other mechanical products will also be expanded. With regard to the import trade, apart from general mechanical products, rolled steel, nonferrous metals, and chemical industrial products, China will also import some complete power generating units, coal mining complex equipment, and so on. In addition, China will also introduce technical transformation in some old plants in cooperation with the above-mentioned countries.

USSR, YAR DEPUTY PREMIERS DISCUSS PDRY SITUATION

[Text] Moscow, January 28 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union and the Yemen Arab Republic agreed today that the situation in the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen should return to normal as soon as possible and that any interference in its internal affairs is inadmissible.

According to a TASS report, the call by the two countries was made during a meeting here between Soviet First Deputy Premier Geydar A. Aliyev and visiting Arab Yemen Deputy Premier Muhammad Sa'id al-'Attar who arrived here yesterday to attend the first session of the Bilateral Economic and Technical Cooperation Commission. During the meeting Al-'Attar presented a letter from Arab Yemen President 'Ali 'Abdallah Salih to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Details of the letter have not been disclosed. Observers here believe the letter may contain details of the situation in Democratic Yemen.

REPORTAGE ON EXPLOSION OF SHUTTLE 'CHALLENGER'

Li Xiannian Sends Condolences

OW290814 Beijing XINHUA in English 0801 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian sent a message today to U.S. President Ronald Reagan, expressing his "deepest sympathy" over Tuesday's explosion of the space shuttle Challenger, which killed a woman teacher and all the crew members.

President Li said he was "shocked to learn the sad news of the tragic death" of the seven people aboard the space shuttle. "I wish to express, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, our deepest sympathy and condolences to the U.S. Government and people, and our heartfelt solicitude to the bereaved families," said Li.

PRC Embassy Message

["Chinese Embassy in the United States Sends a Message to the White House on the U.S. Space Shuttle Crash" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Washington, 28 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The Chinese Embassy in the United States sent a message to the White House this afternoon (28 January) on the crash of U.S. space shuttle "Challenger," expressing its profound sympathies and condolences to the U.S Government and the family members of the crew killed.

The message says: We were shocked to learn the sad news that the space shuttle "Challenger" had exploded, killing a crew of seven. This is a tremendous loss to the United States and the American people. The PRC Embassy in the United States hereby expresses its profound sympathies and condolences to the U.S. Government and the family members of the seven crew members killed in the accident.

The U.S. space shuttle "Challenger" exploded over the Atlantic at 1139 U.S. Eastern Standard Time today, only 1 and 1/2 minutes after it was launched from the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral. The seven astronauts on board the spacecraft, including a schoolteacher named Sharon Christa McAuliffe, were killed in the blast. This is the most serious spaceflight accident since the Apollo ground test disaster on 27 January 1967 in which three people were killed.

After the unfortunate accident happened, the three major U.S. television stations (ABC, NBC, and CBS) cancelled their scheduled programs. They repeatedly broadcast video coverage of the explosion of the "Challenger" and reported the biographical notes on the astronauts killed and the reactions of people from all walks of life on this sad accident.

Reagan Mourns Loss

[Text] Washington, January 28 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan has cancelled his State of the Union Address scheduled this evening and postponed it till next Tuesday because of the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger which killed the crew of seven on board.

Reagan made a nationally televised speech this afternoon to mourn the death of the seven astronauts, calling them "pioneers" of the U.S. space program. He said today's tragedy, the worst in U.S. space exploration history, [is] a "national loss." However, the U.S. President said the future "belongs to the brave" and pledged that the United States will continue its experiments in space and will continue its space shuttle flights with more scientists and teachers aboard.

XINHUA 'Wrap-Up'

OW290850 Beijing XINHUA in English 0826 GMT 29 Jan 86

["Wrap-up: Teacher, Six Crew Members Die in Challenger Tragedy" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) -- As 1,200 horrified students at the Concord High School in New Hampshire watched one of their teachers, Christa McAuliffe, hurtle into the sky aboard the televised liftoff of the space shuttle Challenger Tuesday morning, the giant U.S. spacecraft exploded killing McAuliffe and six crew members. According to press reports reaching here from the United States, less than two minutes after takeoff, crowds watching at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, witnessed a huge ball of fire appear in the blue sky over the launch pad. People in the crowd, which included members of Christa McAuliffe's family, were stunned into silence. One woman began crying, "It's not there, it's just not out there."

The disaster marks the first time in the history of U.S. space exploration that a manned U.S. spacecraft has exploded on takeoff and is the worst accident in the 25-year history of manned space exploration.

Along with McAuliffe, the first woman civilian to be included on a U.S. space mission, the six other crew members included three trained pilots and an expert on laser technology. McAuliffe, 37, mother of two children, was chosen from among 11,146 teachers who applied in NASA's first private-citizen-in-space competition. She became the first woman civilian to be included in a U.S. space mission. Having undergone 120 hours of training, McAuliffe planned to give two 15-minute lessons aboard the shuttle televised to millions of school children to increase student interest in science and technology.

The commander of the flight was Francis Scobee, 46, who was making his second space shuttle mission. After earning a degree from the University of Arizona, he was trained as a jet pilot in Air Force. Scobee was selected as an astronaut in 1979 and made his first space flight in 1984. Ronald McNair , 36, was an expert on lasers, holder of a Ph.D from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was chosen by NASA in 1979 and was also on a space flight mission in 1984. It was the first space flight for Challenger's pilot, Navy Commander Michael Smith, 40. He held a master's degree from the U.S. Navy Post-graduate School. The other woman on the flight was astronaut Judy Resnik, 36 and unmarried. She received a doctorate in electrical engineering from the University of Maryland. During her first space shuttle flight in 1984, Resnik used a robot arm to deliberately break away a chunk of ice built on the side of the space shuttle Discovery.

Air Force Lt. Col. Ellison S. Onizuka, 39, was recruited by NASA in 1978. He had earned two degrees from the University of Colorado. He was crew member on a secret Department of Defense space shuttle last January, the doomed flight was to have been his second mission. Crewman Gregory Jarvis was a 41-year-old aircraft engineer. He was a graduate of the State University of New York and the Northeastern University in Boston. His task on the mission was to conduct tests on the effects of weightlessness on fluid carried in tanks.

In Washington, no sooner had President Ronald Reagan heard of the news than he left a meeting with senior aides and hurried to watch in "stunned silence" as television networks replayed the explosion, which occurred at 11:40 a.m. EST.

Several aircraft and Navy vessels rushed to where debris from the space craft had fallen into the sea some 14 kilometers down range from the launch site. After ships and helicopters spent several hours searching the Atlantic off Cape Canaveral, Jesse Moore, who is in charge of manned space flights, told a press conference the crew had "practically no chance of survival." According to Moore, the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) refused to speculate about the possible causes of the disaster.

An earlier flight this month by the 108-ton spaceship Columbia was dubbed a "hard-luck" mission by observers after setting a record of seven delays in launching and landing because of bad weather and mechanical malfunctions. The observers predicted that as a result of those problems future shuttle flights might be delayed and this year's planned schedule of 15 space flights might have to be scrapped. Challenger's last flight was postponed twice before Tuesday's fatal launch took place. President Reagan, who decided to cancel his State of the Union speech scheduled for Tuesday night, said that there will be no more manned space missions until the cause of the disaster is established.

LI PENG MEETS U.S. BUSINESSMEN 28 JANUARY

[Text] Beijing, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Li Peng met two groups of American visitors on separate occasions here this afternoon. One is a delegation from the U.S. Electronic Data Systems Corporation led by its President Mort Meyerson, and the other is Jack Murphy, chairman of the board and president of the U.S. Dresser Industrial Inc., and his party.

While meeting the U.S. Electronic Data Systems Corporation delegation, the biggest computer information network company in U.S., Li Peng was given a briefing by Meyerson on the setting up of the network and application of computers. Since its arrival in Beijing on January 23, the delegation has already discussed with Chinese departments concerned on the cooperation in the improvement of the use and application of computers and the establishment of an information processing center in China.

Later, when he met Murphy, Li exchanged views with him on on the training of Chinese enterprises mangement personnel. Murphy is here to seek economic and technical cooperation with China. The Dresser Industrial Inc. mainly produces petroleum, chemical and mining machines. Present at the meeting was Richard Hung-chi Feng, advisor to the corporation and son of Feng Yuxian, the late Chinese patriotic general of the Kuomintang.

SHIJIE ZHISHI ON ATTITUDE TOWARD AFGHAN ISSUE

HK271422 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 2, 16 Jan 86 p 11

[Article by Wu Zu: "Show sincerity! -- Commenting on the Soviet Attitude Toward the Political Settlement of the Afghan Issue" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] From 16 to 20 December last year, the foreign minister of Pakistan held indirect talks in Geneva with his counterpart of the Karmal regime of Afghanistan. Given the Soviet refusal to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan, the talks were again deadlocked. Both sides agreed to hold indirect talks again in February or March of this year. The last talks represented the sixth round of indirect talks held between the foreign ministers of Pakistan and the Karmal regime since 1982 under sponsorship of the UN secretary general. In the three preceding rounds of indirect talks, the Soviet Union assumed a tough attitude and insisted that a troop withdrawal was an affair between the Soviet Union and Afghanistan, in which no one had the right to intervene. In the three rounds of indirect talks since last year, the Soviet Union indicated that the troop withdrawal problem could be discussed. But both sides reached fundamental agreement only on three areas -- noninterference by each other, the seeking of an international guarantee, and the repatriation of refugees.

In mid-November last year, when the U.S. and Soviet heads of state met in Geneva, the Soviet Union assumed a conciliatory attitude and kept saying in a publicity campaign that it favored a political settlement of the Afghan issue, was unwilling to post troops in Afghanistan, and wanted to give priority consideration to the problem of withdrawing troops from Afghanistan. Such things as its willingness to achieve a political settlement under the auspices of the UN were also stated. These gestures on the part of the Soviet Union gave rise to widespread speculation and controversy in the international community. It was even held in some quarters that there had been a change in the Soviet attitude toward the Afghan issue. But facts show that this has only been a more subtle approach than before, with no change in its fundamental stand.

FIRST, ON THE AFGHAN BATTLEFIELD, THE SOVIET UNION STEPPED UP ITS PACE OF MILITARY SUPPRESSION LAST YEAR. To wipe out the effective strength of the guerrilla force, wreck and destroy its base of operations and cut off its transportation links with the outside world, the Soviet Army and the Karmal Army since early last year have launched four major offensives against guerrilla bases of Herat, Panjsher, Konar and Hoziyah. The number of offensives, the scale of attacks, and the ruthlessness of the means of suppression have rarely been seen since the start of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In fighting, the Soviet Union has changed its practice of encircling guerrilla forces with the Karmal Army in the van, and Soviet troops now basically take the lead. It has also changed its previous strategy of running away after fighting. Instead, it has posted troops in important occupied areas preventing the resumption of guerrilla activities. To blockade border areas, the Soviet Army, in a break with normal practice has directly sent heavy forces to areas not far from the Afghanistan-Pakistan border. They have tried to annihilate guerrilla forces in encirclements, sometimes even crossing into Pakistan in pursuit.

In addition, the Soviet regime in Afghanistan has proposed autonomy for tribal areas and the convening of a meeting of border tribal areas and the tribes of the area of Hazarah. It has tried to win over tribal heads with heavy bribes, in order to make tribesmen cut off supplies and aid for guerrilla forces. This is in coordination with the Karmal regime's effort to wipe out the guerrillas.

Given the ruthless suppression and efforts to bribe and appease tribal areas, the Salang Highway leading from the capital of Kabul to the Soviet-Afghan border has basically been a smooth operation. The guerrilla base in Barikowt, Konar Province has been occupied, with its access roads blocked. All this has made things more difficult for the guerrilla forces. But the Soviet regime in Afghanistan has still not attained its goal. The guerrilla forces still have the support of the Afghan people. Last May, the seven groups representing the Afghan guerrillas overcame their differences and formed a new seven-group coalition (the Islamic Unity of the Mujaheidin of Afghanistan). They fought anti-encirclement battles together, avoiding direct attack from the enemy. They have basically maintained their effective strength and have dealt heavy blows to the enemy.

SECOND, THE SOVIET UNION HAS INCREASED PRESSURE ON PAKISTAN. From early last year to the end of October, the Soviet Army in Afghanistan launched more than 200 attacks in Pakistan's airspace with bombs and gunfire, twice as many as in 1984.

THIRD, IN THE POLITICAL SETTLEMENT OF THE AFGHAN ISSUE, THE SOVIET UNION HAS SHOWN SOME FLEXIBILITY IN ITS APPROACH. BUT NO SOLUTION WAS OBTAINED IN THE THREE ROUNDS OF THE INDIRECT TALKS BETWEEN PAKISTAN AND AFGHANISTAN LAST YEAR, WHERE THE KEY PROBLEM OF TROOP WITHDRAWALS WAS CONCERNED. The Soviet Union still insists on direct talks between Afghanistan and Pakistan, thus bringing talks to a deadlock.

Then, why should the Soviet Union have again assumed a positive attitude toward the political settlement of the Afghan issue? According to an analysis by the foreign press, its main purpose is to relieve the pressure from various quarters, improve its image in the Third World, abate verbal attacks against the Soviet Union in the international community, and switch from a passive to a positive position. Meanwhile, it is attempting to evade responsibility for its failure to withdraw its troops. It wants to prod Pakistan into recognizing the Karmal regime and consolidate its occupation of Afghanistan.

The Soviet Union has found itself in a tight spot on both the domestic and international fronts where the Afghan issue is concerned. Last November, the 40th UN General Assembly approved, by an overwhelming 122 votes, a resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops. The Soviet Union is quite isolated internationally. On the domestic front, the Soviet Union has shouldered a burden. Of its 120,000 troops stationed in Afghanistan in its 6 years of aggression, there have been more than 20,000 casualties. Annual spending of over $2 billion has been incurred. But only 30 percent of the territory of Afghanistan with 40 percent of its population has been brought under control. There has been an outflow of more than 4 million refugees from Afghanistan. The morale of the Soviet troops is very low. In the Soviet Union, words and acts suggestive of dissatisfaction have also been noted. Analysts hold that the only way for the Soviet Union to pull itself out of its current plight is the immediate withdrawal of its troops. Whoever started the trouble should end it. The Soviet Union should show sincerity about the political settlement of the Afghan issue and avoid dragging its feet.

HU YAOBANG TALKS WITH PRESIDENT OF KYODO

Sino-Japanese Ties

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang today praised Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and his Cabinet members for restraining from paying homage to Yasukuni Jinja shrine last autumn. Hu made the comment at a meeting with Shinji Sakai, president of Japan's KYODO NEWS SERVICE, at Zhongnanhai here this afternoon.

"China sets great store by its relations with Japan. To cherish the peaceful and friendly relations between the two countries, which come by not easily, the two sides should respect each other's national sentiments," he said. He said Chinese leaders hope to see stable development of trade between the two countries. The Chinese side will work to improve the quality of its export commodities as well as its trade system. "We also wish the Japanese side would make efforts to reduce substantially the imbalance in Sino-Japanese trade," he added. During the 70-minute meeting, Hu answered questions about Sino-Soviet relations, the relations between Japan and the Soviet Union, the situation in the Korean peninsula and China's political situation. Present on the occasion was Mo Qing, director-general of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY.

USSR Obstacles to Relations

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang today called on the Soviet Union to make substantive efforts to remove the three major obstacles to the development of Sino-Soviet relations. The three obstacles are the stationing of large Soviet troops along the Sino-Mongolian and Sino-Soviet border, Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and Soviet support of Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea. Hu pointed out, it is China's sincere hope that the Soviet Union makes substantive efforts to remove the three obstacles hindering the normalization of relations between China and the Soviet Union, thereby pushing forward bilateral relations.

Hu made these remarks at a meeting with Shinji Sakai, president of KYODO NEWS SERVICE of Japan, here this afternoon. On the exchange of visit between Chinese and Soviet foreign ministers, Hu said: "It depends on the development of the situation. It's hard to predict now," Referring to the relations between Japan and the Soviet Union, Hu said China welcomes the recent meeting of Japanese and Soviet foreign ministers, and hopes the two countries will solve their questions left over from history in a fair and reasonable way. "China also hopes that the improvement of Japanese-Soviet relations will contribute to the peace and stability in Northeast Asia," he noted. Hu expressed regrets over the large-scale military exercise staged by the United States and South Korea, which, he said, is "unwise".

Oct Plenum, Deng's Health

[Text] Beijing, January 29 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party will meet in October for the sixth plenary session, General Secretary Hu Yaobang announced here today. The October meeting will decide on the agenda for the 12th national party congress scheduled for late September and early October in 1987.

Hu said so at a meeting with Shinji Sakai, president of the Japanese news service, KYODO, here this afternoon. In response to Sakai's question, Hu said Deng Xiaoping is in excellent health. Deng made a speech on combating unhealthy tendencies at the January 17 meeting of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau, Hu added.

NAKASONE RECEIVES GREETINGS FROM PRC LEADERS

OW281909 Beijign XINHUA in English 1834 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] Tokyo, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone today met Zhang Xiangshan, adviser of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party, who is here to attend commemorative activities on the 10th anniversary of Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai's death. During the meeting,the Japanese leader expressed satisfaction with the second session of the Sino-Japanese Committee for Friendship in the 21st Century held in Beijing and Dalian last year. He said the next session of the committee to foster Sino-Japanese friendship will be held in Japan this year.

The two sides described the meeting as cordial and friendly. Zhang coveyed greetings from Chinese leaders Deng Xiaoping, Hu Yaoband and Zhao Ziyang to Nakasone. He also communicated to Nakasone a message from Zhou Enlai's widow Deng Yingchao expressing gratitude to Nakasone for his message commemorating Zhou Enlai's death. Premier Zhou Enlai died in Beijing on January 8, 1976.

DPRK WANTS PENINSULA 'NUCLEAR FREE ZONE'

[Text] Pyongyang, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Korea will launch an anti-imperialism, anti-war and anti-nuclear campaign this year in an effort to make the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone, the newspaper DEMOCRATIC KOREA said in an editorial today. To prevent nuclear war is an urgent issue that people all over the world should work on together, the editorial said. The editorial suggested that all people, regardless of their political views, religious beliefs and governmental systems, should support anti-war and anti-nuclear activities, as well as peace efforts.

In a joint statement issued last December, the Workers' Party of Korea and 20 other political parties and social organizations said they hoped the Korean peninsula would be made a nuclear-free zone. The editorial stressed that the United States should respond to the tripartite talks proposed by the North side and withdraw its troops and nuclear weapons from South Korea to prevent the danger of a nuclear war.

COMMENTARY VIEWS INDOCHINESE MINISTERS MEETING

[Short commentary: "An Old Fraud, a New Trick"]

[Text] The so-called 12th meeting of foreign ministers of the "three Indochinese countries" was held in Vientiane from 23 to 24 January under the manipulation and direction of the Vietnamese authorities. The communique issued by the meeting declared: It is necessary to speed up the "process of dialogue," so that "a political resolution of the Cambodian issue can be reached soon" and "Southeast Asia turned into a peaceful and stable region." However, throughout the communique, we cannot find a shred of sincerity in the seeking of a political solution to the Cambodian issue. They are sticking to the so-called "stand based on five points" and those unreasonable demands that have long been despised. In fact, the Vietnamese authorities have always refused to withdraw all their invasion troops from Cambodia, stubbornly adhering to their stand of aggression against Cambodia, while trying in vain to deceive the world media by the trick of a "process of dialogue" and "political solution."

Of the so-called "three Indochinese countries," one is the arch-criminal which launched and is currently engaging in the war of aggression against Cambodia, and another is the puppet regime propped up by Vietnam. This war evoked by them is exactly the greatest danger to peace in Southeast Asia. But now they chatter about "establishing peace and stability in Southeast Asia" and seeking a "political solution" to the Cambodian issue. This is indeed a gross mockery. One must note that the communique of this meeting of foreign ministers of the "three Indochinese countries" claimed: Cambodia's internal problems must be solved through negotiations between the so-called "People's Republic of Kampuchea," a puppet regime, and the "various Khmer opposition factions and individuals, with the aim of finding a way to realize national reconciliation based on the prerequisite that the Pol Pot clique is excluded," as well as to effect the withdrawal of the Vietnam troops. It is quite obvious that the Vietnamese authorities, prating about a "political solution" and "national reconciliation," want to gain legitimacy for the Cambodian puppet regime by deceiving the world, undermine the unity of the three Democratic Kampuchean factions, disintegrate the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, and thus keep Cambodia under long-term occupation and control with the Cambodian puppet regime as their agent. What smug calculations by the Vietnamese aggressors!

The Cambodian issue arose from Vietnam's armed invasion of a sovereign state. Therefore, the only solution to the issue is the complete and unconditional withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops, followed by the exercise of the right of self-determination by the Cambodian people free from external intervention. The resolutions on the Cambodian issue adopted by seven UN General Assemblies have represented a strong demand by the world people, namely, the Vietnamese authorities must withdraw their troops from Cambodia. This is the prerequisite for any political solution to the Cambodian issue. Neither the Vietnamese authorities nor their supporters can ever deceive world media by harping about "dialogue" and "political solution" and by evading the crux of the issue.

It must be pointed out that the Vietnamese authorities are actually thinking of a "military solution" while talking about a "political solution" and "dialogue." They continue to deploy troops to launch dry-season offensives again and again, and their plan to withdraw their troops by 1990 is based on their very dream of completely wiping out the Democratic Kampuchean patriotic Armed Forces in 5 years.

The communique of this foreign ministerial meeting of the "three Indochinese countries" also said that they "unswervingly cherish and wish to resume soon the long friendship with the Chinese people." Meanwhile, however, the Vietnamese authorities once again launched an anti-Chinese drive, wantonly attacking China's domestic and foreign policies. The Vietnamese also distributed documents in the United Nations viciously attacking China with venomous slander. Is this the "sincerity" about holding "dialogue" that the Vietnamese authorities are always declaring!

This clumsy farce enacted through the foreign ministerial meeting of the so-called "three Indochinese countries" will only expose once again the evil intentions of the Vietnamese aggressor.

DK Decries as 'Hoax'

OW281238 Beijing XINHUA in English 1109 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 28 (XINHUA) -- The Coalition Government of Domestic Kampuchea denounced in a statement the meeting of foreign ministers of Vietnam, Laos and the Hanoi-backed Heng Samrin regime as a hoax, radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today. The statement, issued yesterday, said the meeting was another step in getting public backing to legalize Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea.

The three foreign ministers at their 12th meeting held on January 23 and 24 in Vientiane, the capital of Laos, discussed the Kampuchea issue. A communique issued at the meeting's conclusion, said 1990 is still the time set by Vietnam for withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea. The statement said it is Vietnam's intention to annex Kampuchea to its manipulated "Indochina federation" by every means. In the past seven years, the statement said, the Vietnamese have killed tens of thousands of Kampuchean people with conventional and chemical weapons and by imposing a "famine policy" on the Kampucheans. At the same time, Hanoi has sent 700,000 Vietnamese to settle in Kampuchea. The statement also noted that the United Nations has adopted several resolutions calling for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and to let the Kampuchea solve their own problems. The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea also has repeatedly demanded the Vietnamese withdrawal. But, the Vietnamese authorities have ignored these pleas, the statement added.

DK FORCES INFLICT HEAVY CASUALTIES ON VIETNAMESE

LIBYA SEEKS DIRECT TALKS WITH UNITED STATES

OW280726 Beijing XINHUA in English 0655 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] Cairo, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Libyan Foreign Minister 'Ali al-Turayki today said that Libya is seeking direct talks with the United States to resolve the current crisis, according to reports from Tripoli. 'Ali al-Turayki told the press that Libya has invited Ronald Reagan's administration to meet with the government of Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi to prevent an escalation of the current confrontation. "We are in favour of dialogue with any country except Israel," he said.

'Ali al-Turayki expressed approval of Moroccan King Hassan II's offer to mediate between Libya and the U.S. He again denied any Libyan involvement in the terrorist attacks in Rome and Vienna airports at the end of last year, saying "we disapprove of such acts." He warned that if the U.S. Sixth Fleet crossed the territorial limit claimed by Libya on parallel 32.5 in the Gulf of Sidra "it would create a very dangerous situation for which the U.S. would bear full responsibilities." But he added, so far the Sixth Fleet has not crossed the line and "I hope they will not do so." The U.S. and a number of Western countries have refused to recognise Libya's claim to the Gulf of Sidra. The U.S. Sixth Fleet is conducting a week of naval air exercises in the adjacent area. The foreign minister also assured American workers and companies operating in Libya that they would be welcomed to remain if they chose to ignore U.S. Administration's order calling on them to leave the country. There are some 1,500 American oil workers and engineers and dozens of American companies are working in Libya's oil industry. U.S. President Reagan has imposed economic sanctions against Libya for alleged Libya's involvement inthe two terrorist attacks. But, most Western European countries have declined to cooperate with the U.S.

PDRY PRIME MINISTER PLEDGES 'NONINTERFERENCE'

[Text] Djibouti, January 27 (XINHUA) -- South Yemen's Prime Minister Haydar al-'Attas (?today) pledged to continue a foreign policy of non-interference and to promote ties with the Soviet Union, Ethiopia and other Arab countries. In a television address last night, he praised president Abdallah Salih of Arab Yemen for his "positive stand" on the latest developments in his country and promised to work for better relations with the neighboring Arab state. "We will not change our foreign policy. We will work to improve ties with Etihipia, Moscow and states in the Arabian Peninsula with whom we have mutual interests," he added. According to informed sources who have just arrived here from Aden, tension is mounting in some provinces and fighting continues between the supporters of 'Ali Nasir Muhammad and those of Al-'Attas.

DENG'S 17 JAN SPEECH RELAYED TO DISCIPLINE MEETING

HK290617 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1100 GMT on 28 January begins its regular evening newscast with a 2.5-minute film clip on the CPC Central Discipline Inspection Commission's 28 January Seventh Plenary Session held in Beijing. The film shows the commission's Second Secretary Wang Heshou addressing the session and "relaying Comrade Deng Xiaoping's speech delivered at a 17 January meeting of the Political Bureau Standing Committee, and Comrade Chen Yun's written instructions on issues about senior cadres using limousines." The 2.5-minute report does not give details of Deng's speech.

The film then shows the Commission's Permanent Secretary Han Guang addressing several hundred people at the plenary session held in an unidentified conference room in Beijing. The following is the full text of the 2.5 minute report:

[Begin recording] [Announcer] According to a report filed by our station reporters (Yan Pingzhou) and (Chen Zhen), the Seventh Plenary Session of the CPC Central Discipline Inspection Commission was held today in Beijing. Central Discipline Inspection Commission Second Secretary Wang Heshou relayed Comrade Deng Xiaoping's speech delivered at a 17 January meeting of the Political Bureau Standing Committee, and Comrade Chen Yun's written instruction on issues about senior cadres using limousines. Central Discipline Inspection Commission Permanent Secretary Han Guang relayed the CPC Central Committee Secretariat's instructions on the Central Discipline Inspection Commission's report, and read out the outline for the report on issues about rectifying party style. He said: The recent meeting of cadres of central organs held by the CPC Central Committee Secretariat called on central organs and leading cadres to set good examples in the course of rectifying party style. The central authorities have showed the greatest determination in improving party style fundamentally, and have adopted effective measures. This session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission proposes to implement further the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and the spirit of the meeting of cadres of central organs, and to focus on discussing ways of checking unhealthy trends and rectifying party style.

The session established the Central Discipline Inspection Commission's major tasks for the year: This year, it is imperative to concentrate forces on relentlessly checking several unhealthy trends; it is imperative to crack down severely on speculation, swindling, smuggling, traffic in smuggled goods, bribery, accepting bribes, and other illegal activities and criminal offenses in the economic field; and it is imperative to successfully conduct education in party style for party members and to rigorously strengthen discipline.

The session noted: To fulfill the tasks for this year, it is imperative to promote a continuous improvement in our work. The central authorities, party committees at all levels, and party organizations of all departments must all pay special attention to problems concerning party style so as to bring about a situation in which the whole party pays special attention to party style. In checking unhealthy trends, it is imperative to do well in stressing major, important and typical cases and focal points. With regard to those who shut their eyes to serious problems that harm socialist construction, it is imperative to investigate and affix the responsibility of relevant party organizations for such problems. We must conduct criticism and self-criticism, perfect regular activities of party organizations, strengthen ties among political, legal, organizational, and propaganda departments, and continuously enhance the quality of discipline inspection cadres. During the session, comrades attending the session will discuss and examine three documents, namely, the outline for the report on issues about rectifying party style, a draft resolution on certain issues concerning the rectification of party members' ideology and style of work under the new circumstances, and a draft circular on strengthening discipline.

Responsible comrades of discipline inspection departments from some provinces, municipalities, autonomous regions, central and state organs, and the Military Commission attended the session as nonvoting delegates. [end recording]

'SHOWY DISPLAYS' BY LEADING CADRES CRITICIZED

[Commentator's article: "The Masses Are Watching Us"]

[Text] For the wedding of his son, a leading cadre at the bureau level in a certain place feasted with his guests around 76 tables, used more than a dozen cars, and received cash gifts exceeding 10,000 yuan. And a restaurant had to stop doing business with the public on the day.

An assistant manager of a company in a municipality of a province paraded his wealth for the funeral arrangements of his mother and also received a large number of funeral gifts. The funeral procession covered scores of kilometers with eight cars and a large funeral band. All the spectators looked askance at it.

The deputy head of a county died of disease. His funeral arrangements lasted 4 days and cost 4,340 yuan.

The above are complaints made by the masses in a written form to the central departments concerned, exposing unsound practices carried out by some leading cadres. These cadres went in for showy displays for the funerals or marriages of their relatives or their leaders; they even used them as a pretext to receive gifts. All this has created a very bad impression among the masses. Some people sneered at it as "ill-gotten wealth," others sighed with feeling and said it was "bitterly disappointing."

Arranging funerals or weddings is in fact a personal affair. The government only advocates cremation and encourages people to make funeral arrangements simple, and it does not interfere in these personal affairs. As the people's income goes up, when some families prepare for the wedding of their sons or daughters, they want to invite their relatives and friends to a small feast. This is quite natural and normal in human relationships. However, our party cadres, especially some leading cadres, invite large numbers of people to a grant feast. They want to give themselves airs, but actually they defame our party. They fill their pockets with large amount of cash gifts, but they damage the image of our party. For this reason, this is not a personal affair, but an important matter concerning party style.

Some comrades say that they have worked in a place for decades; they certainly know a large number of people around them. When they make funeral arrangements or prepare for weddings, they would have no excuse if they failed to make these ceremonies presentable, and they would have no excuse for refusing gifts from friends. Some comrades even describe it as saying "courtesy demands reciprocity" and allege that "their relations with the masses are good." This is really gross deception. What do you mean "courtesy demands reciprocity?" People present gifts to your faces but shout abuse behind your backs. Do you really not hear this abuse? If people say this is in fact blackmail in a disguised form, can your argue with them? What do you mean "your relations with the masses are good?" If you are not "high-ranking officials," can you have such good "relations?" If we establish relations with the masses in this way, can we really improve party conduct and make a success of the four modernizations?

The broad masses of the people are very discontented with such malpractices by a few cadres, and they are submitting written statements to the central authorities to expose these unhealthy tendencies. This shows that they trust our party and they assume the rights conferred on them by the state Constitution. In improving party conduct, we launch no campaigns and want no one to make a self-criticism so as to pass the test, but we cannot refuse supervision from the masses. The masses are watching us. If anyone conducts unsound practices or violates discipline and the law, can he escape the observation of the masses?

At a meeting of the staff of departments directly under the party Central Committee and the State Council, Comrade Hu Yaobang, on behalf of the party Central Committee, solemnly declared: According to our party's rules and regulations, all honest and fair-minded comrades inside and outside the party have the right to accurately report to the party Central Committee any serious dereliction of duty or violation of laws and discipline conducted by our party organizations at any level. This is a "solemn declaration" from the party Central Committee, not chitchat. It shows the firm determination of our party to rectify the party's style of work. It also tells us: The road from the masses to the party Central Committee is accessible.

PUNISHING CRIMINALS THROUGH LEGAL MEANS URGED

[Commentator's article: "Those Who Commit Crimes Should Be Punished Under the Law"]

[Text] Recently, some major cases have been handled in various localities, and some powerful people in high official posts have been punished according to the law, as they were involved in these cases. This conforms with the will of the party and the people and should be affirmed. Facts have clearly shown us that the problems of some party members and cadres have become serious. Their malpractices should not be regarded as mistakes that they committed due to the lack of experience in work or the lack of a correct understanding of the new situation. These people did not accidentally take a wrong step in the reform explorations; rather, they have been deeply corrupted by decadent ideologies and have abandoned communist ideals. They have even sold their souls, disregarded the interests of the state and the people, and acted beyond the limits of the law. They are no longer the people's public servants; instead, they have degenerated into guilty people condemned by the public. Their perverse acts constitute a main source of unhealthy tendencies in society and a crucial reason why the fundamental turn for the better in our party style could not be implemented in the past. If their corrupt practices were allowed to develop unchecked, our cause of economic reforms, our socialist modernization program, and our socialist democracy and legal system would fail.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping recently pointed out in unequivocal terms that the correction of unhealthy tendencies "should mainly rely on two means -- the means of education and the means of enforcing the law." Most cadres in our party are good or comparatively good cadres. In the new historical period, how should they further improve party style and set a good example for people throughout the country? The basic way to achieve this purpose is to require them to intensify their study of Marxist theory and receive further education. However, for those corrupt cadres whose problems are so serious that their cases have fallen into another category, they have gone so far as to reject any criticism and education; they are no longer redeemable. So legal action must be taken against them. Those who committed crimes must be punished according to the law! This must not be taken lightly, and these people must not be forgiven under the pretext of "just this time." No person is allowed to "turn serious problems into minor ones and turn minor problems into nothing." In the handling of these cases, the criminals should be brought to court for trial, and inner-party disciplinary or administrative disciplinary measures should not be substituted for legal procedures.

We should severely punish those party cadres who have used their power to seek private gain, violating criminal law to a serious extent and causing serious consequences. We should do this just as we executed Liu Qingshan and Zhang Zishan in the early 1950's. Without taking such severe action, we will not be able to rectify our party style, to warn others against following these bad examples, to educate more people, and to arouse the enthusiasm of the masses for our construction.

The general public is glad to see that we take legal action to punish the criminal offenders inside our party. This shows we are correct in taking these actions. But we must point out here that some lawbreakers have not been punished as they deserve. There are many reasons: For example, a considerable number of people, especially some leaders, have not established in their minds the concept of acting according to the law. They are used to substituting inner-party disciplinary measures or administrative measures for legal procedures. In some localities, the handling of criminal cases involving powerful or influential people is obstructed by the authorities concerned or by various social "connections." In addition, some leading cadres indiscriminateiy apply the principle of "being strict in ideological education and being lenient in disciplinary and legal measures" to all cases, and some people have a prejudiced idea that party cadres will merely commit mistakes and will never commit crimes. Now the party central leadership has explicitly pointed out that law and discipline must be strictly enforced and the enforcement of the law and the conduct of ideological education should be simultaneously carried out in the course of setting aright the party style. To achieve this purpose, our comrades in the judicial departments should redouble their efforts.

Of course, when we emphasize the necessity of punishing criminal offenders according to the law, we must base all legal actions on facts, and all legal decisions must be in line with the law. We never mean that we will start arresting and bringing people to court indiscriminately. Through many years of efforts in building the legal system, we have now enacted a series of laws, regulations, and legal procedures. They are effective weapons for us to protect the people and to punish criminal offenders. All actions must conform with the law; all laws must be enforced strictly; and all lawbreakers must be punished. Only thus can we effectively crack down on criminal activities and can we deal blows at criminals accurately, effectively, and severely. Otherwise, we will let off evildoers, wrong good people, and do harm to our cause. Our comrades in the judicial departments must pay close attention to this point.

LIAOWANG DETAILS CRIME, PUNISHMENT EXAMPLES

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Some cadres have made contributions and are competent in their work, but if their problems are serious, we should not be softhearted toward them and should not condone them under the pretext of "just this time." This practice will in fact abet the corruption of cadres. Now we should act like Zhuge Liang who "executed his beloved General Ma Su in tears," and should resolutely investigate and punish those people who should be punished according to the law and facts without being influenced by people's entreaties for the lawbreakers.

This is the viewpoint of a signed article carried by LIAOWANG weekly in its issue No 4, published tomorrow.

Since the CPC National Conference of Party Delegates in September last year, a number of major cases have been handled in the course of rectifying party style:

-- The Beijing Municipal CPC Committee and the party's municipal Discipline Inspection Commission have seriously handled five bureau-level cadres committing economic crimes and violating law and discipline.

Among these people are Yin Zhinong, former deputy manager of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, expelled from the party and sentenced to 6 years' imprisonment for gaining 8,000 yuan by illegally reselling steel products; Ma Xueliang, former party committee secretary and director of the Beijing Municipal Public Utilities Bureau, dismissed from all official posts inside and outside the party, expelled from the party, and arrested for being derelict in his duties and taking more than 3,5000 yuan in bribes and conniving in illegal economic activities of the municipal gas company; and Wu Yutian, former party committee member and deputy general manager of the municipal foreign trade general company, dismissed from all official posts inside and outside the party for taking bribes from Hong Kong businessmen and causing $110,000 in economic losses to the state.

— Yu Xicang, former party secretary and manager of the Guangdong Provincial Medicine Company, and some other cadres made use of their functions in handling the export of Chinese herbal medicine to accept such bribes as color TV sets, cameras, and bicycles from Hong Kong businessmen in exchange for giving opportunities for them to gain unfair and illegal profits. Their corrupt practice caused more than HK$10 million in economic losses to the state. These corrupt cadres have been sentenced to imprisonment for life or for a set term.

— Fujian Province cracked a major speculation and fraud case and Du Guozhen, the principal criminal in this case, was arrested. In this case, 21 party and government cadres took bribes from Du and gave the green light to Du's swindling activities. These cadres have all been punished according to state law and party discipline. They include Liu Ashun, deputy administrator of the Ningde Prefectural People's Government; Hu Liangji, former party secretary of Xiapu County; Wu Jincai, deputy administrator of a suburban district of Fuzhou City; and Zheng Tingcan, director of the law court in Gulow District, Fuzhou City.

The LIAOWANG article says: The problems in party style are related to many aspects in society. The rectification of party style must rely on joint efforts of the whole party. This is particularly true in the handling of major cases. The major cases often involve many departments and units. All relevant departments and units, especially their leading bodies, must lend their active cooperation in order to clearly investigate and properly handle these cases. At present, this point has been noticed by party committees at all levels and in all localities. For example, the central and local party, government, judicial, and discipline inspection departments have joned hands in investigating and handling the case of Du Guozhen in Fujian. The article also says: In recent months, some results have been achieved in the rectification of party style and in the enforcement of party discipline, and some experience has been accumulated in this regard. More and more cadres have strengthened their confidence in effecting a fundamental turn for the better in our party style. They dare to uphold the principles and show no mercy to lawbreaking activities. Many localities and units have adopted effective measures and methods. Because the leading cadres in some localities and units have raised their consciousness and boosted their morale, they now dare to deal with powerful people and settle knotty problems and cases. Those well-built criminal "fortresses" have been destroyed one after another.

BAN YUE TAN CITES POLITICAL, SOCIAL ACHIEVEMENTS

[Editorial department of BAN YUE TAN: "Reference Materials: The 70 Achievements Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jan (XINHUA) — 1. Since the crushing of the "gang of four," and especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have accomplished the arduous task of setting our guidelines and thinking on the right course and have achieved significant victories in restoring order to actual operations on all fronts, effecting about a great historical change.

2. Ideologically, we have smashed the long-standing highly restrictive bonds of dogmatism and personality cults and reinstated the Marxist ideological line of seeking truth from facts. We have restored the original feature of Mao Zedong Thought, and upheld and developed Mao Zedong Thought under new historical conditions.

3. We have ended long-standing social unrest, and introduced a lively political situation marked by stability and unity. Socialist democracy and law have been gradually improved, equality and unity among all nationalities have been strengthened, and the patriotic united front has been further broadened. The current period is one of best since the founding of the republic.

4. The leading bodies of party and state organs at all levels have been readjusted, reorganized, and consolidated. The restructuring of the party Central Committee and the State Council, as well as of leading organs of various provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions has been accomplished. Leading organs at all levels have been replenished with a large number of more revolutionary cadres; they are better educated, younger in average age, and professionally more competent. The succession of new cadres in leading bodies at all levels has been greatly accelerated.

5. In 1982, the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC deliberated on and adopted the new Constitution, which is a sound cardinal law in our country's legislative history. The state's legal system has become more consolidated with the introduction of more than 300 important laws, including such fundamental laws as the criminal law, the law of criminal procedures, the civil law, the inheritance law, and so forth.

6. With the open trial of the 10 principal culprits of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, and the expulsion of Kang Sheng and Xie Fuzhi from the party, we have destroyed the counterrevolutionary political force running rampant for a decade.

7. We have earnestly rehabilitated cadres and people persecuted by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the "Great Cultural Revolution," and corrected the mistakes of broadening the antirightist scope and opposing the right deviationist tendency.

8. We have implemented policies toward Taiwan compatriots, families of compatriots in Taiwan, and over 400,000 former Kuomingtang defectors, removed the labels of over 4.4 million people branded as landlords and rich peasants; and corrected the mistake of mislabelling 710,000 small traders and handicraftsmen as capitalists.

9. Direct election of people's representatives has been expanded to county-level units. Direct county-level elections were held in 1981.

10. A conspicuous change for the better in public order has been achieved following the stern rebuff dealt to serious economic crimes and criminal offenses. China has one of the lowest crime rates in the world.

11. We have corrected the bias against intellectuals, reaffirming that intellectuals are part of the Chinese working class on the forefront of modernization. Respecting intellectuals and proficient personnel has gradually been worked into a new social consciousness.

12. The PLA has achieved remarkable successes in its revolutionization, modernization, and regularization and in defending the frontier areas, safeguarding national security, and contributing to socialist construction. A decision was made to reduce the PLA strength by 1 million people. Border defense units have won major victories in self-defense counterattacks against Vietnam.

13. As a result of promoting socialist ethics, a large number of units, villages, and townships known for their socialist culture, as well as five good families have come to the fore on all fronts in all regions.

14. A large-scale party rectification was launched in the country. With the exception of the rural areas, where party rectification has just begun, over 20 million party members in country-level units and above throughout the country participated in party rectification, thus heightening their party spirit and political consciousness and improving party conduct.

15. Correct principles and policies toward Taiwan have been set in the NPC Standing Committee's "Message to Taiwan Compatriots," and in the 9-point principles for the settlement of the Taiwan issue. The proposal for establishing postal, trade, and communications ties with Taiwan and the "one country, two systems" concept have triggered a strong response in Taiwan and received extensive support from Chinese nationals living overseas.

16. The formulation of the law of regional autonomy of minority nationalities and the adoption of special policies toward national minorities have greatly expedited economic and cultural development in regions inhabited by national minorities. National unit, has been strengthened, and ties between various nationalities have entered a new stage of development.

17. The Sixth 5-Year Plan was overfulfilled in all sectors. The targets set for the output of major industrial and agricultural products were fulfilled or overfulfilled 1 or 2 years ahead of schedule. A new situation marked by sustained, steady, and coordinated development appeared in the national economy, which has been vigorously growing. The gross national product exceeded 1.5 trillion yuan in 1985, averaging an annual growth of over 10 percent during the 5-year period. National income exceeded 610 billion yuan, averaging an annual growth of over 9 percent during the 5-year period. During the 5-year period, financial receipts grew at an average of over 10 percent, significantly exceeding the anticipated 170 billion yuan. The successful accomplishment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan has laid a solid material foundation for our country's economic takeoff.

18. The proportion between heavy and light industries, a fundamental issue long unresolved in our country's economic construction, has become more coordinated in recent years. Generally speaking, agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry have now each contributed one-third of the nation's gross industrial and agricultural output value; light industry and heavy industry have now each contributed half of the gross industrial output value.

19. Generally, the task of striving for a fundamental improvement of the nation's financial and economic situation has been achieved. Beginning in 1982, the state's decreasing revenue began to grow. In 1985, revenue and expenditure were balanced and deficit-free. It is expected that total state revenue and nonbudgetary funds of local authorities, departments, and enterprises in 1985 will exceed 300 billion yuan, or nearly 100 percent more than in of 1980.

20. The gross industrial output value in 1985 was 823.8 billion yuan, an increase of more than 100 percent over 1978.

21. During the first 4 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, state-owned units invested a total of 526 billion yuan in fixed assets, and acquired 368 billion yuan in new fixed assets. A total of 469 large and medium-sized projects were completed.

22. Energy production continues to grow. At the end of 1985, the nation's coal output ranked second in the world, and the power and crude oil output ranked fifth and sixth, respectively.

23. Significant growth has been registered in communications, postal, and telecommunications services. The converted railway traffic [tie lu huan suan zhou zhuan liang 6993 6424 2255 4615 0719 6567 6852] exceeded 1 trillion metric ton-kilometers in 1985. Four major electrified railways have been commissioned. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, over 80 new air routes were inaugurated, and they completed an aggregate 4 billion metric ton-kilometers of air transportation, up 167 percent over that of the Fifth 5-Year Plan period. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, 54 new deep-water berths, each capable of accommodating 10,000 metric ton-class or larger ships, were built, increasing handling capacity by over 94 million metric tons each year.

24. Significant progress has been achieved in the electronics industry. The total value achieved in the electronics industry in 1985 is expected to be 200 percent higher than the target set for the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. The average growth during the period was at least 22 percent. The technology of producing a new generation of electronic goods has been mastered.

25. The steel industry has achieved further growth. Steel output in 1985 reached 46.7 million metric tons, up 7 percent over 1984. The first-stage project of the Shanghai Baoshan Steel Complex, with late-1970 world technology, has been commissioned for production. In addition to supplying over 4 million metric tons of steel to the state each year, thus alleviating the state's steel shortage, the plant can also advance the technology of the nation's steel industry and the manufacture of steel equipment.

26. A new way of opening up to the outside world has been established. In addition to the four special economic zones, namely Shenzhen, Xiamen, Zhuhai, and Shantou, 14 coastal cities -- Dalian, Qinhuangdao, Tianjin, Yantai, Qingdao, Lianyungang, Nantong, Shanghai, Ningbo, Wenzhou, Fuzhou, Guangzhou, Zhanjiang, and Beihai -- have become open cities, and Hainan Island as well as the Chang Jiang and Zhu Jaing deltas and the Ziamen-Zhangzhou-Quanzhou triangular region has also become an open economic zone.

27. By the end of 1985, $20 billion of foreign capital was spent on establishing 1,800 joint ventures, and in importing thousands of advanced technologies and key equipment into the country, essential to upgrading the quality and increasing the variety of the products from Chinese enterprises as well as to improving their economic performance.

28. China has established economic and trade relations with more than 170 countries and regions. The nation's import and export total reached $49.77 billion in 1984, an increase of 141 percent over 1978. In terms of export volume, China now ranks 16th in the world, having risen from 32d place in 1978.

29. While public ownership occupies an absolutely dominant position, various economic forms have appeared. By June 1985, over 40,000 small state-operated commercial enterprises had become collectively operated, over 5,000 had become collectively owned, and over 5,000 others had been collectively leased. After the change in economic and operational methods, business volume, as well as the amount of profits and taxes turned over to the state, has increased significantly.

30. Industrially, the reform of the planned administrative system has reduced the scope of the guidance plan and market regulation, profit delivery has been replaced by tax payment, enterprises have been granted greater authority in making decisions, and experiments have been carried out in selected factories in allowing their directors take charge of operations. All this has increased the enterprises' vitality noticeably.

31. The economic administrative system marked by barriers between higher and lower levels and between departments and regions has been smashed. Economic and technical cooperation has been carried out extensively between various regions and various trades and professions; horizontal economic ties have been developing vigorously. During the period between 1983 and October of 1985, there were over 60,000 economic and technical cooperation projects between various regions and between regions and departments in the country, giving rise to various new forms of operation, including integrated economic establishments in urban areas, transprofessional and transregional integrated enterprises, technical markets, and networks providing consultative services.

32. In the first 4 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, living quarters with a total floor space of over 430 million square meters were built in urban areas, or 107.5 million square meters each year. This was nearly 600 percent higher than the 18 million square meters of new living quarters built each year during the decade of the "Great Cultural Revolution."

33. Tourism registered rapid growth during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. Between 1981 and October of 1985, the number of tourists visiting China exceeded 52 million. During the 1978-84 period, the amount of foreign exchange earned from tourism exceeded $5 billion.

34. A multiform system of contracted responsibilities based on households with remuneration linked to output has been introduced in rural areas. This great socialist pioneering undertaking of the Chinese peasants has fundamentally changed the old system that restricted agricultural productivity and has charted a new course for developing socialist agriculture with distinctive Chinese characteristics.

35. A breakthrough has been made in agricultural production. Bumper grain harvests have grown, for 6 successive years, by an average of 34 billion jin annually. The total grain output in 1984 broke the 800-billion-jin mark, surpassing the 1978 record by 205.1 billion jin. Cotton production in that year totaled 120 million dan, breaking the 40-million-dan-per-year record which lasted from 1958 through 1978. The problem of food and clothing has been basically resolved.

36. Specialized households have mounted the historical stage as forerunners in commodity production. Because of their relatively high labor productivity and the rather large percentage of marketable products from their total production, these households have become a major force in rural economic development. Now the number of rural specialized households in our country has increased to 4.25 million, or approximately 2.3 percent of the total households in rural areas.

37. In rural areas a variety of cooperative economic systems have begun. A two-tiered operational structure combining family operations and cooperative operation has appeared. Village and township enterprises, which include collectively-run, jointly run, and individually-run enterprises, have also appeared. In addition, more than 460,000 new integrated economic establishments have emerged, while rural supply and marketing cooperatives and credit cooperatives have gradually resumed their cooperative nature. All these have contributed to a radical change of the old, solely collective economic mode characterized by "collective labor and centralized management and distribution."

38. The rural economy has become increasingly vigorous in the course of being reformed. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the gross value of agricultural production increased at an average rate of 10.8 percent annually, far exceeding the average annual growth rate of 3.2 percent registered in the 26 years preceding 1978. In 1985 the gross value of agricultural production was more than 370 billion yuan.

39. Peasants' income has shown steady growth. In 1985 the average net income earned by a peasant was about 400 yuan. This was 13 percent higher than the preceding year and was 209 yuan more than 1980. Peasants' consumption has risen 9.1 percent annually, changing the almost stagnant situation of an average annual growth rate of 1.8 percent for 26 years preceding 1978.

40. Making a new start in late 1970's, village and township enterprises have become an important component of the national economy. The total production value of these enterprises rose from 72 billion yuan in 1980 to 230 billion yuan in 1985. The accumulated total of rural laborers employed by village and township enterprises has reached 60 million.

41. The sole exchange of products between cities and countryside has been replaced by development of secondary and tertiary industries through their joint efforts. Extensive development of multiform, multilayered, and multicomponent economic and technical cooperation has become one of the significant trends in China's economic development.

42. A smooth start has been made in reforming the purchase and sales system of agricultural and sideline products. The 39 agricultural and sideline products originally designated as items for state-monopolized purchase and fixed-quota purchase have all been excluded from such purchases, with a few exceptions. With the state plan as guidance, the market has begun to function as a mechanism to direct peasants' production.

43. A significant step has been taken to adjust production structure in rural areas. The solely agricultural production structure has begun to change into a multilayered production structure. In 1980 forestry, animal husbandry, fisheries, manufacturing, and sideline production accounted for 36.3 percent of the total agricultural production value. In 1985 the percentage reached 49 percent.

44. Animal husbandry, long a "shortcoming" in China's rural economy, has shown rapid development. The nation's livestock production value in 1985 is expected to reach 55.24 billion yuan, reaching a record high. Compared with 1980, this shows a 62.5 percent rise; the average increase per annum is 10.2 percent.

45. Village and township construction has progressed at a faster pace. During the 6 years from 1979 to 1984, peasant housing totaling 3.5 billion square meters in floor space has been built in the villages of our country. This is more than the total housing constructed in the 30 years preceding this period. The construction work of the more than 50,000 market towns in our country is in a fine, vigorous state.

46. The situation under which incomes of urban and rural people remained unchanged for many years has changed. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the average annual wage of urban workers increased by 414 yuan from 762 yuan in 1980 to 1,176 yuan in 1985 [figures as received], or at an average annual rate of 4.7 percent after adjustment for higher commodity prices. The per-capita income of rural people increased by 209 yuan from 191 yuan in 1980 to 400 yuan in 1985, or at an average annual rate of 14 percent after adjustment for higher commodity prices. At the end of November 1985, average urban and rural per-capita bank savings were 150 yuan.

47. Since 1979, China has made great achievements in job placement owing to the "three-in-one" policy of placement through the labor department, jobs in voluntarily organized collectives, and jobs found by individuals themselves. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, 35 million additional jobs were created for urban people. The unemployment rate dropped to 1.5 percent in 1985, as compared with 4.9 percent in 1980.

48. In 1985, China took a bold step in reform of its pricing system, rationally readjusted buying and selling prices of grain and the buying price of cotton in rural areas, and gradually decontrolled prices of other agricultural and sideline products. These reforms have prompted production and commodity circulation, invigorated the market, and improved the people's livelihood.

49. In the last several years, we have carried out commercial reforms by maintaining state-operated, collective, and individual commerce at the same time; practicing open commodity circulation; adopting diverse economic forms, multiple circulation channels, and various modes of operation; reducing intermediate links in circulation; and setting up trade centers. The reforms are playing a positive role in invigorating the economy, promoting production, and making the masses' livelihood better.

50. The third census was successfully conducted. The scale of the census was unprecedentedly large, and it was of high-quality compared with censuses conducted by various countries.

51. In early 1985, China, for the first time, organized an expedition to conduct surveys of the South Pacific and Antarctica and set up its first Antarctic scientific observation station -- China Antarctic Changcheng Station -- on 20 February on King George Island.

52. The scientific and technological reform is progressing steadily and has yielded good results. Since the state scientific and technological invention award system was restored in 1979, state invention awards have been issued to winners for 1,089 scientific and technological achievements as of the end of 1985. By the end of October 1985, more than 500 trade fairs for scientific and technological achievements had been held in various localities in China. At the first national trade fair for scientific and technological achievements held in Beijing alone, some 15,000 transactions amounting to 2 billion yuan were concluded.

53. The "Galaxy" supercomputer, capable of performing 100 million operations per second, was successfully developed in 1983.

54. From 1978 to 1985, China launched 10 man-made satellites. In 1984, it successfully developed and launched its first synchronous communications satellite. Since China successfully launched its first man-made satellite in 1970, it has launched a total of 17 man-made satellites of various types. Currently, China is one of the few advanced countries capable of launching man-made satellites with its own carrier rockets and of recovering launched satellites.

55. Having rapidly developed higher education, China now has 1,016 colleges with a total enrollment of 1.5 million. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, 1,535,000 students graduated from colleges.In he last 7 years, more than 20,000 students have been sent to study abroad by the state, and several thousand students have entered foreign colleges at their own expense. In 1981, China formally instituted the system of academic degrees. In 1985, ther were 46,500 graduate students pursuing either a doctorate or master's degree in China.

56. Adult education has been the best in history. In 1985 there were 1,216 adult schools of all kinds throughout the country, with a total enrollment of 1,725,100. They have provided training for nearly 100 million people.

57. The structure of secondary education has undergone a tremendous change. The ratio between senior vocational and technical middle schools and regular senior middle schools is 1:1.28. About 40 percent of junior middle school graduates are admitted to vocational schools. In 1985 there 3,557 secondary specialized schools and 8,070 agricultural vocational schools.

58. Progress has been achieved in popularizing education, with the primary school attendance rate reaching 95.9 percent, and elementary education becoming universal in one-third of countries across the country.

59. TV networks have developed rapidly, now totaling over 300 stations. The number of annual TV drama productions has increased from 14 in 1979 to some 1,300 in 1985.

60. Literary and artistic creation has continuously flourished. Some 800 novels were written in the past 7 years, topping the total number of those written during the 17 years before the "Cultural Revolution" by more than 4 times. Thousands of novelettes and tens of thousands of short stories were written annually. Some 760 movies were shot in the past 7 years, more than the total number of those produced during the 17 years before the "Cultural Revolution." A total of 209 outstanding plays received awards in nationwide drama performances.

61. Cultural undertakings, including libraries, museums, and other cultural establishments for the masses, have developed rapidly. At present there are 2,216 libraries, 612 museums, 3,019 cultural centers, 50,000 cultural stations, 24,604 urban and mining workers' cultural palaces and clubs, and 8,934 small-town cultural centers run by the provinces, cities (prefectures), and counties. They form a preliminary cultural network throughout the country.

62. Publishing has advanced continuously. In 1979 some 17,000 books were published across the country. The figure rose to 40,700 in 1984, with a total of some 6.3 billion copies printed. The number of books obtained annually by each individual throughout the country averaged more than 6, exceeding the average number of the developed countries.

63. The people's physical fitness has continuously improved. According to 1982 census statistics, the infant mortality rate had decreased to 34.68 per 1,000 while the life expectancy had risen to 67.88 in 1981. Both figures are approaching the level of developed countries.

64. The trend of excessive population growth has been brought under control; the population increases according to plan. Between 1979 and 1984, the annual population growth rate was 12.31 per 1,000, decreasing from the first 9 years of the 1970's by 5.7 per 1,000.

65. Chinese athletes have scored brilliant records in world and Asian competition. Wiping out the disgrace of never having won a gold medal in the 52-year history of Chinese participation in the Olympic Games, China won 15 gold medals at the 23d Olympics. At the Ninth Asian Games, China ranked first in gold medals won, topping Japan for the first time with 61. Between 1979 and 1984, Chinese athletes won a total of 173 gold medals and broke 114 world records in the Olympics, world championships, or world cup tournaments.

66. China's mass sports has entered a golden period of vigorous development, with about 300 million people across the country regularly participating in sports training.

67. Based on the concept of "one country, two systems," the Chinese Government and the British Government conducted negotiations and signed a joint statement successfully settling the Hong Kong issue. China will resume its sovereignty over Hong Kong on 1 July 1997. The settlement of the issue is of great significance for both the Chinese people and various countries in the world.

68. As a result of readjusting the foreign policy and steadfastly implementing an independent and peaceful foreign policy, China has made important achievements in relations with foreign countries, is enjoying greater prestige in the international arena, and is winning the friendship and cooperation of more countries and people. From the beginning of 1979 to the end of 1985, 17 more countries have established diplomatic relations with China.

69. Exchanges with foreign countries have increased. In 1985 alone, Chinese leaders successively visited some 30 countries in Asia, Africa, Latin America, Europe, North America, and the South Pacific region while heads of state or the government of 26 countries visited China. Exchanges of visits by leaders have enhanced mutual trust and understanding, and resulted in the signing of many agreements in economic, cultural, and scientific and technological cooperation. There have also been tens of thousands of people-to-people exchanges every year.

70. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC has developed relations with political parties in foreign countries in accordance with the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect, and noninterference in each other's internal affairs. The CPC currently maintains relations and contacts in various forms with some 190 political parties and organizations in the world.

Commentator Reviews Changes

[BAN YUE TAN Commentator: "What Do the Changes Over the Past 7 Years Show?"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jan (XINHUA) -- It has been 7 full years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a meeting significant as a milestone in Chinese history. Reviewing the course traversed in these 7 years is absolutely necessary if we want to obtain a correct understanding of the situation and appraise our work to find out its rights and wrongs, gains and losses. To this end, this journal has compiled a series of materials under the title "The 70 Achievements Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee."

When reading these materials, we will all feel they are familiar and touching. If we say that the success of the people's democratic revolution in 1949 brought about an earth-shaking change in our age-old and vast land, then the various major policy decisions adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have enabled our young republic to make a great, historically important turn. Under the leadership of the party Central Committee, our undertakings over the past 7 years have drawn worldwide attention. History has recorded all those magnificent undertakings: eliminating chaos and restoring order, conducting full-scale reform, proposing the "one country, two systems" concept, carrying out an independent foreign policy.... The series of principles, policies, and measures of the CPC have evoked surprise and admiration and have been eyed with a new attitude both at home and abroad. They are described as China's "second revolution" and "the greatest experiment hitherto appearing in all economic history."

Our achievements over the last 7 years under the leadership of the party Central Committee are universally acknowledged. A situation characterized by political stability and unity is increasingly consolidated, an economic take-off is gaining momentum, the people's livelihood is steadily improving, and New China's influence on the world stage is expanding. People at home feel exultant whenever the current situation is discussed. They all agree that it should be recorded in capital letters in Chinese history.

Public opinion abroad regards China's reform as something that is "remodeling the world" and "changing the course of history," pointing out that "the time has come" for the "Chinese giant to shake the world."

The tremendous changes over the past 7 years are the result of our party's integration of the universal truth of Marxism with our country's concrete practice. We will always uphold the fundamental principles of Marxism. The socialist road, the party leadership, the people's democratic dictatorship, and Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought -- these four fundamental principles constitute the basis for formulating our policies. In the meantime, things in China will have to be handled in light of China's conditions. We will not go by the book or metaphysics but by the truth alone. Upholding the policy of seeking truth from facts as advocated by Comrade Mao Zedong and proceeding from China's reality, the party Central Committee, with Marxist courage and resourcefulness, has dared to break through a few Marxist conclusions and theses and thereby creatively develop Marxism.

Marx and Lenin were great men. The Marxist-Leninist theory they founded has displayed a great vitality and withstood the test of time. However, it shoud be acknowledged that the field of vision of a great man, whoever he is, will always be limited. There were no cars in Marx's time, Engels never rode in an airplane, and Lenin never saw a sound motion picture.

Let us review the history. We have now entered the age of electronics and space. Let us look at the world. Our planetary body covers a vast area, and various countries and nationalities differ in a thousand and one ways. It was impossible that our revolutionary teachers should foresee actual problems in the course of making revolution, in carrying out construction in every country, and at every stage so many years after they died. It was also impossible that they could provide posterity with a key for solving the various problems which they themselves had never encountered. The Soviet Communist Party led by Lenin had broken through the individual thesis that "in building socialism, it is impossible to score victory in one country," attaining success in the October Revolution. From the lessons learned at the cost of blood, Comrade Mao Zedong and the Chinese Communists had deviated from the path of "staging uprisings in cities" and adopted the method of carrying out armed struggle by encircling the cities from the rural areas in creating New China. All these are glorious examples in solving new problems and further developing Marxism in light of the new situation by using Marxism's basic theories.

In rejuvenating the Chinese nation and building socialism with Chinese characteristics in the 1980's, we must also adhere to the basic theories of Marxism, dare to break through individual conclusions and theses, realistically solve China's actual problems, and further develop Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

Public opinion will decide which is right and which is wrong, and there are objective standards in verifying which is which. In our socialist nation, the most important criterion in determining whether a policy is right or wrong and if it has merits or demerits is to see if this policy is conducive to national prosperity and the people's well-being. Our achievements in the past seven years indicate that the principles and policies implemented since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee conform with the three tasks laid down by Comrade Deng Xiaoping in his opening speech at the 12th National CPC Congress in making our party, our cause of socialism, and our country and nation grow and flourish.

In doing everything in the past seven years, our party has always kept the interests of the people in mind. This has reflected the aspirations of the people, winning their support. The series of principles and policies laid down by the party during the past seven years are precisely the products developed by combining the determination of the party Central Committee with the aspirations of the people.

All the achievements in the past 7 years are rich fruits reaped from practices of hundreds of millions of people under the leadership of the party Central Committee. It is impossible to score achievements in developing such a magnificent cause without the changes accomplished by our predecessors and the full support of the people.

When we look back, we realize that our journey in the past 7 years was not smooth and that our victory was hard-won. We have met a great deal of difficulties and resistance. It was inevitable that we had some setbacks and committed some errors. Naturally we would hear some gossip and complaints. However, we have made a breakthrough smoothly. We have broken the solid ice and opened up the channel in which the socialist boat is plowing through the waves, unfurling its sails completely -- sails hoisted by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

In the past 7 years, we have attained unexpected achievements, creating extremely favorable conditions for our future developments. We can forecast with full confidence that in the next 7 years, the next 10 years, [as received] we will definitely be able to score even greater achievements if we continue to unite as one in struggle along this triumphant path and work hard tenaciously and in a down-to-earth manner. We will certainly be able to triumphantly fulfill the magnificent targets put forward by the party Central Committee by 2,000, 2021, [as received] and 2049.

KAIFANG ON CARRYING OUT OPENING UP POLICY

HK210351 Guangzhou KAIFANG in Chinese No 12, 8 Dec 85, pp 2-5

[Article by Jiang Feng: "Firmly and Correctly Carry Out the Open Policy"]

[Text] Opening up to the outside world is a basic national policy of our country. It was not formulated at will, and it cannot be changed at will. We must firmly and correctly carry out this policy on a long-term basis.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee decided to shift the focus of the party's work to socialist economic construction. In order to realize the objective of the four modernizations,the party then formulated the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy so as to arouse all positive factors. The policy of opening up to the outside world represents a powerful current in China's new historical period. It symbolizes her self-confidence and progress and shows her bright prospects for development and prosperity. The courage and insight demonstrated in the formulation of this strategic policy decision comes from a scientific and realistic spirit and from the sense of responsibility for shouldering the new historical mission. So we can also say that the opening up policy is a product of the advance of the times.

First, the opening up policy is based on Marxist theory. The present world is an open world, in which economies of all countries are more and more closely interrelated and interdependent. Marx and Engels pointed out in the "Communist Manifesto": "The bourgeoisie has, through its exploitation of the world market, given a cosmopolitan character to production and consumption in every country." They also said that all established national industries have been dislodged by new industries, whose introduction has become a life and death question for all nations; the new industries not only use local raw materials but also draw raw materials from remote areas; their products are not only consumed at home but also in all parts of the world. The old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency have been replaced with exchange in every direction and with the universal interdependence of nations. This brilliant argument reveals the general trend of the world's historical development.

Human history over the past 100 years and more has fully proved the correctness of this statement, which is precisely the theoretical foundation for our policy of opening up to the outside world.

Second, we have profound and painful historical experience in this regard. Over a long period in the past, especially after the Opium War, China was always in a passive position and was vulnerable to attack. China suffered heavily from this. National seclusion was an important reason for China's poor and backward conditions. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "After reviewing historical experience, we have found that an important factor for China's long-standing stagnation and backwardness is national seclusion." "Our experience shows that construction in a country can never be successful if the door is closed; China's development cannot be separated from the world." National seclusion will just lead to poverty, backwardness, ignorance, stupidity, and barbarism, and will certainly leave the nation in a passive and vulnerable position; only by opening up can we have extensive knowledge and learn from the strong points of all other nations to offset our shortcomings and build up our strength in international competition.

Third, there is not only an actual need for opening up, but it is also possible to adopt this measure. Our country now is much better than it was before, but it is still rather poor compared with developed countries, and the economy and culture of our nation are still in a backward condition. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: Poverty is not a characteristic of socialism. Socialism must eliminate poverty. The fundamental task of socialism is to develop productive forces and to gradually improve the people's material and cultural lives. How should we fulfill the task of developing productive forces? We must adhere to the four basic principles, rely mainly on our own efforts and strength, proceed from our existing economic foundation, and actively solicit external support to compensate for our shortage of funds, technologies, and skilled manpower. This is a correct line for us in quickening the pace of our socialist construction. The party Central Committee's proposal for the formulation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan emphasizes that the purpose of acting in light of the general requirement of building socialism with Chinese characteristics and in light of the general policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy is to consolidate and develop the present good situation in our country and to advance more rapidly on the road to economic prosperity and to a comfortable and happy life for the people.

In the 30 years after the founding of the PRC, because of the influence of the "leftist" ideas at home and the international blockade and restraints imposed by some countries against us, we did not properly open up to the outside world. Now the situation has changed. At home, our party has reestablished a Marxist line, and a new and dynamic atmosphere has appeared. The international political and economic situation has also become rather favorable to us. Developed countries are seeking an outlet for large amounts of surplus funds; a new worldwide technological revolution is surging ahead; new and rapid technological progress and flourishing technological exchanges have replaced technological blockade, and more and more new technologies have been transferred from one country to another. All this provides objective conditions for us to bring foreign funds, technologies, and intellectual manpower into our country. We must make full use of this favorable situation and must not lose this opportunity; otherwise we will make a historical mistake. Practice since the third plenary session shows that our opening up policy is completely correct. This policy has achieved marked results and has played a profound and far-reaching role in promoting our economic development. However, our implementation of the opening up policy is just in the initial stage. There are still problems we must seriously solve. For example, our import and export have not been conducted in an orderly way; our overall economic control and management have not kept pace with the development of the situation; and we have not effectively assimilated imported technologies so as to make use of them in a creative way.

At present, we must continue overcoming obstructions in two aspects in order to carry out the opening up policy. On the one hand, we should break the shackles of the old conventions, ideas, and structures left by the old practice of national seclusion. These things often obstruct the implementation of the opening up policy. When we encounter some problems in the course of opening up, some people come out to criticize the opening up policy and claim that they have predicted these problems. On the other hand, the obstruction comes from some people's malpractices. These people break laws and deviate from the opening up policy, but they do so under the guise of supporting and carrying out the opening up policy. Thus, they in fact seriously tarnish the reputation of this policy. In recent years, we have done a great deal of work in overcoming these obstructions. Henceforth, we must remain sober-minded and must guard against those irresponsible and reckless ideas and actions and prevent them from disrupting our strategic arrangements.

We must be more resolute and conscientious in carrying out the opening up policy. Some people are worried that our opening up policy may be changed. Such worries are uncalled-for. Our central leading comrades have repeatedly and clearly announced that our opening up policy will never change. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "China will carry out the policy of opening up on a long-term basis." The policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world is a long-term policy rather than a short-term policy. If there is any change in the future, the change will only make our country open wider. Comrade Hu Yaobang said: "Opening up to the outside world and expanding foreign economic and technological exchanges on the principle of equality and mutual benefit is an unchangeable strategic policy of our country." In recent years, we have gradually expanded the open areas and have added new content to the implementation of the opening up policy. Following the establishment of the four special economic zones and the opening of Hainan Island, we have opened 14 coastal cities, the Zhu Jiang Delta area, the Chang Jiang Delta area, and the southern Fujian triangle area between Xiamen, Zhangzhou, the Quanzhou cities. We have continuously increased imports and the introduction of foreign funds. All these concrete steps and measures show that our country will not change the guiding principle for opening up but will just advance toward a goal of making our country open wider.

At present, our tasks in the implementation of the opening up policy are to review our experience, continue our practice, unify popular understanding, raise our work efficiency, and work more resolutely to create a new and healthier situation.

First, we should proceed from our objective conditions to determine the degree and scope of opening up and to compose an overall program for opening up so that we may work in a planned and orderly way. When making use of foreign funds and introducing technology and equipment, we should do our best to avoid and reduce blindness, and should give consideration to the following things: the importance and urgency of imported projects in the overall program of our country's four modernizations; the advanced character, adaptability, economic results, and social benefit of any imported project; our backup and service capacity and our ability to assimilate the technologies involved in such a project; the proportion of export in its products and the competitiveness of these products in international markets; and the balance of foreign exchange payment in the deal. Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: In the final analysis, the amount of foreign funds available for use does not depend on our wishful thinking but mainly on our country's solvency and our ability to build backup facilities for imported projects and to assimilate advanced technologies. In order to make use of more foreign funds and introduce more advanced technologies, the key is increasing exports and increasing foreign exchange earnings. At present, we must seriously solve the following problems for the purpose of increasing exports:

1. We should reasonably change the makeup of our export goods and improve their quality so as to effect a fundamental change of the present situation in which we do not have a rich variety of export goods and do not export large quantities of goods, and our export goods are poor in both quality and competitiveness. To achieve this, we should first adopt advanced technology and equipment in the establishments which produce export goods and provide pre-production and post-production services.

2. We should adopt various forms to actively open international markets for our products through diverse channels so as to export our goods to all parts of the world.

3. We should reform the sysem of foreign trade management and arouse the initiative of the export goods producers and handlers. Under the premise of subjecting all foreign trade activities to the centralized management, we should actively promote the integration of foreign trade with industrial and agricultural production and with technological development. We should establish export production bases and allow localities and enterprises which have necessary conditions to directly handle trade. In addition, we should adopt some policies to encourage export-oriented production and export trade in the aspects of raw material supply, prices, taxation, credit, and foreign exchange retention and use.

We should also use foreign exchange properly. We should not only be active but also cautious in importing technologies and equipment. Consideration should be given to the overall distribution of industry in the whole province and in the whole country in order to ensure the rationality of the overall industrial structure, and product makeup, and to prevent the import of the same item through different channels and the lopsided development of the economy. In order to ensure the correctness of our decisions, we should carefully consider whether to import the complete set of equipment or just import some component parts and individual machines, whether to import the hardware or the software, and whether to import raw materials. When we can get an item on domestic market, we should not import this item from abroad. We must ensure that our limited foreign exchange is used in areas where foreign exchange is most urgently needed and ensure that the use of foreign exchange can achieve the highest economic efficiency and the best social results.

Second, we should strengthen management so as to guarantee and promote the smooth implementation of the opening up policy. If our management work does not keep pace with the development of the situation, disorder and lawlessness may appear. So, we must perfect our legal system, handle affairs strictly according to law, and seriously enforce law and discipline. We must realize that an instruction from any individual leader cannot replace the established laws. Punishment must be resolutely meted out to people who violate law and discipline by taking advantage of opportunities in the course of opening up, and to people who deliberately obstruct the implementation of the opening up policy and clog the channels for opening up, thus causing serious losses. We should prevent the appearance of a disorderly situation in the course of opening up and should also prevent the inactive situation caused by rigid management.

Third, we must more deeply and extensively give publicity to the policy of opening up to the outside world so as to deepen people's understanding of this policy and enhance their work efficiency in carrying out this policy.

1. We should make people realize that the policy of opening up to the outside world is in agreement with the principle of self-reliance. Self-reliance should not be equated with national seclusion. The implementation of the opening up policy will strengthen our internal foundation through external economic exchange, and will thus increase our self-reliant capabilities. Opening up is an indispensable means of effectively invigorating China in modern times.

Now, we have laid a strong socialist economic foundation, so the foreign capital we introduce in a planned way will not affect the socialist nature of our economy.

2. We should study capitalist practice in doing business with foreigners. Previously, we maintained a "bureaucratic" style when doing business with capitalists and thought that we were "adhering to our own principles." In fact, that was a very stupid practice. Lenin said: "If a communist is trying to conclude any treaty with a bourgeois state in accordance with communist principles, then we should send him to the madhouse...or if a communist is trying to include communist principles in the contracts signed with foreign capitalists in light of the concession policy, he is also close to being a madman. In this regard, we must know the capitalist way of doing business; without this knowledge, we will go nowhere." Lenin's words tell us that we must act in a highly flexible way when doing business and cannot rigidly apply the communist principles in our dealings with international capital. In this regard, only the principles for commodity exchange are practical.

3. When dealing with international capital, we must be sober-minded and should cast away all illusions. Comrade Chen Yun once warned: "We must soberly realize that foreign capitalists are no different from capitalists in general. What they want to achieve in their business is just profit, and they will never allow their profits to go below the average profit rate on international markets. There is no capitalist in the world willing to do business under the condition of gaining profits at a rate lower than the average profit rate." So when conducting foreign economic and technological exchanges, we should not have any unrealistic illusions. Otherwise, we may incur heavy losses just for seeking small gains. We must carefully weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a deal and carefully select the option which is most favorable to us.

4. When studying foreign things, we should have a criticial attitude. As Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out, "We should learn from strong points of all other nations and learn from all of their good things in the political, economic scientific, technological, cultural, and art fields. However, we must do this in a selective and critical way. We should not blindly imitate other peoples and should not mechanically copy all their things." "In the field of natural science, we are rather backward, so we should try to learn from things in other countries. But we should study foreign things in a critical way rather than in a blind way. I think that we need to copy most of other peoples' advanced technologies at the beginning, because we have not mastered the know-how of these technologies. But when we understand them, we will not need to copy every part of them." "We must resolutely resist and criticize all decadent systems and ideologies of the foreign bourgeoisie." Since we adopted the opening up policy, the party central leadership has repeatedly emphasized that we must simultaneously build socialist material and spiritual civilization and must resolutely resist the corrosive influence of external decadent ideologies and prevent the bourgeois lifestyle from running rampant in our country when we bring in foreign funds, advanced technologies, equipment, and management skills. We must resolutely carry out this basic guiding principle laid down by the party central leadership in our actual work.

4. We should pay close attention to the training of personnel engaged in foreign economic activities and trade and in foreign technological exchanges. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "After the political line is determined, cadres constitute a decisive factor." At present, our political line is correct, but we are short of highly qualified personnel to carry out this line. We need to build a contingent of competent foreign economic workers who have a good command of the party's policies, management and commercial knowledge, and scientific and technological knowledge, who have the courage to pioneer and advance a new cause and can work in a down-to-earth manner for the four modernizations. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "The crucial question that determines the success and failure of our cause is whether we will be able to discover and give play to talented people in all fields." Talented people form a key factor for the success of our cause. They represent the hope of our successfully advancing cause!

CORRECT ANALYSIS OF RURAL SITUATION ENCOURAGED

[Commentator's article: "Correctly Analyze and Understand the Rural Situation"]

[Text] In recent years, we have achieved marked results in rural reform, and the rural situation has always been good. Starting from last year, we have begun the second stage of rural reform, changed the system of state monopoly for purchasing and assigning agricultural and sideline products procurement, expanded regulation by the market mechanism, and further readjusted industrial setups in the rural area. It is appropriate to say that we have been unexpectedly successful in the rural reform. The rural economy has initially embarked on the road of developing the commodity economy in a planned way. This is the main aspect of the rural economic situation.

We say that rural situation was good last year. The main and most fundamental indication of this was that the rural economy as a whole was enlivened. This is the goal of our rural work, the yardstick for examining rural work, and the basis for observing the rural situation. To keep abreast of and promote the production development of rural commodities, the CPC Central Committee resolutely and timely decided to reform the system of purchasing and marketing agricultural and sideline products in the rural area so that agricultural production would be integrated with social demand. This was a breakthrough and development of great significance. All this has enabled peasants to take the initiative to develop commodity production in the light of market demand, and gradually rationalize industrial systems in the rural area.

The soaring enthusiasm of peasants is an important condition for the continuous development of the entire rural economy. The internal vitality of the rural economy is the most important factor playing a long-term role in the entire economic development. The yearly changes in production are caused by various factors and do not completely reflect the essence of things. For example, compared with 1984, grain production output dropped last year. This was a problem discussed by many people. We should specifically analyze it. The reduction of grain output last year was due mainly to severe natural calamities. There is also much room for imporvement in our work. However, it could be predicted that if we failed to change the system of the purchase of agricultural products in time, and failed to reform industrial systems, a new "difficulty in selling grain" might inevitably occur, and we would be unable to purchase a large quantity of peasants' grain even though there was another bumper harvest of grain. The phenomenon of "selling grain cheaply and harming the peasants" could not be avoided. This would have seriously dampened peasants' enthusiasm. On the other hand, our failure to reform agricultural systems, in addition to the big drop in grain production because of natural calamities, and our unsuccessful attempt to promote industrial crops and a diversified economy would have considerably reduced peasant incomes. This would also have dampened the enthusiasm of the peasants. However, neither of these situations occurred. On the contrary, the total output value of agriculture and the per capita income of the peasants increased by a fairly big margin, and the momentum of economic growth in the rural area was maintained despite the drop in grain output. This was precisely due to the achievements of reform.

We say that the rural situation is good. Of course, it does not mean that there is no problem at all. At present, there are a number of problems in the rural area. Further efforts must be made to ensure that the rural economy will get on the steady development track. When we investigate causes for some current problems in the rural area, we will find that they are due to the lack of experience both at upper and lower levels in running the commodity economy in a planned way under the public ownership system.

Meanwhile, in the course of changing the closed, old system into an open, new system, people find it difficult to adapt themselves to the new situation in their thinking, habits, and work methods. Some measures of reform need improving and systematizing. In other words, problems occurring in reform should be solved in the process of continuing the reform. Today's achievements are due mainly to reform, and tomorrow's progress will also be determined by reform. We should on no account follow the beaten track if we encounter some problems.

In some areas, the peasants' enthusiasm for planting grain has been dampened. We should also make a correct analysis of this problem. We should realize that even in those areas, the peasants' enthusiasm for developing production and getting rich is still fairly high. In a small number of areas, the peasants are not so interested in planting grain. This is also a rational and normal choice and normal reaction of the peasants. Since the peasants are engaged in commodity production they carry out their production according to market information. Because the burden on grain growers is too heavy and their incomes are lower than those engaged in the production of cash crops and industrial and sideline occupations, peasants have chosen a trade beneficial to their efforts to get rich through hard work. This shows that the peasants have enhanced their understanding of the commodity economy. We should not be surprised or alarmed at these problems. We should take the initiative in actively changing the situation through economic means and providing guidance through correct and effective policy in order to further enhance the enthusiasm of grain growers and grain-producing areas for production.

At present, rural reform is developing in depth. Since urban reform is being linked with rural reform, we have more favorable conditions for accomplishing our task. However, our reform has involved more matters, and new difficulties will occur. The development of rural reform will inevitable touch upon many aspects of our traditional management system, influence various cities, rural areas, departments, and enterprises, and affect economic interests of producers, consumers and operators. Therefore, while fully affirming our achievements which have been made in the second stage of the rural reform, we should further realize the importance and urgency of persisting in and deepening the reform so that we will be clear about our direction, strengthen our confidence, persist in promoting the reform, and further consolidate and develop the present favorable rural situation.

FUTURE TASKS OF RURAL REFORM ENUMERATED

[Commentator's article: "Rural Reform: New Situation and New Tasks"]

[Text] Following the adoption of the output contract responsibility system in the countryside, we began to reform the system for purchasing agricultural products last year and readjusted agricultural structure in a planned way. Peasants have better adapted their production to market needs, and the rural economy as a whole has become more dynamic, with rural commodity production developing further.

The national agricultural growth rate in recent years was higher than ever seen before. In the past years, grain output increased by an average of more than 34 billion jin a year. Last year, although the acreage under grain crops was reduced according to a state plan and some localities suffered from serious natural disasters, the output of grain in the whole country could still meet the market needs. Moreover, forestry, fishery, animal husbandry, rural processing industry, and service industries, which were rather weak before, have all been strengthened in recent years. The gross production of society in the rural areas and the total income of peasants have increased substantially.

However, we should also notice that the existing material and technological foundation for our agriculture remains rather weak; in some areas, peasants now have less interest in growing grain crops; some discrepancies have appeared in the course of the new replacing the old; and the interest relationships between various quarters have become more complicated as rural and urban reforms advance.

Henceforth, the sustained, steady, and well-coordinated development of the rural economy will rely on the continuous improvement of our rural policies, the coordination of all reform measures, and the adoption of necessary follow-up steps, including the improvement of production conditions, technological progress, and the reform of the circulation system. To put it in a nutshell, the general requirements for rural work in 1986 are: Continue to put policies into practice, deepen reforms, improve production conditions, and organize all necessary preproduction and postproduction services so as to ensure the sustained, steady, and well-coordinated development of the rural economy.

The new situation in the countryside and the new tasks for our rural work are very different from things a few years ago. Rural reforms have entered a new stage. We will not only remove the old but will also establish the new. What new things should be established? At present, some follow-up measures should be taken to ensure the implementation of the set policies. There are two matters we must properly handle immediately: First, we should improve the purchase contract system. These purchase contracts link the state plan with the peasants' production. Through the conclusion of contracts, the state gives guidance to the peasants' production and guarantees the supply of agricultural products. It is now particularly important to consolidate the contract system for grain purchase, and then the purchase contract system can be applied to other products. Second, we should properly organize some midway lines in the circulation of commodities. For example, we should establish some vegetable wholesale markets and develop some new commercial enterprises handling transactions between different localities or between different departments.

A long-term task of in-depth rural reforms is to improve and develop the cooperation system in light of the requirements for developing productive forces and developing the commodity economy. This is also a basic aim of the in-depth reforms. The improvement and development of the cooperation system should proceed from the development of the service industry. Economic organizations for regional cooperation should effectively provide technical and operational services and conduct necessary management on the principle of combining integrated operations and work division.

In the course of carrying out the new tasks, we will unavoidably encounter many difficulties and problems. However, the great achievements of rural reforms have inspired and encouraged the people. We have gained benefit from the reforms. Today, our achievements are in carrying out reforms; in the future, our progress will also be in carrying out reforms. As long as we continue reforms, seriously implement the party's principles and policies, and bring all positive factors into play, we will be able to overcome all difficulties on our way forward and will usher in greater developments in our rural economy.

AGRICULTURAL BANK ADJUSTS POLICY ON LOANS

[By reporters Jiao Ran and Wang Yingchun]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- Entering the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the Agricultural Bank of China has decided to make appropriate adjustments of its loan policy.

This is due to the need for uniformity in everything in controlling loans last year and to seek better overall control in financial affairs and support readjustments in the establishment of production and technical transformation in rural reas.

At today's meeting of branch managers of the Agricultural Bank of China, Ma Yongwei, president of the bank, said: Our main task in readjusting our loan policy in rural areas this year is to implement guidelines laid down by the national meeting on rural work held by the party Central Committee and the State Council at the end of last year, and gradually work out a whole set of loan policies for different places and different fields. Efforts must be made to handle each case individually. It is necessary to tighten our control over some types of loans, while relaxing our control on others. We must guard against handling each case in the same way. While exercising overall control, we must make sure that loans are available to those who badly need them.

In extending loans to town and township enterprises, an issue concerning rural cadres and peasants most for 1986, the Agricultural Bank of China will grant loans to various enterprises selectively. This guiding principle is to handle each case differently according to the locality, the trade, and the use of the loan. It will not handle each case in the same way. It will adopt more flexible measures in extending loans to less developed areas and to those fields of endeavor that the state encourages for development and in providing circulatation funds and loans for facilitating technical transformation.

In order to do a still better job in helping poverty-stricken areas introduce changes, the Agricultural Bank of China had decided to allocate 300 million yuan each year between 1986 and 1990 from its total loan funds in support of the 10 and more poverty-stricken areas designated by the state. These loans will be used mainly to help these areas develop key projects in production and improve their standards of living.

Capital Increase Reported

[Text] Beijing, January 25 (XINHUA) -- The Agricultural Bank of China has increased the availability of loans to agriculture by boosting savings deposits, speeding the turnover of funds and tapping fund-raising potential. A bank official said here today that its savings deposits by the end of 1987 amounted to 93.4 billion yuan, an increase of 19.4 billion yuan over the early period of last year. The amount of loans which the bank put into circulation last year was 31.5 billion yuan less than in 1984, the official said.

As a result of speeding turnover, the amount of loans last year was actually 35.9 billion yuan more than in 1984, thus meeting needs for loans for normal production and circulation in the country.

Last year saw the bank and credit cooperatives expand their business services to encourage savings. They made 13.75 billion yuan more available for agriculture and rural businesses. The recovery rate rose from 69.3 percent in 1984 to 91.4 percent last year.

DISAGREEMENT OVER SHENZHEN ECONOMICS AIRED

[Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese at 1215 GMT on 25 Jan transmits a service message requesting "cancellation" of the following item.]

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- An official of the Guangdong provincial structural reform office today voices disagreement with the viewpoint that "Shenzhen special zone should build an outward-oriented economy." He says that according to this pattern, the special zone's commodities can only be sold abroad and may not be sold in the domestic market; this is a self-enclosed market pattern which does not benefit either the state or the special zone. It is clearly a mistaken policy.

His article, entitled "Have a Clearer Understanding of the Economic Zone from Shenzhen's Economy" is carried today in the weekend forum column of JIANGJI RIBAO. The article advocates: The Shenzhen special zone should built up an open-style economic pattern, that is, it should regard the markets of the interior as its prop and the Hong Kong market as its springboard and focus on directly opening up trade markets overseas. Further efforts should also be made to turn Shenzhen into China's forward position for developing international trade; it should be a frontline position both for import and export trade and also for entrepot trade.

The article proposes that the state institute rational trade policies for the Shenzhen special zone: 1) The method of tendering production costs should be instituted in export trade, and the principle of selecting the finest goods for export should be resolutely followed; 2) entrepot trade should be developed, including cross-border entrepot trade; 3) a policy of banning, restricting, or encouraging imports should be adopted according to the different circumstances; and 4) commodities produced by the Shenzhen special zone should not come under the category of commodities whose import is controlled by the state, and their sale in the domestic market should be permitted, as long as an equal tax burden is borne. The Shenzhen special zone using some imported components should be determined by the proportion of production costs in China-produced articles.

The article criticizes the practices of certain open cities in choosing "barren tracts of land" outside the cities for their "economic open zones," holding that this is a misinterpretation of Shenzhen's experiences.

THREE MAJOR ECONOMIC RESEARCH STYLES LISTED

HK270437 Beijing ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO in Chinese 15 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Ping Xinqiao, Mo Funin, and Han Shi of Beijing University: "Three Major Research Styles in Chinese Economics"]

[Text] First is the economic research style based on the combination of "Das Kapital" with socialist practice. This has the most significant influence and the richest research strength in China. With this research style, Gu Zhun has independently put forward that products made by socialist enterprises under the ownership by the whole people are commodities. Sun Yefang has made an independent and very creative study of the relationship between labor consumption and results in the law of value. Their achievements suggest that Marxist political economy is the theoretical basis for guiding China's economic structural reform.

Second is the emergence of the new situation in economic research since the introduction, by Chinese economists in 1978, of the Yugoslavian theory of self-management, in which China's social economic structural reform is analyzed by applying the reform theories of the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries. Many academics contribute their intellect to China's selection of economic structural modes by making comparisons between the virtues and defects of the economic structures of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. They use criticisms from Eastern European reform theorists on the traditional socialist structure to analyze the characteristics of China's economy. Their introduction of the theory of preventing macroeconomic imbalance in the reform period has had a strong impact on overall reform of urban economic structure.

Third is the great change in China's economic research circles, in which a number of socialist economic theoretical workers engage in the study of socialist economic operation by applying Western economic research methods. Under the basic conditions of the socialist economy, these theoretical workers analytically use modern economic methods worked out by Western economists to explain: consumption economics; the theory of economic growth; investment economics; the science of money and banks; international economics; the science of finance; and the science of marketing. They are now working toward the formulation of a new type of socialist economic theory. Their economic influence manifests itself both in the perfection of regulating mechanisms of the socialist economy and in criticizing the shortcomings of the original economic structure. The simultaneous existence of three research styles indicates that China's economic theories vary in form but are identical in purpose.

SURVEY SHOWS OPEN MARKET PRICES STABLE

[Text] Beijing, January 27 (XINHUA) -- Prices for major agricultural and sideline products in China's open markets have been stable since the state relaxed price controls last spring, today's ECONOMIC DAILY reported. The result of a sample survey of 170 open markets across the country during the January-November period of 1985 showed that prices for grain, edible oil, chicken, pork, beef and mutton were stable or enjoyed a moderate increase, it said. Before the price reforms, purchasing and selling of major food and agricultural sideline products were mainly controlled by the state. Now, producers have the choice of selling their goods to the state or on the open market. The lifting of price controls aims at promoting the development of nonstaple foodstuffs, adding variety to market stock, improving quality and helping to ensure regular supplies. Despite a decrease of grain output last year as a result of natural disasters, the prices for rice and wheat on open markets were not much affected, the paper said. The highest average monthly price of rice during the period was two cents per kg more than the lowest. However, the prices of fresh fish and vegetables rose considerably, while that of eggs floated with the seasons. The paper also said that since last November the prices of most of these products have stabilised, even during the new year and Chinese traditional Spring Festival period.

MEETING HELD ON STRATEGY FOR DEFENSE TECHNOLOGY

[Report by Xi Qixin: "Discussion Meeting on Strategy for the Development of Science and Technology for National Defense Ends"]

[Text] Recently, the discussion meeting on the strategy for developing science and technology for national defense purposes, was sponsored by the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission.

Zhang Aiping and Hong Xuezhi, both deputy secretaries general of the Central Military Commission, attended the concluding session and made speeches. The session was presided over by Ding Henggao, director of the State National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission. Principal responsible comrades of the relevant ministries and commissions of the State Council, the Chinese Academy of Sciences, and the general departments and commands of services of the PLA also attended the meeting.

In their speeches, the leading comrades of the Central Military Commission said that the study of the strategy for the development of national defense science and technology is an important component of our efforts to build a modern army with Chinese characteristics. If we do not study this strategy, we will be blind in our national defense science and technology research and in developing our weapons systems, and we will not be able to adapt our Army to the needs of future wars of antiaggression. At this meeting, we have discussed the long-term, medium-term, and short-term objectives for developing our Army's weapons and equipment in light of our national conditions. This is of great significance for the building of our Army.

More than 200 experts and technical personnel from the general staff headquarters and commands of various services of the PLA and from the relevant ministries and commissions of the State Council and the Chinese Academy of Sciences attended the discussion meeting. It was the first time that our country had held such a large-scale discussion meeting on comprehensive strategies for developing national defense science and technology. Ding Henggao, director of the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission, Zhu Guangya, director of the Science and technology sectionof the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission, Xian Cueqian, deputy director of the science and technology section, and other experts gave special lectures to the meeting. The meeting has enabled people to deepen their understanding of the importance and urgency of the study of the strategy for developing national defense science and technology and to achieve a consensus of opinion on the guiding principles, research steps, research content, organization, and methods for developing national defense science and technology. People who attended the meeting held that it marked a new starting point for the formulation of our country's national defense technological development strategy and would produce a far-reaching and positive influence on our national defense modernization and the development of our national economy.

MILITARY ATTACHES FETED AT DEFENSE UNIVERSITY

LD281448 Beijing XINHUA in English 1324 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 28 (XINHUA) -- The National Defense University of the Chinese People's Liberation Army gave a reception here today for military attaches from 35 countries in Beijing. The university, set up last December by merging the former PLA military, political and logistics academies is China's highest institution of military learning. It operates directly under the Central Military Commission. While talking with the guests, Commandant Zhang Zhen and Political Commisar Li Desheng of the university expressed the wish to strengthen contacts and academic exchanges with their foreign counterparts.

HENAN CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC CRIME CONCLUDES

HK241416 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Excerpts] At the conclusion of the provincial CPC Committee's conference on cracking down on economic crimes, Liu Zhengwei, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, stressed: In investigating and handling big and serious cases, it is necessary to implement the principle of meting out severe punishment. No matter which levels of departments and cadres are involved, all economic crimes must be resolutely investigated and dealt with and no favoritism is to be practiced.

The Henan Provincial CPC Committee's conference on cracking down on economic crimes, which lasted 4 days, opened in Zhengzhou on 17 January. Attending the conference were deputy secretaries of all prefectural and city CPC committees, directors of the offices for cracking down on economic crimes, and heads of public security organs, procuratorates, and courts. Lin Yinghai, provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member, head of the provincial CPC Committee's leadership group for cracking down on economic crimes, and secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; and Song Zhaosu, provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member, deputy head of the provincial CPC Committee's leadership group for cracking down on economic crime, and secretary of the provincial Political and Legal Commission, presided over the conference. At the beginning of the conference, Comrade Lin Yinghai delivered a speech: Enhance understanding, strengthen leadership, and penetratingly and persistently wage the struggle against serious economic crimes.

The conference held: Over the past year, although our province has scored some achievements in struggling against economic crimes, this struggle has developed very unevenly. Judging from the whole province, economic crimes are relatively serious and the number of cases of graft, receiving bribes, speculation, and swindling has markedly increased. The violations of law and discipline in some economic departments are relatively conspicuous. The situation in evading taxes and refusing to pay taxes by state-run and collective enterprises and by individual industrial and commercial households is fairly prevalent. In view of this, a high degree of attention must be paid to this by CPC committees at all levels throughout the province, measures must be taken to close loopholes, the new circumstances emerging in the new situation must be constantly studied, new problems emerging in the new situation solved, and the struggle against serious crimes in the economic sphere in our province waged penetratingly, persistently, and to the end.

At the conclusion of the conference, Comrade Liu Zhengwei laid stress on the problem of fighting well the general war under the leadership of the CPC committees. He said: The offices of CPC committees at all levels for cracking down on economic crimes must take the lead in cracking down on economic crimes in coordination with the political and legal organs and the industrial, commercial, tax, auditing, and commodity price departments.

Comrade Liu Zhengwei also demanded: CPC committees at all levels must regularly show concern for the work of the offices for cracking down on economic crimes and attach importance to and support the work of the political and legal departments.

Responsible persons of all departments and committees of the provincial CPC Committee and all units at the provincial level attended beginning and the conclusion of the conference and listened to the report made by Comrade Lin Yinghai and to the summing-up speech delivered by Comrade Liu Zhengwei.

HENAN RURAL WORK CONFERENCE DISCUSSES SITUATION

HK270255 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Excerpts] A provincial rural work conference convened by the provincial CPC Committee and government proposed that the general guiding idea for rural work in Henan in 1986 is to persevere in reform, firm up, perfect, and round off the various policies and measures for rural reforms, and promote sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the rural economy, so as to make a fine start to the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

This conference, held in Zhengzhou from 17 to 26 January, was the largest rural work conference held by the province since the meeting of cadres of four levels in 1980.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Xizong, Deputy Secretary Liu Zhengwei, Deputy Secretary and Governor He Zhukang, and Vice Governor Hu Tingji made important speeches at the conference.

The participants seriously studied the documents of the central rural work conference. In connection with Henan realities, they enthusiastically discussed the speeches of the leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government, and summed up and exchanged the achievements and experiences gained by various localities since the start of the second step in rural reforms last year.

The practice of the past year has proven that the CPC Central Committee's policy decisions on reforming the system of procuring and selling agricultural products and readjusting the rural production structure are completely correct. Last year Henan suffered rather serious natural disasters; grain production declined somewhat, and, in addition, the cotton area was reduced in a planned way. Despite that, due to the fact that the peasants readjusted the production structure to suit market needs, expanded the area of industrial crops, and further developed forestry, fruit cultivation, animal husbandry, aquatic production, and township enterprises, the total value of agricultural output and the average peasant income showed a certain degree of growth. Rural Henan has started to embark on the track of developing commodity economy in a planned way.

The conference held that, amid the excellent situation, it is also necessary to realize that the material and technical foundations of agriculture remain very weak. Some peasants have become less enthusiastic about growing grain. The reduction in agricultural input has had an impact on agricultural capital construction. A number of disharmonies have appeared in the process of replacing the old rural economic system with the new. Following the convergence of urban and rural reforms, regulating the proportional relations in all aspects becomes still more complex.

The key to ensuring that Henan's agriculture shifts to steady and sustained development lies in stability and continual improvement of policies, the continued enhancement of the peasants' enthusiasm, and the continual improvement of the conditions for agricultural production.

The conference stressed: Actively promoting diversified undertakings without any relaxation of grain production remains the fundamental guideline for agricultural production. While continuing to readjust the production structure this year, we must correctly handle the relationship between grain production and diversification and gradually perfect the grain purchase contract system. We should develop a cooperative economy centering on perfecting the household production contract responsibility system with payment linked to output, focus on enlivening rural circulation and finances, vigorously develop lateral economic ties, strengthen mutual support between urban and rural areas, and promote the joint prosperity of urban and rural economy.

The conference announced that the province's annual grain output should reach 65 million jin and total annual agricultural output value should reach 38 billion yuan by the end of the seventh 5-Year Plan. This represents a new-stage production level. The task is extremely arduous. The conference held that the attainment of this goal can only be assured by placing the province's agriculture on a new and advanced material foundation.

Secretary Yang Xizong spoke at the full session of the conference on 25 January. He stressed getting a good grasp of grain production. This year the province should reap 58 billion jin of grain and strive for 60 billion. This goal must be attained.

Prefectural and city CPC Committee secretaries made special journeys to attend this full session. After listening to Comrade Yang Xizong's speech, they presided over panel discussions on 26 January to make arrangements for work.

HUNAN LEADER STRESSES CORRECTING MALPRACTICES

[Excerpts] Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Fusheng made a speech at a meeting of secretaries of party committees of the provincial organs on 27 January, pointing out that the provincial organs must take the lead in straightening out party style, create a new situation in building party style this year, and strive for a fundamental turn for the better next year.

On the basis of affirming the work achievements of the provincial organs in 1985, Comrade Liu Fusheng raised the following main problems: There is serious bureaucratism in some units, which has caused economic losses to the state; some people lack a sense of the cause and of responsibility, and do things in a rough and superficial way: procrastination and passing of documents from department to department makes it impossible to solve certain problems; some people pursue political liberalism and air their views in an irresponsible way, irrespective of the occasion; some people like to listen to and pass on gossip, without distinguishing between right and wrong; the thinking of some people is strongly individualist, and they seek fame and profit and are most concerned about individual gain or loss; some indulge in extravagance and vie to buy or exchange imported cars; some use public funds for traveling around the country, giving dinners, and presenting gifts, thus wasting the state's wealth; some units are seriously affected by departmentalism and pass the buck to each other heedless of the overall situation; some indulge in comparing the powers and size of different units and strive for upgrading and more staff; some people stress human feelings instead of party spirit in getting things done and employing people, and appoint only acquaintances to official posts; and the members of some leadership groups are in a state of disunity. Some units are slack in organization and discipline and have not lived an organizational life for a long time.

Comrade Liu Fusheng pointed out: The key to creating a new situation in the party style in the provincial organs this year lies in governing the party strictly. At present it is essential to grasp three tasks:

1. Organize the party members to study the speeches of the leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering.

2. Seriously deal with outstanding problems in party style and with serious cases of crime.

3. Strictly adhere to the party's organizational life system.

GUIYANG TO BE EXPERIMENTAL UNIT IN REFORM

HK241107 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 20 Jan 86

[Text] The fifth enlarged meeting of the fifth provincial CPC Committee decided that Guiyang City should be made an experimental unit in carrying out reform of the economic structure in the whole province and priority given in guidance.

In accordance with this spirit, from 13 to 17 January Zhang Shukui, provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee member and vice governor, and responsible comrades of provincial departments concerned went to Guiyang City to hold a forum on the pilot project to reform the urban economic structure in Guiyang City. At the forum, the comrades seriously listened to the reports on the experiences gained by Guiyang City over the past 5 years in reform of the urban economic structure and on the problems arising in the course of reform. They studied the problems of comprehensive reform of the urban economic structure.

In his summing-up speech at the forum, Vice Governor Zhang Shukui pointed out: It is necessary to correctly analyze and understand the economic situation, to strengthen our confidence in reform, to seriously implement the principle of consolidation, digestion, supplementalism, and imporvement, and to carry out urban reform in depth.

He said: Comrade Hu Jintao has demanded that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, Guiyang City be in the van of the whole province in four aspects. This is also a target which we must attain in our pilot project. Judging from the practical situation in Guiyang City, we must lay stress on grasping five aspects of work well:

1. We must regard enlivening enterprises as the central link. What we must emphasize is that to enliven enterprises, Guiyang City must undertake the main tasks. Departments concerned at the provincial level must actively coordinate with and support it and do service work well. It is hoped that in the aspect of enlivening enterprises, Guiyang City will create experience, set an example, and push the whole province forward.

2. We must work hard in the aspects of developing economic relations among enterprises and regions and of pushing forward the reorganization and combination of enterprises. We must make practical progress.

3. We must make a breakthrough in developing the market for means of production. The market for means of production is a difficult point in urban reform, which involves all fields. We have some foundation. Provincial and city material departments must seriously study and continue to forge ahead.

4. In opening up financial resources and expanding the market, we must continue to carry out some exploration.

5. With a department as a key point, we must study a new way for the urban government's management of enterprises.

SICHUAN MEETING DEMANDS IMPROVEMENT IN PARTY STYLE

HK250229 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Jan 86.

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 22 January, the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee convened a gathering of cadres at and above department and bureau level in the provincial organs to mobilize the study and implementation of the speeches of leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering. The meeting demanded that the provincial organs become examples for the whole province in straightening out party style.

Comrades Yang Rudai and Gu Jinchi spoke at the meeting. Comrade Feng Yuanwei read out the provincial CPC Committee's circular on studying the speeches of the leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering. Comrade Jiang Minkuan presided.

The leading comrades of the provinical CPC Committee pointed out: The state of party style in the provincial organs has a major impact and plays an exemplary role for party style and social mood throughout the province. To enhance this exemplary role is the key to straightening out party style and social mood throughout the province.

The meeting analyzed the current state of party style in the provincial organs, holding that as a result of party rectification and implementation of the circular of the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on solving some current serious problems in organ work style, the cadres, staff and workers of the provincial organs have enhanced their understanding of the importance of straightening out party style, and marked achievements have been scored in certain respects in correcting new unhealthy trends. However, we must clearly realize that there are still many problems in party style in the provincial organs. The unhealthy trends pointed out by the leading central comrades exist in varying degrees.

First, political liberalism is rather conspicuous among certain units and comrades. This is not permitted by party regulations and discipline. It is a hangover from the Cultural Revolution, which corrodes party unity and solidarity. We must certainly not underestimate its damaging role.

Second, there is serious bureaucratism in certain units. They lack drive and a strong sense of responsibility; lording it over everybody, they are divorced from the masses. They fail to investigate and study the new situations and problems in reform, but sit in their offices passing the buck to each other. They can spend 18 months dealing with a simple problem and still not solve it.

Third, small group mentality and departmentalism, which damage the state's interests, have increased in certain units. They do not shrink from telling lies and harming the state for the sake of small group interest. Some units cause major economic losses to the state for the sake of their own private interests. Certain departments and bureaus made random payments of bonuses and goods in kind at the end of 1985.

Fourth, certain labor service companies run by various organs have not been sorted out and rectified. Some of them have actually turned into small treasuries for random payment of money and goods. There are serious problems regarding the enterprises attached to provincial organs.

Fifth, the leading cadres of a few units hanker for a comfortable life and think only about personal gains and losses. Some refuse to hand over excessive housing. Others slip back to their old ways after handing over excessive housing and use their powers to occupy still more housing. The leading cadres in a few units vie for power, fame, and profit, and organize factions.

The provincial CPC Committee stressed that in solving these problems, straightening out party style, correcting unhealthy trends, and eliminating rottenness, it is essential to apply the principle of making resolute and sustained efforts. Based on Comrade Deng Xiaoping's call to utter less empty talk and do more practical work, it is necessary to focus on grasping the following points:

1. The provincial organs must immediately take action and launch universal and serious study of the spirit of the speeches of the leading central comrades.

2. After the Spring Festival, it is necessary to carry out a major inspection and rectification of party style. We must stress action and results in this inspection.

3. Continue to grasp the work of investigating and dealing with major and important criminal cases. No matter who is involved, we must carry out resolute and thorough investigation. We must break down obstacles and grasp matters to the end if it is found that leading cadres and their sons and daughters are involved in major cases.

4. Integrate stepping up ideological education with establishing rules and regulations, and properly put party life on a sound basis.

Responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee also spoke at the gathering on a number of problems of understanding in this year's economic work.

The provincial CPC Committee's circular on studying the speeches of the leading central comrades at the central organ cadre gathering demanded that the party committees and groups of the provincial organs seriously study and implement these speeches and tangibly improve organ work style, so as to make still greater contributions to creating a new situation in all work in the province.

1. It is necessary to understand more clearly that the country's current political and economic situation is one of the best since the founding of the state. By correctly understanding the situation we can unify the thinking of the whole party, brace spirits, and consciously implement the party's policies and principles.

2. We must put strict enforcement of discipline in a prominent position in straightening out party style in the provincial organs.

3. Tangibly improve work and efficiency in the organs. The leading organs at all levels must work hard to eliminate bureaucratism, carry out investigation and study in depth, keep in close touch with reality, and strengthen their concept of the overall situation.

4. It is necessary to assiduously study Marxism and strengthen party spirit. In particular, leading cadres must make great efforts to study basic Marxist theory, firmly cling to the communist ideal, and always remember the program of wholeheartedly serving the people. They must continually strengthen party spirit, and also study modern science and technology, culture, and management.

The circular demands: We must certainly not go in for formalism in studying the speeches of the leading central comrades. We must implement the principle of linking theory with reality, get a tight grasp on the existing problems, and solve them one by one. At present we must focus on the following problems:

1. We must apply the spirit of the speeches of the leading central comrades to sum up 1985 work and firm up the tasks for 1986. We must seriously check on the state of implementation of the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and central General Office Document No 57 of 1985. We must seriously act to improve the work style of leading organs and cadres, starting by checking on and correcting the six serious unhealthy trends and straightening out organ discipline.

After the Spring Festival, all units must carry out a major inspection and rectification of discipline and work style. Leading cadres must take the lead in improving work style, and resolutely oppose political liberalism, individualism, small group mentality, and departmentalism.

They must oppose the practice of using powers for private purposes, and carry out the relevant instructions of the CPC Central Committee and State Council in a model way. They must dare to grasp and tackle unhealthy trends.

2. The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee is resolved to take the lead in studying and implementing the spirit of the central leaders' speeches, and to launch serious criticism and self-criticism, so as to improve the leadership style of the provincial CPC Committee. Leading organs must set an example for the whole province.

Regarding the few units and individuals where there are serious problems, the departments concerned must rapidly organize forces to clarify the situation and deal with matters seriously.

3. We must implement the principle of simultaneous study, review, and correction throughout this study.

4. We must work hard to investigate and deal with major criminal cases.

The circular says in conclusion: Written reports on the situation in study, inspection, and implementation in each unit must be submitted to the provincial CPC Committee by the end of March.

XIZANG MOBILIZATION RALLY DISCUSSES PARTY STYLE

HK250816 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Yesterday afternoon, with a view to making efforts for a fundamental turn for the better in party style in our region and to really implement the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee, the regional CPC Committee held a mobilization rally of the regional subordinate organs on straightening out party style. Attending the rally were responsible comrades of the regional party and government and the principal responsible comrades of the regional subordinate organs and of Lhasa City, totaling some 130 people. Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Gyanincain Norbu presided over the rally.

Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Dangzin spoke at the rally. In dealing with the problems of how to straighten out our region's party style, Comrade Dangzin laid stress on two problems:

First, analyzing the current state of our region's party style. At present, the main current in party style in our region is good, but unhealthy trends also exist. They are mainly expressed in four aspects:

1. Some leading cadres are irresponsible and lack devotion to work. Their bureaucratism is serious. The efficiency of organs is low and their work style poor. Very big economic losses are incurred.

2. Some cadres, even leading cadres, extort and accept bribes and violate the law and discipline. Corrupted by capitalist ideology, some cadres forget all moral principles at the sight of profits, defy party discipline and state law, and seek private ends by fair means or foul.

3. Some cadres take advantage of their powers to pursue private ends and do not adhere to principles.

4. Some units and cadres take part in an organization's abnormal activities, their concept of the organization is blunted, and their discipline and work is slack. They neither carry out orders nor stop doing what is prohibited.

The main reason for generating these unhealthy trends is that some leading cadres lack devotion to work and the sense of duty and in the new situation in reform, opening up, and invigorating and disregard and relax the work of resisting corruption by capitalist ideology. In employing people, they do not stress politics. At ordinary times, they do not conduct education.

Second, our region's requirements for straightening out party style and its plan for the next step. Conrade Dangrin emphatically pointed out that straightening out party style is a guarantee for implementing the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee. Before the lunar new year of the Tibetan nationality and the Spring Festival, all units must continuously stress grasping well the study of going further in negating the Cultural Revolution, in eliminating leftist ideological influence, and in straightening out the ideological line. On this basis, it is necessary to link straightening out party style closely with the implementation of the spirit of the enlarged meeting of the regional CPC Committee Standing Committee.

In order to realize the basic improvement of our region's party style, Comrade Dangzin put forward four demands: 1) It is necessary to strengthen political and ideological work and to conduct penetrating education in party spirit, party discipline, and party style for all party member cadres; 2) it is essential to do well in grasping typical examples and we must both commend advanced individuals and advanced collectives whose party style is correct and grasp and severely deal with big and serious cases; 3) leadership organs and leading cadres must take the lead and the regional CPC Commitee Standing Committee members and the leading cadres of the regional leadership organs must take the lead from now on and set an example; and 4) it is imperative to inspect and straighten out discipline in conjunction with correcting party style.

ZONG SHUNLIU INSPECTS XIZANG BORDER DEFENSE UNITS

HK270546 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 22 January, Zong Shunliu, deputy director of the PLA General Logistics Department, and his party, totaling 11 persons, who have come to inspect the work of the Xizang border defense PLA units, went to the regional CPC Committee to pay a cordial visit to the leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee and regional people's government. Responsible comrades of the regional party, government, and Army, including Dangzin, Gyanincain Norbu, Hu Songjie, Gyibug Puncogcedain, Tudao Doje, and Gao Tangjin, held cordial talks with the leading comrades who were calling on them.

On behalf of the regional CPC Committee, regional people's government, and Xizang Military District, Comrade Dangzin, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, expressed heartfelt thanks to the leading comrades of the General Logistics Department for their visit and for the great contributions made by the PLA units toward the building of Xizang.

On behalf of the leaders and organs of the General Logistics Department, Zong Shunliu, deputy director of the General Logistics Department, extended greetings and thanks to the regional CPC Committee and regional people's government for showing concern toward the PLA units.

NEI MONGGOL CHAIRMAN ON CORRECTING PARTY STYLE

SK270832 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Text] In his report to the regional meeting of the banner and county CPC Committee secretaries, Comrade Bu He stressed that leading organs and leading cadres must set set an example in straightening out party style. He said that straightening out party style is an issue that the masses have generally paid close attention to and are endlessly discussing at present. We must notice that with the efforts of the whole party, the region has realized a great turn for the better in party style since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The basic change is that the party's ideological line of seeking truth from facts and the three major work styles have been restored. Inner-party political life has been regularized with a pronounced democratic atmosphere. The people dare to speak what they want to speak. But, as the central authorities had pointed out, such corrosive tendencies really exist because of the leaders' divorcing themselves from the masses. These corrosive tendencies, although they are not serious, may bring about extremely bad results. Thus, the party organizations at all levels must pay a great deal of attention to this.

Comrade Bu He said: Leading organs and leading cadres must take the lead in straightening out party style. If they do not take the lead in correcting unhealthy practices, it will be difficult for them to express themselves in strong terms and the lower levels will not obey them. Thus, it will be difficult to solve problems. Only when leading organs and leading cadres have good leadership are they able to face difficulties. Recently, the CPC Central Committee decided that the central organs and Beijing Municipality should play an exemplary role for the whole nation in straightening out party style. This is an important policy decision of the CPC Central Committee and will have a great effect on the realization of a basic turn for the better in party style.

The regional CPC Committee urged leading organs and departments at all levels to take the lead in responding to and implementing the CPC Central Committee's call. From now on, the regional party and government organs and leading cadres at or above the banner and county level should first take the lead in implementing the policy decision of the CPC Central Committee on the basis of each level supervising the next lower level. They must not indulge in dishonest practices but have a clear-cut stand in combating other's dishonest practices. They should pay special attention to opposing and correcting serious bureaucratic practices, liberalism in the political field, and unhealthy corrosive practices of taking advantage of one's power to seek private gain.

TIANJIN PROHIBITIONS FOR FOREIGN-TRADE PERSONNEL

[Text] Recently the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Economic Relations Commissions under the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal Foreign Affairs Office formulated 10 measures to straighten out party style and improve the work style among the organs.

The measures first urge party committees and leading cadres at all levels on the foreign economic relations and foreign affairs fronts to earnestly study the important speeches given by the central leading comrades at the conference of cadres from central-level organs and to set examples in straightening out party style and improving the work style among the organs. In order to enhance management over foreign economic relations and foreign affairs and to plug loopholes, the municipal commissions of foreign economic relations and foreign affairs have explicitly stipulated that delegations and groups that go abroad and the departments in charge of foreign economic relations and trade and of foreign affairs should strictly enforce policy and discipline concerning foreign affairs. In particular for personnel who go abroad, we should reaffirm discipline regarding the following 10 prohibitions: 1) No one is allowed to waste public funds by going on trips to different scenic spots and taking advantage of foreign tours; 2) no one is allowed to ask for the belongings of foreigners, foreign businessmen, and our diplomatic personnel stationed in foreign countries; 3) no one is allowed to concoct various pretexts to personally share foreign exchange or to seek illegal income; 4) no one is allowed to personally make a decision on gift presentation and to illegally share gifts presented by foreign businessmen; 5) no one is allowed to personally assume responsibility for his travel per diem and to pocket the surplus; 6) no one is allowed to fraudulently speculate in foreign exchange or to deposit money in foreign banks; 7) no one is allowed to violate provisions and to make a detour for seeking other tours; 8) no one is allowed to extend his stay in foreign countries without reason; 9) no one is allowed to reveal secrets; and 10) no one is allowed to damage the prestige of oneself or the motherland.

In line with the 10 prohibitions, units on the foreign economic relations and foreign affairs fronts will conduct a general inspection on the enforcement of discipline in affairs. Matters violating discipline should be resolutely dealt with.

The 10 prohibitions also stipulate that the leading cadres of party and government organs at all levels will not be allowed to take up concurrent post in joint-venture enterprises with foreign countries or to accept any payment by adopting any ways and means from enterprises. Those who hold a concurrent post should resign from their posts immediately. The leading cadres of party organizations should also set examples in correcting malpractices, such as seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power, and resolutely combat them.

In putting forward the 10 prohibitions, the municipal commissions in charge of foreign economic relations and foreign affairs also pointed out that the principal responsible comrades of party committees at all levels should personally take charge of straightening out party style and establish responsibility systems in this regard.

It has been learned that the leading cadres at all levels on these fronts will go deep into grassroots-level units before the Spring Festival to show concern for the people's livelihood and to realistically help them deal with some practical problems that need to be solved urgently in order to make a good start in creating a fundamental turn for the better in party style and work style.

NI ZHIFU ATTENDS TIANJIN INDUSTRIAL FORUM

SK240537 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The municipal meeting to sum up investigations and studies of the three basic links in industry ended on 23 January. Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, attended the forum held on 23 January with the participation of the party and government responsible comrades of various industrial bureaus. He called on various industrial bureaus to rapidly go into action, and strengthen their work.

At the forum, the participants cited their personal experiences in discussing the importance of the three basic links in industry. Responsible comrades of the units in charge of finished products of the first and the second industrial enterprises and of the textile industrial enterprises enumerated many facts and stated that the weak basic links resulted in the weak competitiveness of their products. In looking forward to the future, they said that if they refuse to accelerate the building of the basic links, it will be very difficult to keep pace with the development of the current situation.

Zhang Shiyong, director of the municipal First Light Industry Bureau, said: Our bureau's products need to be upgraded and updated, and we are confronted with a sense of crisis. If we refuse to speed up the building of the basic links, continue to pay no attention to our equipment and physical strength, and only see the immediate interests to the neglect of the long-term interests, just as we did in the past, we will certainly lag behind. In drawing up the Seventh 5-Year Plan for our bureau, we should bring the building of the basic links in line with the plan.

Today's issue of TIANJIN RIBAO carried on the first and the second pages the full text of the speech by Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, at the municipal meeting to sum up investigations and studies of the three basic links in industry. The speech is entitled "Strengthen the Building of the Basic Links, and Revitalize Tianjin's Industry."

PETROLEUM MINISTRY HOLDS CELEBRATION AT DAQING

[Recorded report filed by station reporters on 26 January from the Daqing oil field]

[Experts] By adhering to a high degree of the revolutionary spirit and vigorously promoting scientific and technological progress, the Daqing oil field has stabilized its annual crude oil output at 50 million tons since 1976, has fulfilled the goals of producing 50 million tons of crude oil annually, and has yielded stable output for 10 years. This has enabled the Daqing oil field to reach advanced world standards in terms of overall development, and to become a dazzling jewel in the modernization drive of our country. This afternoon, the Ministry of Petroleum Industry held a ceremonious celebration meeting in Daqing to congratulate the Daqing oil field on achieving its goal of producing 50 million tons of crude oil annually over the past 10 years.

Attending the meeting were Wang Tao, minister of petroleum industry; Zhao Zongnai, (Zhou Yongkang), and Li Tianxiang, vice ministers of petroleum industry; and Zhang Wenbin and Jiao Liren, advisers to the Ministry of Petroleum Industry. Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Hou Jie, governor of the province; and Chen Lei, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, also made a special trip to the Daqing oil field to participate in the celebration. Wang Tao, Sun Weiben and Chen Lei spoke at the meeting. Chen Liemin, secretary of the Daqing City CPC Committee and secretary of the CPC Committee of the Daqing Petroleum Administration Bureau, also spoke at the meeting.

In his speech Comrade Sun Weiben said: Fellow comrades! We are very excited about participating in the celebration held by the Ministry of Petroleum Industry for the Daqing oil field. The fact that Daqing oil field has had stable yields for 10 years running is actually a big victory which deserves celebration. On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, I hereby express my heartfelt congratulations to you on your victory, and extend my cordial greetings and respects to all workers and staff members of the Daqing oil field as well as their family members.

Petroleum is an important material for the socialist modernization drive. The 12th party congress regarded the production of energy resources, including petroleum, as one of the strategic emphases for fulfilling the general goal of economic development by the end of this century. The CPC Central Committee and the State Council are very concerned about the petroleum workers, and have issued many important instructions calling on the Daqing oil field to strengthen survey work, extend the stable-yield period, discover another Daqing oil field, and continue making great contributions to the state for a long time. This time the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have set still higher demands on the Daqing oil field and on its workers and staff members. The provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government believe that the workers and staff members of the Daqing oil field will certainly live up to the trust and expectations of the CPC Central Committee, discover another Daqing oil field, continue to maintain the annual crude oil output at 55 million tons until the end of this century, and make still greater contributions to the socialist modernization drive.'

SUN WEIBEN AT HEILONGJIANG CPC MEETING

[Text] On 22 January, the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee held its Standing Committee meeting to earnestly study the speeches given by the central leading comrades, including Hu Yaobang, at the conference of cadres from the central-level organs with regard to straightening out party style.

After studying the speeches at the meeting, the participants unanimously held that the provincial-level organs will certainly be able to make unremitting efforts to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style by the end of 1986.

The meeting heard a report on the province's implementation of Document No 57 issued by the General Office of the CPC Central Committee. The meeting held that localities and departments throughout the province had attached great importance to the issue after the issuance of Document No 57, and particularly after the establishment of the leading groups in the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government in charge of implementing the document. They have established organizations, enhanced their leadership, and earnestly organized their study in order to upgrade their ideological understanding. Their leading comrades have taken the lead in carrying out inspection and examination and worked out measures to correct their mistakes while conducting inspection and examination. Although the examination activities are only preliminary, the problems discovered in the activities have proved that party and government organs throughout the province still have, in varying degrees, the various manifestations of malpractices pointed out by the central leading comrades in their speeches.

In discussions at the meeting, participating comrades unanimously held that in straightening out party style throughout the province, the provincial-level organs should set examples in the work in which their leading personnel should take the lead in work. In setting examples for the units throughout the province, the provincial-level organs should currently do a good job in grasping the following tasks:

1. The Standing Committee members of the provincial CPC Committee should set themselves as examples in straightening out party style and boldly take charge of this work. The leading bodies at all levels among the provincial-level organs should earnestly study the speeches by the central leading comrades in order to upgrade their understanding. Their top leaders should personally take charge of the work of straightening out party style.

2. In order to push forward the work of straightening out party style, the provincial-level organs should convene their conferences of cadres before the Spring Festival to mobilize them to deeply study these speeches and to make further concrete arrangements for the work of straightening out party style.

3. Efforts should be made to vigorously deal with a number of major and serious cases. Those who have stuck to their old way in spite of the directive and hindered the path of checking and dealing with the malpractices or have shielded wrongdoers in checking activities should be openly dealt with by presenting their typical mistakes. Meanwhile, efforts should be made to openly commend the advanced that have emerged in straightening out party style.

4. Attention should be paid to the protracted and steadfast nature of the work of straightening out party style. Efforts should be made to uphold the principle of grasping the work every day and investigating or dealing with cases carefully and to continuously establish or improve the responsibility systems for the work. The top leaders of the units should truly assume responsibility in this regard.

The party standing committees on the relevant fronts and the leading group in charge of straightening out party style should make concerted efforts to assume responsibility for successfully holding study classes for the top leaders of various units in order to enable the fronts concerned to take steps in straightening out party style. The provincial CPC Standing Committee should frequently discuss the progress made in straightening out party style and strengthen its leadership over the work.

At the meeting, a leading group in charge of straightening out party style was established. Yesterday's meeting was presided over by Comrade Sun Weiben. Also attending the meeting were Comrades Li Gensheng, Chen Yunlin, Liu Chengguo, Zhou Wenhua, Bai Jingfu, Li He, and Huang Feng.

Attending the meeting as observers were leading comrades of the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial people's government, and the provincial CPPCC Committee, including Chen Lei, Wang Luming, Zhang Xiangling, Wang Fei, Li Jianbai, Chen Yuanzhi, He Shoulun, and Wang Zhao.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY VISITS UNIVERSITY

[Text] On the afternoon of 23 January, Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, went to Harbin Engineering University to hear work reports and visit the laboratories.

After arriving in Harbin Engineering University, Sun Weiben said to the leading comrades of the university present on the scene: Your university is the first university I came into contact with when I first arrived in Heilongjiang Province. This time, I am here to recognize the school and the people here and to learn about the situation so that I will be qualified to speak on the future work of the university.

He conscientiously heard the work reports given by Jiang Yihong, secretary of the CPC Committee of Harbin Engineering University, and (Yang Shiting), president of the university. While touching on the issue that some departments and localities have requested Harbin Engineering University to help establish schools, Sun Weiben said: Such a way of doing things is good because it needs less investment but yields greater results as compared with the way schools were established in the past and it can also ensure the quality of training competent personnel. Those departments and localities which need personnel may invest in the existing schools and may run schools with joint efforts.

While touching on the education of students, Sun Weiben said: The schools should not merely disseminate knowledge. They should persist in imparting knowledge and educating the people.

While touching on the implementation of the policy on intellectuals, he said: In implementing the policy on intellectuals, we have to solve many problems such as wages and housing. But the most important thing is to create a good mental state and to enable each and every person to see the development and good prospects of his career and to devote himself to realizing his ideals.

Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, also visited the laser laboratory of the university and had a cordial talk with Professor (Ma Puguang), a special-grade model worker and an outstanding Communist Party member of the province, and acquainted himself with his research achievements. He also wrote these words in the laboratory's visitors' book: We are absolutely capable of scaling the heights of the world. We wish that the laser laboratory will make greater contributions to developing the motherland's scientific undertaking within a short time.

NINGXIA SECRETARY ON MAJOR TASKS FOR 1986

HK210011 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jan 86 p 1

[Report: "Li Xuezhi Gives a Talk to a Staff Reporter on Six Major Issues To Be Grasped Well by the Regional CPC Committee This Year"]

[Text] At the request of our reporter, Li Xuezhi, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, recently gave a talk on the regional CPC Committee's major tasks this year.

Comrade Li Xuezhi said that the general tasks for 1986 are: to continue the propagation and implementation of the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates in a profound manner; to carry out more resolutely the line, principles, and policies drawn up since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee; to consolidate, assimilate, enrich, and perfect various reform measures; to persist in the "two civilizations"; to ensure the sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy; and to further consolidate and develop the political situation of stability and unity, in order to lay a solid foundation for the smooth completion of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The regional CPC Committee will concentrate its efforts on the following six major issues:

1. It will strengthen macroeconomic control, straighten out various economic relationships, and enliven the urban economy. On the basis of enlivening enterprises, and in particular large and medium-sized enterprises, it will further streamline administration, delegate power to the lower levels, ascertain the scale of power expansion, and do a good job in a whole range of reforms. It will energetically develop crosswise economic relationships, pay close attention to weak links and prominent contradictions in economic life, and solve the shortage of funds. It will strengthen technical transformation, make technological progress, fully tap the potential of enterprises in production, and make efforts to improve the quality of products, reduce material consumption, and attain better economic results. It will not demand uniformity in fixing the growth rate of industrial production, and the growth rate of industrial production in the entire region will be fixed at about 10 percent, allowing enterprises with better conditions and economic results to develop a little faster.

2. The regional CPC Committee will conscientiously implement the strategic principle of agriculture being the foundation of the national economy, further carry out rural policies, profoundly carry out the second step of rural reform, and continue to readjust the production structure in order to promote the overall development of the rural economy. As grain production is a major matter having an important bearing on the national economy and the people's livelihood, we must not take it lightly but must make a good job of it. The regional CPC Committee will rely on policies and science in increasing investment, improving the conditions for agricultural production, and promoting grain production, so that the region's grain output can be steadily fixed at 3 billion jin. It will perfect the grain contract purchase system and complete the assignment of purchase tasks to every household before spring plowing. It will energetically develop a diversified economy, which includes industrial crops, forestry, animal husbandry, fishery, industry, commerce, transportation, and service trades. In particular, there should be breakthroughs in animal husbandry in the mountainous areas and in fishery in the areas along rivers. In speeding up the development of township enterprises, it will persist in the principle of giving "active support, rational planning, correct guidance, and good management." It will organize service work before and after production, broaden the channels for commodity circulation, and help the peasants open up all avenues for becoming better off through labor. It will strengthen its "help-the-poor" work and construction in "backward villages" so as to change the backward features of poor areas as soon as possible.

3. The regional CPC Committee will carry out scientific, technological, and educational system reforms well. Last year, we put forward suggestions on how to carry out scientific, technological, and educational system reforms. This year, we will attach great importance to carrying out these reforms. Reforming the fund allocation system and opening the technology market are two key links in scientific and technological system reform, and efforts should be made for further progress. It is necessary to form the fine habit of "respecting knowledge and talented people" and to mobilize the entire society to pay attention to and support the development of the educational cause.

4. The regional CPC Committee will further carry out the policy of opening up to the world. On the basis of conscientiously summing up experience it will work out more effective measures for opening up to the world, strengthen the introduction of advanced foreign technology and cooperation with other provinces, expand economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries, and consolidate and develop friendly relations between the region and Islamic countries. It will formulate special policies for the production, purchase, prices, and taxation of export commodities, in order to protect the initiative of producers and increase foreign exchange earnings.

5. In accordance with the CPC Central Committee's proposals on drawing up the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the regional CPC Committee will encourage the masses to take part in formulating a Seventh 5-Year Plan which is suited to the region's specific conditions. It will hold firm to the policy of economic stability, exercise strict control over the expansion of supply and demand, and continue to control the scale of investment in fixed assets. The region will concentrate its limited financial and material resources on the construction of key projects. It will make unremitting efforts to carry out family planning work well and strictly control population growth.

6. The regional CPC Committee will strengthen ideological and political work and bring about a turn for the better in party style and the general mood of society. It will study and sum up laws and methods for ideological and political work in the new period. It will continue to carry out party rectification well, strengthen cadres' theoretical study, and improve the political quality of party members and cadres. It will rectify the work style of regional party and government organs. Party and government organs at various levels should also rectify unhealthy tendencies for the sake of serving the people heart and soul. Emphatic commendation will be given to advanced collectives and exemplary individuals in the "two civilizations" drive. It will carry on the struggle of cracking down on serious crimes and serious economic criminal activities, check and handle major cases, and strengthen public security work.

Comrade Li Xuezhi said that much arduous work awaits to be done in 1986. We hope that party organizations and people's governments at various levels, democratic parties, people's organizations, party members, cadres, and the people of various nationalities will unite as one, carry forward the spirit of the old man who removed the mountain, work hard, and make new contributions to realizing the great target of enabling "Ningxia to take off."

SHAANXI CONFERENCE OF PARTY DELEGATES CONCLUDES

HK220222 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The 5-day Shaanxi provincial conference of party delegates victoriously concluded on 21 January after completing its agenda. Bai Jinian, Li Qingwei, Zhou Yaguang, Zhang Ze, Yan Kelun, Lu Jianren, Chang Lifu, Mou Lingsheng, Liang Qi, Hu Qingyun, Tao Zhong, and (Li Senhui) attended the closing ceremony, which was presided over by Comrade Li Qingwei. On the basis of full discussion and debate, the conference democratically elected additional members of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial Advisory and Discipline Inspection Commissions.

The conference also discussed and approved the draft outline for the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan of national economic and social development, and a decision on a number of questions in strengthening ideological and political work. The draft outline for the Seventh 5-Year Plan will be submitted to the provincial People's Congress for examination and approval.

At the concluding ceremony, Comrade Zhou Yaguang delivered a speech entitled "The Whole Party Must Work To Ensure Implementation Down to the Grass Roots." He said: This was a very successful conference which has adopted very good documents. But the work after the conference is even more important. The key lies in implementing its intentions. The question of implementation is an old one, not one that is just raised today. However, not enough importance has been given it in recent years. Many good documents and ideas have failed to produce the proper results because we have not done a good job in implementation. A lot of work goes no further than being discussed at conferences, written about in documents, and spoken of; it is not implemented down to the grass roots. This is a big defect in our work style. It is imperative to cure this in order to do a good job in our work.

In recent years our cadres have spent little time going down and have kept a distance from the grass roots. In some leading organs there are many people with nothing to do, and their work style is seriously bureaucratic. Such a work style is the main cause of generalized work methods and failure to implement tasks.

In having the whole party work to ensure implementation down to the grass roots, the cadres must first go down. In the future, the province and the prefectures, cities, counties, and districts must form a system for transferring cadres to work in the grass roots. The number of cadres remaining in the organs to handle routine work must be reduced to the minimum, so that more cadres can go down to the grass roots.

Zhou Yaguang said: We must advocate doing practical work and gaining practical results. In the past, it appeared that many of our tasks were conveyed downward from level to level, but what was actually happening was that production targets and documents were circulated around each level, and many localities acutally turned into mere transmission stations and post offices.

Following the conclusion of this conference, all areas and departments and units must, on the basis of conveying the spirit of the conference, first get a good grasp of two things: 1) Seriously organize education in the situation and in policies, so that the cadres and masses will clearly understand the current excellent situation and have a clear picture of the goals and principles and policies for the seventh 5-Year Plan. 2) Get a good grasp of rectifying the work style of the leadership organs at the provincial, prefectural, city, county, and district levels. In accordance with the intentions of the central and provincial CPC committees on solving a number of current serious problems in organ work style, we must seriously investigate and deal with major cases and resolutely correct unhealthy trades.

On the morning of 21 January, the conference democratically elected 17 additional members and 4 alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee, 17 members of the provincial Advisory Commission, including Li Xipu, and 11 members of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commisstion. As a result of the election, 15 persons will no longer serve as members or alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee, 3 will no longer serve as members of the provincial Advisory Commission, and 9 will no longer serve as members of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission.

SHAANXI LEADER ON INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS, TASKS

[Excerpts] Vice Governor Zeng Shenda made a speech at a mobilization meeting on industry and communications convened on 24 January by the provincial government. He demanded that leaders at all levels get rid of blind optimism and slackness and do everything possible to boost production in the first quarter of this year.

Zeng Shenda said: The province achieved sustained, steady, and coordinated development in industry and communications in 1985. However, we must keep cool heads amid the excellent situation. In particular, we must realize our shortcomings. Abnormalities have emerged in the province's industrial production since the fourth quarter of last year. The problem of an excessive drop in production occurred in the light and textile industries just as the busy season in the markets started. The rate of decline in the petrochemical and pharmaceutical industries in the fourth quarter was also rather high. This state of affairs has already had a negative impact on industry and communications in the first quarter of this year.

Comrade Zeng Shenda pointed out that the main reason for the emergence of these problems is that certain leading comrades have become blindly optimistic, complacent, and slack amid the excellent situation, holding that as work was done quite well last year, they should pause to catch their breath this year. Some leaders cannot distinguish between excessive and normal speeds. When arranging plans, they set excessively high demands on the spot but deliberately hold something back when reporting these plans to higher authorities. Some other leaders see many difficulties but few favorable conditions for this year's production.

Comrade Zeng Shenda therefore stressed that it is essential to take immediate forceful measures to transform this abnormal situation as quickly as possible. To ensure a normal growth rate in production in the first quarter, and make a good start to the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Comrade Zeng Shenda put forward the following demands on behalf of the provincial government:

1. Leaders at all levels must seriously eliminate blind optimism, fear of difficulties, slackness, and so on, brace their spirits, and strive for a 10 percent increase in industry and communications production in the first quarter.

2. All prefectures, cities, departments, and enterprises must make proper arrangements for production around Spring Festival.

3. We must get an early grasp of key technological transformation projects, so that they can start work and produce results early.

4. Pay attention to ideological and political work during the wage reform.

TAIWAN'S DIPLOMATIC ISOLATION INCREASING

OW290327 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Station commentator's commentary: "Share Honors of the Chinese Nation"]

[Text] The year just ended witnessed new and momentous developments in China's socialist modernization drive, and rich achievement in China's independent and peaceful foreign policy. During that year, our leaders paid friendly visits to over 40 countries in different regions of the world and also welcomed visiting leaders from over 40 countries. China has signed economic, scientific, technical, and cultural cooperation agreements with many countries, and our friendly relations of cooperation with many other countries have been further developed. Last year, Bolivia, Grenada, and Nicaragua established diplomatic relations with China. Currently, a total of 134 countries have established diplomatic relations. We are making more and more friends. Our international status and prestige have been further enhanced. It is a well-known fact that, as an important force in maintaining peace and promoting development in the world today, China is held in high esteem by the international community.

By contrast, the Taiwan authorities are more and more isolated in the international community. In analyzing Taiwan's diplomatic dilemma, Taiwan's HSIBAO ZAZHI [SHIH PAO CHA CHIH] says, with great anxiety: An obvious tendency indicates that the Republic of China is diminishing as an entity, a member of the international community. It is being reduced to a geographical name, similar to Hong Kong. Taiwan's ZHONGGUO SHIBAO [CHUNG KUO SHIH PAO] has said, pointedly: We engage in, and talk very loudly about, substantive diplomacy, because we have no alternative and have to be content with second best. Formal diplomatic relations are, after all, commendable. It is not permissible to suffer any loss by neglect. Another Taiwan magazine article deplores Taiwan's position in the international community, becoming worse each year.

Only 23 countries now maintain diplomatic relations with Taiwan. Of these, 13 are in Latin America. So Latin America is a focal point for Taiwan's diplomatic work. Taiwan's newspapers and magazines have complained that the Taiwan authorities' Ministry of Foreign Affairs is so incompetent that it has become a ministry of severance of diplomatic relations. To be fair, this is a matter of physical impossibility, rather than of the ministry's competence. The Taiwan authorities have spared no effort to work on Latin American countries, providing them with low-interest or interest-free loans, or aiding them with agricultural or medical teams. In the past year, the Taiwan authorities sent vice president, defense minister, and vice foreign minister to visit Latin America. Yet, what of the outcome? Well, everybody knows it.

The Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legitimate government of China. Taiwan is an inalienable part of Chinese territory. This is recognized by the international community. China's diplomatic work will no doubt further develop and make greater achievements each year, establishing diplomatic relations with still more countries and exerting still greater international influence. At the same time, the limited number of countries with diplomatic relations with the Taiwan authorities will irreversibly decrease, one by one. The Taiwan authorities will become still more isolated, and find themselves in a still more sever predicament.

In is the common desire of all Chinese, at home and abroad, that their motherland be peacefully reunified. The method of one country, two systems has solved the Hong Kong problem. It is totally applicable to Taiwan. This concept has been endorsed by an increasing number of far-sighted people, including Taiwan compatriots.

People want the Taiwan authorities to change their frigid, three negatives policy, enter into contact and negotiate with the Chinese Communist Party, so that the motherland can be reunified at an early date, and the Taiwan authorities can join hands in building the motherland and sharing the honor of the Chinese nation as a member of the international community.

REPORT ON HIGHER CRIME RATES IN TAIWAN CITED

["Crimes of Violence Seriously Threaten Taiwan's Social Order" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 24 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to a report from Taiwan, Lo Chang, commissioner of the Taiwan police department, recently pointed out: Crimes of violence and theft in the Taiwan region will continue to rise in the future and the form of criminal offences will develop into organized and well-planned crimes. If they are not effectively curbed, public order will deteriorate. In a report to the "members of the National Assembly" visiting the criminal police bureau on 21 January, Lo Chang said: From 1975 to 1984, crimes of violence in Taiwan rose by 54.57 percent, and thefts by 27.23 percent. The form of criminal offences also developed from those committed by unarmed individuals to crimes carried out by groups of people using firearms, and from casual to premeditated crimes.

In 1985 the public order units in Taiwan set up "special groups for the thorough examination of cases" and cracked down on undesirable triad members, but major criminal cases still frequently occurred. At the end of last year, a number of serious cases, involving the killing of policemen, seizure of firearms, and armed robbery of vehicles delivering money to banks, occurred repeatedly. According to statistics, in 1985 the Taiwan police authorities handled 4,250 major criminal cases, accounting for 6.27 percent of the total number of criminal cases. Of these, 2,713 cases were cracked, accounting for 65.01 percent of the cases handled. Compared with 1984, the number of premeditated murders, knidnappings, and serious thefts fell, while that of robberies, hold-ups, and rapes rose.

ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE ON UNEMPLOYMENT IN TAIWAN

[Report: "More Job Applicants in Taiwan Last Year Than Jobs Available" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 24 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Taiwan newspapers today reported that the number of applicants for jobs had beaten the record in Taiwan last year, while the number of vacancies had dropped drastically. Such a situation had seldom been seen in the past decade.

Statistics provided by the Career Training Bureau under the Taiwan "Ministry of the Interior" reveal that the number of applicants for jobs was recorded at 279,000 or more during the period from January to December last year, an increase of 15.62 percent over the previous year. During the same period, the registered number of vacancies provided by local manufacturing firms amounted to only 70 percent of that in the previous year, the lowest figure for the past decade. The Career Training Bureau also pointed out: The principal contributing factor in this situation was the economic depression. The decline in the demand of the sectors concerned for manpower led to a very serious case of supply far exceeding demand. According to another report, the unemployment rate was estimated at 2.9 percent in Taiwan last year, the highest figure for the past 20 years.

PREPARATORY WORK UNDER WAY ON SANXIA PROVINCE

HK280919 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 28 Jan 86 p 1

["Special Feature" by Tung Chou: "Interview With the Responsible Person of the Preparatory Group for Sanxia Province"]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Jan (TA KUNG PAO) -- I was told earlier that China was preparing to set up its 30th province -- Sanxia Province. This time in Beijing, I got a chance to verify this hearsay.

I happened to be staying in the same hotel in Beijing as some representatives who were attending a certain national conference. Once when I glanced over the namelist of the representatives, I suddenly discovered that after the 29 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions, there was also a list of representatives from the preparatory group for Sanxia Province. Upon inquiry, I learned that beginning this year, the name of this province has begun to be used independently in the state plans.

Several days later I met Xin Wen [6580 2429], deputy head of the preparatory group for Sanxia Province, and he gladly answered some questions I raised. Xin Wen said: The Sanxia project will start very soon, Hence the establishment of Sanxia Province. The most difficult problem for the Sanxia project is the placement of new residents. Whether implementing the high-dam plan or the low-dam plan, it will be necessary to move several hundred thousand people. These migrants are distributed in Sichuan and Hubei Provinces. In order to make a good placement of the migrants, we will need to set up an organization to tackle the matter under unified planning. At first, the state considered forming a Sanxia special zone or a Sanxia administrative region, but finally it decided to set up Sanxia Province.

As everyone knows, the problem of migration is one of the most troublesome problems for any government in building reservoirs. To solve this problem by setting up a new province shows the resolution of the CPC in building the Sanxia project. After the project is completed, not only will the problem of the flood threat to the middle and lower reaches of the Chang Jiang be fundamentally solved, but also, some 110 billion kWh of electricity can be produced every year.

The future vice governor told me that nearly 10,000 scientific workers have carried out investigations and studies for this project over the past 30-plus years. After building the Danjiangkou reservoir at the Han Jiang, a tributary of the Chang Jiang, and building the Gezhouba reservoir on the mainstream of the Chang Jiang, the Chinese construction team is already capable of completing this magnificent project, including building dams and installing generators. Of course, there are also different opinions on the Sanxia project. That is why this plan is still under discussion. Nevertheless, the preparatory work for setting up Sanxia Province brooks no delay.

Yichang City Will Be the Provincial Capital

Xin Wen said: "Sanxia Province will be situated at the upper and middle reaches of the Chang Jiang and between Daba Shan and Wuling Shan. With an area of 84,000 square kilometers, it will be the smallest province in the interior of China, but is population will be about 18 million and it will have 30 counties. Yichang will be the provincial capital." I was in Yichang once. Since the Gazhouba was built there, it is also called the "city of hydroelectricity." Sandouping, the place selected for building the Sanxia dam is not far from here.

Xin Wan also told me that the preparatory work for Sanxia Province is being carried out smoothly. A plan has been worked out for setting up provincial organs and appointing their work personnel.

The work of organizing provincial departments and bureaus has already begun, and efforts have been made to work out the strategy for provincial economic development. The superiority of this province is its rich natural resources. Apart from waterpower resources, there are also iron, phosphorus, coal, natural gas, and so forth. The tourist resources in this province are also exceptional advantages endowed by nature. The wonderful sight of Sanxia is world famous. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, a number of key projects, including a cement factory, an iron alloy factory, and a synthetic ammonia factory, will be completed in this province. A large airport near Yichang is also planned.

Referring to the placement of the migrants, Xin Wen said that, in the past, a method of compensation was adopted for migrants, but it often happened that some 20 or 30 years after construction was completed, compensation had still not been finished and became a bottomless pit to fill. This time we plan to make the migration serve the exploitation; that is, to use the state compensation fees as investment and organize the migrants to exploit the natural resources and establish new projects and tertiary industry, so as to blaze a new trail for better economic results.

SHENZHEN TO CUT SPENDING BY 21 PERCENT IN 1986

HK280419 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST (BUSINESS NEWS Supplement) in English 28 Jan 86 p 1

[By Paul Sham]

[Excerpts] Investment on infrastructure development in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone will be cut by about 21 percent this year, to 1.9 billion yuan (HK$4.65 billion) from 2.4 billion yuan last year, a source close to the Shenzhen Government said yesterday. The plan to cut spending which was finalised recently after eight months of study, is in response to Beijing's instructions to cool the overheated economy. The source told BUSINESS NEWS in order to maintain Shenzhen's development on the right track, infrastructure investment will concentrate on the industrial sector. The study, done by the Shenzhen Government, indicated excessive investment had gone into the construction of hotels, commercial complexes and residential buildings over the past few years at the expense of the industrial sector. The call to reduce the scale of infrastructure development was made by Beijing in April, the source said.

He said last year's construction boom in Shenzhen had revealed that foreign and domestic investors from other provinces had miscalculated the market situation, and the Shenzhen Government's management of the zone lacked direction. In light of the oversupply of hotel rooms and residential units in the city, the source said the Shenzhen Government is not likely to approve new construction projects in the near future. He said the restrictions will be eased only when the market situation has improved. He said construction projects for which agreements have been signed but work has not started will be cancelled, while work will slow down on current projects. The focus this year will be on building such facilities as factories, roads, telecommunications, railway and port development. The source said the Shenzhen Government is still drawing up the priority list of industries and it is not known which industries will be singled out for faster development.

Meanwhile, Shenzhen's first construction magazine, ARCHITECTURE REVIEW, was published recently. The magazine will be published on an irregular basis by the Shenzhen University for domestic and overseas circulation. Speaking at a banquet yesterday to mark the publication, the magazine's chief editor, Zhang Liangjun, told reporters it will serve as a bridge between construction and architecture circles in China and overseas.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON U.S. SANCTIONS AGAINST LIBYA

[Newsletter from Fu Fuyuan, Cairo-based GUANGMING RIBAO reporter: "The Sky Over Libya Is Overcast"]

[Text] On 3 January, the U.S. aircraft carrier USS Coral Sea, with 4 squadrons of F-18 strike fighters aboard, left Italy for North Africa. Tension in the area increased immediately when the U.S. Defense Department asserted that the United States could rely on its forces in the Mediterranean to launch a strike against Libya.

This conflict can be traced back to 27 December 1985. On that day, a handful of terrorists raided the Israeli El Al Airline offices at the Rome and Vienna international airports, killing and wounding more than 100, most of whom were passengers. The terrorist attacks were condemned by world opinion. However, Israel seized the opportunity to accuse the Palestine Liberation Organization, saying it would take retaliatory measures. The United States also claimed that the airport attacks were launched by a terrorist organization split from Fatah and led by Abu Nidal, stressing that his organization received vigorous support from the Libyan Government. Thus, the United States hinted at retaliatory options to punish Libya.

On the evening of 7 January, President Reagan announced comprehensive economic sanctions against Libya and termination of U.S. economic activities there. Furthermore, he urged U.S. companies not to exploit, transport, or import oil from Libya and ordered all Americans in Libya to leave the country immediately. On the evening of 8 January, Reagan made another announcement on freezing all Libyan savings and assets in the United States, totaling several hundred million U.S. dollars. The United States also threatened that it would not rule out further sanctions against Libya, including military options.

The move by the U.S. Government to threaten a Third World sovereign state evoked worldwide opposition. Libya charged that the American embargo was against international law and tantamount politically to a declaration of war. Libya declared that it was not afraid of such a threat. If Libya were invaded, it would raid cities and ports where U.S. warships are berthed. The meeting of foreign ministers of the Organization of the Islamic Conference held in Morocco supported Libya's move against the U.S. threat. Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, and the Palestine Liberation Organization, which have divergent views with Libya, also stressed that they would stand on the Libyan side against the U.S. threat.

Reagan appealed to all countries to join Washington's sanctions against Libya. Observers hold that the success of the U.S. economic sanctions depends on the support and cooperation of its Western allies. The sanctions would be of no effect even if they are imposed. As a matter of fact, reaction from West European countries was cool. Britain held that the sanctions would not work. West Germany, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, and the Netherlands also expressed reluctance to follow the American lead. A number of countries expressed dissatisfaction against the move because the United States had not consulted its allies in advance. The Soviet Union issued one statement after another condemning the United States.

The situation is now getting worse. Public figures here hold that the United States is trying to make an issue of the Libyan case in an attempt to divert the people's attention from Israel's occupation of Arab territory and violation of Palestine's national rights, which is the crux of the Middle East problem, and to pursue hegemonism in the region. The measures adopted by the United States have further intensified the already unsettled Middle East situation.

BEIJING REPORTS JINGJI RIBAO CHIEF'S USSR VISIT

OW300536 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 28 Jan 86

XINHUA NOTES USSR MISSES MAJOR ECONOMIC TARGETS

[Text] Moscow, January 25 (XINHUA) — The Soviet Union in 1985 achieved slight ecnomic growth, but failed to meet planned targets in oil, agriculture and other major sectors, according to official figures published here today. The figures, issued by the Central Statistics Board and published by the official TASS news agency, showed that the Soviet national income grew by 3.1 percent in 1985, to about 567 billion roubles, slightly below the planned target of 3.5 percent. The Statistics Board said that increases in labour productivity accounted for 96 percent of the national income.

According to the figures, industrial output in 1985 rose 3.9 percent, in line with the target for the year but down from 1984's 4.2 percent. Experts attribute the drop to the slow start in the first six months of the year, when production barely grew at all. In the second half of the year, the growth of industrial production was 4.6 percent or a 50 percent improvement over the first half.

The year-end statistics said the Soviet Union generated 1,545 billion kilowatt hours of electricity in 1985 and produced 643 billion cubic meters of natural gas and 726 million tonnes of coal, figures which represents production increases of four, nine and two percent, respectively, over the previous year. Meanwhile, steel output totalled 155 million tonnes last year, or 0.2 percent more than 1984. However, oil production continued to be a major headache for the Kremlin in its efforts to modernize the national economy. Last year, oil output totalled 595 million tonnes, well down the latest revised target of 630 million tonnes and 1984's 613 million tonnes.

As in the past six years, no figures were released for production in the troubled grain sector, which experts estimate at around 190 million tonnes, roughly on a par with recent years but well below the original annual five-year plan target of 239 million tonnes. The statistics also showed that the foreign trade volume was about 141 billion roubles in 1985, an increase of only one percent over 1984.

Sectors where targets were missed included the manufacture of ready-rolled steel, other ferrous metals, mineral fertilizers, symthetic resins and plastics. Experts said the causes of the Soviet failure to fulfill many of the planned 1985 targets were varied. They include the lack of efficient reforts in the planning and management system, slow scientific and technological progress, and production inefficiency.

SENIOR MAC MEMBER DENOUNCES 'TEAM SPIRIT-86'

[Text] Pyongyang, January 28 (XINHUA) -- A senior member of the Korean-Chinese side on the Military Armistice Commission [MAC] denounced the upcoming U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises and demanded their immediate cancellation, the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported today. Speaking at the 433rd meeting of the commission at Panmunjom, Yi Tae-ho charged that the scheduled large-scale military exercises -- code-named "Team Spirit-86" -- involving more than 200,000 U.S. and South Korean Armed Forces have contributed to "heightening the tension to an extreme pitch, further increasing the grave danger of a nuclear war and bringing the dialogues between the North and the South again to a suspension."

Li said that in an effort to ease tension on the Korean peninsula and provide a favorable atmosphere for the North-South dialogue to peacefully settle the Korean question, the Korean Government had voluntarily suspended all its military exercises. However, the U.S.-South Korean side disregarded the peace initiative of the North and planned the "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercises, he said this "is a wanton violation of the preamble of the Armistice Agreement calling for a 'final peaceful settlement' of the Korean question." he said. The "Team Spirit-86" joint exercises are scheduled to start February 10. Li said that the exercises are "an insult to the entire Korean people" and "a vicious challenge." He said that experience has shown that increased tension on the peninsula not only hampers the North-South dialogue, but also makes it fruitless.

DPRK RELEASES JAPANESE FISHING BOAT, CREW

[Text] Pyongyang, January 29 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) has released this morning a Japanese fishing boat which illegally crossed its military sea boundary, according to the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY (KCNA). The fishing boat was stopped and detained by a patrol boat of the Navy of the Korean People's Army after fishing inside the DPRK's military boundary on the East Korea Bay. According to investigators, the fishing boat belonged to the Shinwa-Maru Fishing Company of Sakaiminato City, Tottori Prefecture, Japan. The crew admitted having crossed the Korean military security [words indistinct] fish on two previous occasions.

DPRK Navy authorities released the fishing boat and its crew after considering an admission of error from the Japanese seamen and their plea for leniency. The DPRK has (?asked) Japan to take appropriate measures to prevent further intrusions into the militarily sensitive waters.

ENVOY TO JAPAN HOSTS TAIWAN RESIDENTS

[Text] Tokyo, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to Japan Zhang Shu today expressed his hope that Taiwan residents in Japan will play a greater role in the cause of national reunification. The ambassador, hosting a buffet reception entertaining about 200 Taiwan residents, said that with things getting better and better in China in recent years, an increasing number of people of Taiwan origin have been back to the motherland visiting relatives and the homeland. This, he said, has contributed a great deal to bridging people on both sides of the Taiwan Straits.

On behalf of the Taiwan residents living in Tokyo and Yokohama, Chairman of the "Minhui" association of fellow provincials from Taiwan Liu Chisheng said at the reception that Taiwan residents overseas are willing to make a contribution to the motherland's reunification.

JAPANESE PETITION TOKYO OVER NORTHERN TERRITORIES

[Text] Tokyo, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Japan's Governor of Hokkaido Takahiro Yokomichi, delivered a petition to Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone today demanding the return of the northern territories.

The northern territories are four northern islands just off Japan's Hokkaido: Habomai, Shikotan, Etorofu and Kunashiri Island. The four islands have been occupied by the Soviet Union since 1945. The petition asks that the Japanese Government make an effort to conclude treaty with the Soviet Union on the peaceful return of the territory and establish a solid and peaceful friendship between the two countries.

Nakasone replied that the Japanese Government will continue its efforts toward the return of the northern territories. "Our nation's movement for the return of the northern territories has earned more and more support from the other nations," Nakasone said. He appealed to the whole nation to join in the movement. About 20 people went together with Yokomichi to Tokyo, representing the people of Hokkaido and the northeast regions.

SUN YAT-SEN LETTER TO SHED LIGHT ON REVOLUTION

OW250340 Beijing XINHUA in English 0255 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] Hong Kong, January 24 (XINHUA) -- A singaporean collector has announced that he is putting up for sale an English letter written 70 years ago by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the great Chinese revolutionary leader. According to Singapore press reports today, the collector, who doesn't want to be identified, said that the letter would throw important light on the revolution of 1911 led by Dr. Sun Yat-sen which overthrew the Qing Dynasty. The report said that the collector's family had close connections with leading Chinese historical figures.

PREM MEETS CUI NAIFU-LED DELEGATION IN BANGKOK

[Text] Bangkok, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon promised here today that Thailand would continue to do its utmost to develop friendly cooperation with China. During his meeting with a Chinese delegation led by Minister for Civil Administration Affairs Cui Naifu, Prem said that Thailand and China have maintained close and friendly relations and the two countries have developed excellent and fruitful cooperation in many fields.

The Chinese delegation arrived here yesterday for a 10-day visit to Thailand at the invitation of the Interior Ministry of Thailand.

THAI MARINES REINFORCED ALONG CAMBODIAN BORDER

OW281119 Beijing XINHUA in English 0835 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] Bangkok, January 28 (XINHUA) -- The Thai Marine Forces guarding the Thai-Kampuchean border in the eastern province of Trat will strengthen their defence capability to resist the frequent intrusions into Thai soil by the Vietnamese troops. This was stated yesterday by General Athit Kamlang-ek, supreme commander of the Armed Forces of Thailand, according to the press reports here today.

Athit said, in addition to their successive assaults on Trat frontier recently which resulted in three Thai navymen killed, the Vietnamese also intruded into the Thai territory in Nam Yun District of Ubon Ratchathani Province but were pushed back by the Thai Army. Signs indicated that the Vietnamese Army in Kampuchea were making full preparations to launch massive military mopping-up campaign against the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces in Thai border areas, the commander said. The Thai Armed Forces would send more reinforcements to Trat and Ubon border areas to cope with more possible Vietnamese intrusions, he added.

SRV WITHDRAWS TROOPS FROM THAI-CAMBODIA BORDER

[Text] Bangkok, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Intensified military activities by Kampuchean resistance forces have forced Hanoi to withdraw some of its occupation troops from the Thai-Kampuchean border, local newspaper THE NATION REVIEW reported today.

Quoting a Thai military authoritative source, the report said since November last year, the Vietnamese troops had also withdrawn about 30-40 Soviet-made tanks from Pailin, a town opposite Pong Nam Ron District of Thailand's eastern province of Chanthaburi, to Rattanamonthol, a district deeper inside Kampuchea.

The source disclosed that three regiments of the Vietnamese Fourth, 330th and 339th Divisions, based in the Kampuchean provinces of Koh Kong and Pursat opposite Klong Yai, Bo Rai and Muang Districts of Trat Province in eastern Thailand, were moved into the Kampuchea interior to protect the area north of Phnom Penh and Highway No 4 which links the Kampuchean port town of Kampong Som and Phnom Penh. He said that Kampuchean resistance forces, especially the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, have been active in Battambang, northern Siem Reap, around the lake, Tonle Sap, in particular, and in the area close to Kampong Som. He also confirmed that the National Army and the Vietnamese troops had been engaged in heavy fighting in border areas opposite Chanthaburi and Trat Provinces of eastern Thailand.

HONG KONG OFFICIAL OPTIMISTIC ABOUT INDUSTRY

[Text] Hong Kong, January 26 (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong's secretary for trade and industry, Eric Ho, holds an optimistic view on the city's industrial future despite rising protectionism in its major markets. Ho explained the situation in an interview with OUTLOOK WEEKLY (OVERSEAS EDITION), which appears in its January 27 issue.

Dealing with the impact of protectionism, he said Hong Kong can expect some gain from the next round of multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade). A preparatory committee would be set up at a GATT ministerial meeting to be held in September. The United States is expected to press Japan and European countries to give up their "unfair" trading policies in the new round of negotiations and ensure "liberalization" of international trade, Ho said. Any improvement in the general trade environment will only benefit Hong Kong, he declared.

Referring to the expiry of the current Multi-Fiber Arrangement (MFA) in July, Ho said he and the Trade Department would do their utmost to offset the effects of protectionism on Hong Kong's textile trade. As regards U.S. Senator John Danforth's proposal for excluding Hong Kong from the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) which allows imports from selected places to enter the United States duty-free, Ho pointed out that in value terms only 16 percent of Hong Kong's exports to the U.S. is still enjoying such treatment. Textiles, garments and footwear have long ceased to benefit from it, he added. Hong Kong's industry has high flexibility and good reputation for filling orders on time, Ho said. It can always find a way out provided it keeps up this tradition.

He admitted that Hong Kong does not have an adequate economic foundation to support high-tech research and development and produce most sophisticated products. But the local industry is capable of turning out high-tech goods of a secondary grade, he said. Ho pointed to the fact that industrial investment is still on a net increase, showing that industrial circles are striving to raise the technological level of Hong Kong's manufacturing industries. Ho said that the proposed third university in Hong Kong which is likely to place special emphasis on technology will help ensure an adequate supply of trained manpower in Hong Kong's industry. The weakening of the U.S. dollar, to which the Hong Kong dollar is pegged, will also benefit local exports this year, he added.

BANK OF CHINA TO INCREASE SERVICES TO HONG KONG

[Text] Hong Kong, 23 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Huang Diyan, director of the Bank of China's Hong Kong and Macao Administration, said today that the Bank of China group will further strengthen its services to Hong Kong and Macao industry and commerce. And while basing itself in Hong Kong, the group will help develop economic and trade contacts between the mainland, Hong Kong, and foreign countries, and pave the way and provide information and funds for China's external economic contacts and China's economic cooperation with foreign countries. Huang Diyan made the above statement when talking about the future development of the services of the Bank of China group to ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE correspondents.

Huang Diyan said that in recent years, the strength of the Bank of China group has increased. Last year, the various services of the Bank of China group developed greatly, and the level of deposits and loans increased by over 30 percent over the previous year. On supporting the construction in the hinterland, Huang Diyan said that last year, the Bank of China group invested a total of HK$4.2 billion, either through direct investment in the mainland or by helping businessmen to invest in the mainland. Half of the funds were invested in the special economic zones and 14 coastal cities open to the outside world.

As far as the future development of the Bank of China group is concerned, Huang Diyan said that the group will continue to expand its business and services, provide new services, such as increasing the level of foreign currency deposits, acting as a commission agent in the buying and selling of foreign exchange and securities and so on, and providing more services to the various social strata in Hong Kong and Macao. In addition, the group will strengthen its services to Hong Kong and Macao industry and commerce, continue to attach great importance to industrial loans, and in accordance with the management characteristics of Hong Kong and Macao businessmen, gradually explore a set of new methods of providing loans that not only conform to the actual needs of the entrepreneurs, but also guarantee the safety of bank funds, in order to achieve better results.

Huang Diyan added that the Bank of China group will continue to work for the development of commercial bank services, for cooperation with enterprises on the mainland and in Hong Kong and Macao in raising funds, for organizing bank groups to provide loans, for issuing bonds or deposit certificates, and so on. He said that last year, one-third of the total investment on the mainland, HK$1.4 billion, was spent on tourist projects. This year, the stress will be shifted to production projects, especially some projects employing advanced technology, whose products will be exported to earn foreign exchange. In order to do this, the Bank of China group will strengthen its contacts with the banks in the mainland and mainland institutions stationed in Hong Kong.

Huang Diyan pointed out that while strengthening its services in Hong Kong and the mainland, the Bank of China group will expand its overseas services. He said that in recent years, Hong Kong's entrepot trade, especially the entrepot trade linking the mainland and foreign countries, has developed rapidly, and has become an important part of Hong Kong's economic activities. Hong Kong's role as a bridge will continue to be developed in the future. In order to adapt itself to this new trend of development, the Bank of China group will strengthen its ties with the overseas banks that have business relations with the Bank of China, with foreign banks, and with overseas customers; expand its overseas services and business; and contribute to the development of the entrepot trade.

SRI LANKAN MINISTER ON RELATIONS WITH CHINA

[Text] Colombo, January 24 (XINHUA) -- "The present relationship between Sri Lanka and China is on an honorable, useful and satisfying footing which is based on mutual understanding and interest, and which follows the principle of continuing solid relations with each other," Sri Lankan National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali said here today. He made these remarks when addressing the second annual meeting of the Sri Lanka-China Society.

The minister said: "Many countries in the world have China societies. In Sri Lanka and other countries, people always feel it necessary to know, learn and understand what is happening in China." "Today," he said, "what is happening in China continues to be of great interest to us." He stated that China is a developing country seeking to improve itself by various means. The minister wished that the society in Sri Lanka will continue to work for strengthening relations with China.

The Sri Lanka-China Society was set up in October, 1983, with the aim of promoting further traditional good relations between the governments and peoples of the two countries. Chinese Ambassador to Sri Lanka Zhou Shanyan also spoke at the meeting. He expressed the sincere hope that China and Sri Lanka will work together for safeguarding peace in the world in the new year of 1986. A Chinese documentary film of the 35th founding anniversary of New China was shown to society members after the meeting.

INDIAN OFFICIALS CHARGED WITH SPYING FOR TAIWAN

[Text] New Delhi, January 29 (XINHUA) -- At least 10 parliament members and two journalists were named in the police charge against Rama Swaroop, who is accused of operating a major spy ring in India, local newspapers reported today. The charge sheet filed yesterday by the Special Branch of Delhi police said that the espionage network is "part of a large scheme by the intelligence agencies of the United States, West Germany, Israel and Taiwan to subvert India's political system."

The persons mentioned in the charge sheet as having visited Taiwan on "invitations" from the accused include two Cabinet ministers -- K.P. Singh Deo and Chandulal Chandrakar -- both of whom resigned from the Cabinet on Monday for their connections with Swaroop. Other names appear in the charge sheet including M.S. Sanjeevi Rao, former chairman of the electronic commission; P. Upendra of the Telugu Desam, the ruling party of the south Indian state of Andhra Pradesh; M.S. Gurupadaswamy of the Janata Party; D.S. Jadeja, Ravind Netam, M.Govinda Reddy, N.K. Shejwalka, and Khushwant Singh and P.N. Laxmanan of the PRESS TRUST OF INDIA. Also named in the charge sheet is former Prime Minister Morarji Desai's son Kanti Desai, from whom Swaroop was said to have collected "happenings at the top." Rama Swaroop, now 54, has been the representative of Taiwan's Far-East Trade Service in India since 1974.

PAKISTAN EXPOSES SOVIET ATTEMPT TO SOW DISCORD

["Pakistan Refutes Soviet Ill Propaganda" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Islamabad, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Pakistan today exposed the attempt of the Soviet Union and the Kabul regime of Afghanistan at making mischief among the Muslim tribesmen in the Khyber Agency of Pakistan's Northwest Frontier Province.

In an written statement to the National Assembly, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Zain Noorani said that early last December the Pakistan Government moved troops to the Khyber Agency to search for narcotics and arms. During the action, a large quantity of narcotics and a number of arms were captured in the area. After the action, Radio Moscow reportedly attacked the Pakistan Government for repressing the tribesmen and infringing upon their autonomy. However, Zain Noorani said, the attempts made by the Soviet Union and the Kabul regime to sow mistrust and discord between the Afghan refugees and Pashtun tribesmen have been met with derision. He added that the government is taking necessary measures to counter subversion and lawlessness wherever they may exist.

TWO KARMAL AGENTS ARRESTED IN PAKISTAN

[Text] Islamabad, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Two Soviet-trained Karmal agents (Khad agents) were arrested in Pakistan's Northwestern Frontier Province (NWFP) yesterday along with 16 kilograms of explosive material.

A press release issued here today quoted the political authorities of Khyber division in the province as saying that the explosive material and a number of fuses were kept in tea pots packed in a bag. During interrogation, the two agents, Sherbaz, 28, and Rashid Khan, 30, told Pakistan authorities that the explosive material was provided by a senior Khad official living in Jalalabad, capital of Nangarhar Province of Afghanistan, for committing subversion in Pakistan. The accused admitted that the material is sufficient for making 40 bombs. They also said that they were to be given 10,000 afghanis for one blast. The accused told the Pakistan authorities that three more bags of explosives of similar nature and weight are lying with the Khad official in Jalalabad for dispatch.

The two agents entered Pakistan as Afghan refugees. They were spotted by a tribal shopkeeper, who got suspicious of the luggage of the two agents. The shopkeeper informed the authorities who arrested the two in a quick operation. Seven bomb blasts have taken place in the province since the beginning of the year, the worst being the one in a building of the Pakistan International Airline in Peshawar on January 23 which killed three persons and injured 29 others. Opposition parties organized anti-government processions and meetings in Peshawar in the last few days, during which they demanded that the government resign if it cannot protect the life and property of the citizens.

CYPRUS PRESIDENT DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH ENVOY

[Text] Nicosia, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Cyprus President Spyros Kyprianou met Chinese new Ambassador to Cyprus Luo Yisu (7482 0076 4725) here this morning and discussed the Cyprus problem and Sino-Cypriot relations.

President Kyprianou told the new Chinese ambassador about the development of the Cyprus problem and the stand of Cyprus Government, and expressed his gratitude to the Chinese Government and people for their concern about the settlement of Cyprus problem. Referring to Sino-Cypriot relations, President Kyprianou pledged to do his best to develop the friendly relations between the two countries. The Chinese ambassador reaffirmed the Chinese Government's stand on the Cyprus problem, and expressed the hope of Chinese Government and people for over-all development of friendly cooperation with Cyprus.

NETHERLANDS TO EXPAND MARITIME COOPERATION

[By staff report Xu Yuanchao]

[Text] China and the Netherlands are to co-operate in maritime transport, port construction, shipbuilding and telecommunications, said N Smit-Kroes, minister of transport and public works of the Netherlands. She told a press conference in Beijing yesterday that the cooperation side of the maritime transport agreement between the two countries would be expanded in the near future. Further discussion would be held by representatives of the two countries this summer.

The Chinese government will expand Nantong Port, northwest of Shanghai, doubling its current capacity. The feasibility study for the project will be carried out by the Boskalis and Multiterminals companies and the Chinese authorities and the six-month study is expected to be finished by July. A joint venture will be set up to operate the port, Smit-Kroes said.

China signed two technical cooperation agreements last year with IHC Holland to build up-to-date dredgers in Tanggu near Tianjin and Fuzhou in Fujian Province. The Dutch government has allocated funds to help the Chinese develop the expertise to build a series of dredgers and IHC Holland, a leading Dutch company, has delivered more than 50 of the vessels to China, she said. The Dutch Port and Delta Consortium PDC, a government and private sector firm, has sent a team of experts to China this month to offer technical consulting services for the Yangtze estuary project, the minister said.

Smit-Kroes said that an automatic telephone connection between China and the Netherlands would be established in the near future. The two governments had agreed on transfer of expertise through fellowships, seminars and exchange of staff. The 25-member delegation headed by Smit-Kroes, which arrived in China last Thursday, will also visit Guangzhou. Premier Zhao Ziyang talked with Smit-Kroes on Saturday.

NETHERLANDS PHILIPS TO INCREASE BUSINESS IN PRC

[Text] Hong Kong, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Philips, the leading Dutch electronics manufacturer, will increase its business in China in the areas of telecommunication and computers, the company announced at a press briefing here today. "We expect an enormous growth in the number of banking terminal systems and automatic teller machines (ATM) in China in the coming few years, as the use of money and, particularly, savings, increase," he said. "We have developed a new system that will provide a stereotype for future automation in all the 40,000 bank branches in China, " he added.

Philips is cooperating with the Chinese Ministry of Electronics Industry in developing ATMs, a system with language capabilities, recovery functions and security measures tailored to the China market. Philips has already signed contracts with the Bank of China for installing 12 ATMs in Zhuhai, a special economic zone in Guangdong Province, by mid-1986 -- the first order ever taken in China for this type of equipment, he said. The firm's manufacturing activities in China are also expanding, Westerhof said. It is involved in a wide range of joint ventures for the production of mobile radios, private automatic branch exchanges, teleprinters, optical fiber and transmission systems.

NETHERLANDS PARTIES CRITICIZE U.S.-USSR STANDS

[Text] The Hague, January 23 (XINHUA) -- The two Dutch Government coalition parties -- Christian Democrats and Liberals -- were critical of the stands adopted by the two superpowers at the Geneva disarmament talks. Debating on the 1986 Defense and Foreign Ministry Budget in the Second Chamber of Dutch Parliament, Christian Democrats (CDA) spokesman Ton Frinking said yesterday that the United States should show greater willingness to negotiate its "star wars" research program for defensive weapons in space. Allies should make their political support conditional on Washington's readiness to negotiate with Moscow on the program, he said.

On Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's latest proposals for ridding the world of nuclear arms by the year 2000, Frinking said he was sceptical of the scheme. Nuclear disarmament would certainly have to go hand in hand with measures to reduce Soviet superiority in conventional arms, he said. Liberal spokesman Joris Voorhoeve said Gorbachev's plans should not raise "naive optimism." He said strong defenses must be retained. "It is only possible to live in peace with this superpower if a dike is placed around it," he said, adding, "where the dike is missing, or weakened, the Soviets might well eventually break through."

The Netherlands has agreed to deploy 48 U.S. cruise missiles by the end of 1988, unless a new superpower accord makes the deployment on Dutch soil unnecessary.

SINO-NORWEGIAN ENGINEERING VENTURE INAUGURATED

[Text] Guangzhou, January 29 (XINHUA) -- China and Norway have opened a joint marine engineering and designing company in Guangzhou, according to officials here today. The company, set to operate for 12 years, will mainly undertake the design offshore projects, carry out feasibility studies of offshore oil development, and offer consulting services.

HUNGARY SIGNS S&T ACCORD WITH PRC IN BUDAPEST

[Text] Budapest, January 25 (XINHUA) -- China and Hungary today signed an accord on increasing cooperation in the Scientific and Technological fields in the next five years. Under the agreement, the two sides will exchange scientific information and academic publications, brief each other on international conferences and exhibitions, and invite each other to participate in international scientific activities.

The agreement was signed by Zhou Peiyuan, chairman of the China Association for Science and Technology and Janos Toth, general secretary of the Hungarian Association of Science and Technology. After the signing, Deputy Speaker of the Hungarian National Assembly Janos Peter hosted a dinner for Zhou and his party. Hungarian Vice Premier Laszlo Marothy met Zhou Peiyuan yesterday and the two discussed ways to further scientific and technological cooperation between the two countries. Zhou and his party arrived here on Thursday and leave next Monday.

HUNGARIAN OFFICIAL SAYS TIES WITH PRC 'SETTLED'

[Text] Budapest, January 29 (XINHUA) -- A senior Hungarian party official has said that it is now possible for the Soviet Union and United States to agree on compromise solutions to their differences as a result of the improved international atmosphere since Geneva. Matyas Szuros, secretary of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party, said in a radio speech on Monday that the international atmosphere has improved since the Soviet-U.S. Geneva summit last November, and "these and other developments prove that compromise solutions and agreements are pssible." Detente will be further strengthened in 1986, he said.

In his speech, published by Budapest's DAILY NEWS today, Szuros focused on Hungary's relations with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. He described Hungarian-Soviet links as "vital to us." The 27th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party scheduled for next month, he added, "will be an important milestone and result in the formation of a leadership that will define the Soviet Union's overall policy." Szuros said Budapest will host a session of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact nations in 1986. The meeting is "aimed at further coordinating our common international activities," he said.

He also touched upon Chinese-Hungarian relations, which he described as "settled." He said, China was in a period of renewal and genuinely opening to the outside world. The Hungarian party official also condemned terrorism, including the terrorist attacks last month on the Vienna and Rome airports, in which there were Hungarian victims.

SFRY PAPER CRITICIZES USSR PROPOSAL ON CAMBODIA

[Text] Belgrade, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Well-known Yugoslav commentator Dragoslav Rancic today criticized the Soviet proposal for ignoring the Kampuchean resistance forces led by Khieu Samphan as a political power in Kampuchea. "It is hard to make people believe," Rancic said in a commentary published in today's POLITIKA, one of Yugoslavia's major newspapers, that the forces led by Khieu Samphan, the major resistance force against the Vietnamese, "is not a political power" and could be excluded from participating in a political solution of Kampuchea.

On January 8, Soviet Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs Mikhail Kapitsa said that the Soviet Union proposes Kampuchea "hold an election with the participation of foreign observers." He also suggested calling an international conference which should include representatives of "the three countries of Indo-China, the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council, the member states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, India, Australia and Sweden." Rancic pointed out that the proposal failed to get reaction from people of the world because it disregarded two major points. One is that any political solution to the Kampuchea issue should be based on the precondition that Vietnam withdraw its troops from Kampuchea, which the United Nations insists is the key to a solution. And secondly the Soviet proposal did not give any consideration for the Armed Forces led by Khieu Samphan.

Rancic said that the Soviet proposal is probably based on its realization that "after seven years, the Vietnamese still failed to solidify the Heng Samrin authority," not to defeat the resistance forces. Rancic added that until recently, "the Soviet Union recognized no powers in Kampuchea but Vietnam and Heng Samrin. Now, however, they respect, at least, one fact: Norodom Sihanouk and Son Sann are realistic political factors."

NEW BULGARIAN THEORIES ON SOCIALIST SOCIETY

[Article by Dong Bainan: "New Interpretations of Certain Problems by Theoretical Circles in Bulgaria" -- Capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] In recent years theoretical circles in Bulgaria have put forward many new interpretations differing from traditional views in theoretical research.

I. CONCERNING THE QUESTION OF CONTRADICTIONS IN SOCIALIST SOCIETY In their view, there remain contradictions in socialist society. If inadequate importance is attached to contradictions between socialism and bureaucratism, to voluntarism, to the malpractice of securing advantages through pull, as well as to the influence of Western countries, and if no attention is paid to creating conditions to solve these contradictions, then these nonantagonistic contradictions may be transformed into antagonistic ones under certain conditions and may bring about social crisis and conflict. Therefore, socialist society should also make progress in the course of discerning and solving contradictions.

On how to solve contradictions in socialist society, they say that there are two different approaches: in one approach attention is given only to the phenomena, not to the factors contributing to these phenomena; in the other, when attention is drawn to the phenomena, efforts are also made to eliminate the factors contributing to these phenomena. They have repeatedly stressed that the latter is the basic way to solve contradictions.

On the question of what constitutes the basic contradiction under socialist conditions, theoretical circles in Bulgaria have three different viewpoints. The first says that the basic contradiction is "between the forces of production and the relations of production"; the second notes that it is the "contradiction between the level of production, determined by the development of the productive forces, and ever-growing social demands"; and the third believes that it is the "contradiction between the equal status of all workers in the relationship to the means of production and their unequal status in distribution of social products according to socialist principes governing distribution."

II. CONCERNING OWNERSHIP OF THE MEANS OF PRODUCTION There are now four types of ownership of the means of production in Bulgaria, namely state ownership, cooperative ownership, ownership by social organizations, and individual ownership. In their opinion, the first three types of ownership are socialist property, and ownership by individuals is a natural continuation and supplement to the socialist economy. Under socialist conditions, ownership of the means of production should be separated from the power of operation and management. The state represents the interests of the whole people; it should therefore be the owner of socialist property; while collectives or individuals working for all kinds of enterprises in the country are operators of socialist property; Bulgaria believes that this is the theoretical basis for the implementation of the new economic structure. The state, as owner of socialist property, should have a direct hand in the operation of this property. Its function should be only: 1) to develop and increase socialist property; 2) to guarantee a basic balance in the national economy and its necessary growth rate; and 3) to exercise regulation and control over working collectives in a planned way and to make continuous efforts to enhance the material, ideological, and cultural levels of workers. In adherence to the principle of successfully fulfilling the tasks assigned by the state, all working collectives or individuals, as direct operators of socialist property, should be responsible for production, supply, and marketing in an all-round way. The relationship between working collectives or individuals and the state is established on the basis of the contract system. The state provides laboring collectives with the means, implements, and capital for production and laboring collectives must fulfill the tasks assigned by the state and the contracts drawn up with other laboring collectives.

They share the view that cooperative ownership should not necessarily be transferred to state ownership and that the two can complement each other and run parallel with each other. With the development of social division of labor among all economic departments and the development of specialization and concentration in production, economic ties between regions and between departments are ever more strengthened and the two kinds of ownership will finally merge with each other and become the sole ownership by the whole people.

III. CONCERNING THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN COMMODITIES AND CURRENCY UNDER SOCIALIST CONDITIONS In the past, theoretical circles in Bulgaria held the view that the building of a developed socialist society could be accomplished in a short time, and that Bulgaria could enter the stage of a developed society by the end of the century. However, they now believe that a developed socialist society cannot be built so quickly, and that the building of the society should cover a historical period of considerable length. One of the features marking this historical period is that the relationship between commodities and currency continues to play its role in the whole system of production, distribution, and consumption. If we artifically take administrative measures to restrict this relationship, a great deal of dislocation and confusion will appear in the economy as a whole. What communists should do is turn the relationship between commodities and currency and the law of value into a powerful strength for stimulating the expansion of production, creating more social wealth, and raising the people's living standards. Theoretical circles in Bulgaria have pointed out that in the application of the relationship between commodities and currency, however, some unhealthy tendencies, such as speculation, benefiting oneself at the expense of others, and profiting by other people's toil will inevitably appear, but that this problem can be solved by improving distribution relations and strengthening ideological education, and through legal and administrative measures.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR LIMITS OVERSEAS TRIPS

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jan (XINHUA) -- The General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council recently issued a joint circular addressed to leading bodies of central and local party, government, and military organizations as well as to mass organizations, calling on them to stop sending unnecessary delegations, groups, or personnel abroad.

The circular says: With the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world, our country has increased its contacts with other countries with each passing day over the past few years. As a result, the number of delegations, groups, and personnel going abroad has increased, and this is necessary. Contacts between China and other countries will continue to expand in the future. However, some confusion and unhealthy tendencies have occurred in sending delegations and groups abroad for short visits due to the need for examination and approval of such visits by a host of organs, the lack of overall control and coordination, lax management by some localities and departments, and their failure to make strict checks in this regard. As a result, the following phenomena have become rather widespread: Study trips are being repeated, people take turns in visiting foreign countries, and some people abuse their powers by vying with others to go abroad themselves or letting those close to them do so. Quite a few delegations and groups visiting foreign countries consist of too many members and include too many non professionals, and they stay abroad too long. A small number of personnel, while visiting foreign countries, ask foreigners or foreign citizens of Chinese origin for money and other presents, harming their personal as well their national dignity. All such problems are harmful to our country's policy of opening up to the outside world and affect the prestige of our party and country; they also have a corrosive influence on some of our cadres. To check these confusing phenomena and correct these unhealthy tendencies, the following circular is hereby issued in accordance with instructions from the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council:

Strictly implement the system of examination and approval. From now on, when leading cadres of or above the rank of head or deputy head of a province, autonomous region, or municipality directly under the central authority or a department, commission, or other organ directly under the CPC Central Committee or the State Council, including those retired, need to visit foreign countries, they must all refer their requests to the State Council or the relevant central leading organ for examination and approval. As for visits to foreign countries by other personnel, they must be strictly controlled by the departments concerned and examined and approved at each level. Under no circumstances must the power to examine and approve overseas trips be delegated without authorization. Where such power has been delegated, it must be corrected forthwith.

When personnel are sent abroad on investigative tours in connection with projects using foreign equipment or technology managed by specialized departments, in accordance with a unified state plan the tours should be organized by the departments concerned of the State Council together with the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. However, no investigative tours to foreign countries should be organized in connection with a project when the equipment is on the state's list as a temporarily prohibited import, similar equipment or production lines have already been imported into our country, or only a single piece of machinery or equipment rather than a complete set of equipment is imported. When a locality, department, or unit sends an economic, technical, science, cultural, education, or public health visiting group to foreign countries, there must be a clear-cut and concrete purpose, the group members must be capable professional experts, and the time of their stay overseas must be as short as possible.

Moreover, the group should not visit additional countries and regions on the way, nor should it contain two principal responsible comrades from the same locality or department. In short, the principle of few members, small groups, and competent personnel should be resolutely carried out. Leading organs at various levels with the authority to examine and approve requests for permission to send out visiting groups should do this in a serious manner and strictly guard against mistakes and oversights. If undesirable consequences have resulted from failure to do so, the one who approved the request should be held responsible.

Coordinate and supervise seriously. In dealing with applications for traveling out of the country for economic and technological purposes (excluding foreign trade), the localities and departments empowered to approve applications should report proposed trips, according to categories of the products involved, to the related departments of the State Council for their records before the foreign parties concerned are officially informed of the trips. As for trips that cannot be categorized by products involved, those concerning capital construction should be reported to the State Planning Commission, those concerning technological transformation reported to the State Economic Commission, those concerning scientific-technological cooperation and exchange with foreign parties reported to the State Science and Technology Commission, and those concerning international economic cooperation reported to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. If the departments receiving such reports find a proposed trip unnecessary or unjustified, they should raise an objection within 2 weeks after receiving the particular report, and they may exercise their veto power if necessary. With regard to trips for foreign trade purposes, supervision should also be intensified in accordance with the above guidelines. In no way should the localities and departments empowered to examine and approve applications for traveling abroad take a lax attitude in performing their duty because the proposed trips are reported to the specialized departments concerned. In addition, it is necessary to avoid sending too many visiting groups to certain countries and regions or visiting certain countries and regions too frequently.

Tighten control of expenses for traveling abroad. Central and local departments in charge of work in various specialized fields are required to draw up their annual foreign-exchange spending plans for trips out of the country to cover the foreign exchange (including nontrade foreign exchange, trade foreign exchange, foreign exchange retained from various earnings, and foreign exchange from other sources) to be spent by party and government organs at various levels, people's organizations, Army units, enterprises, and institutions for trips out of the country. They should report such plans to the Ministry of Finance or the provincial, regional, or municipal department (bureau) of finance and establish a special account for this purpose. The renminbi expenses required for such trips should also be strictly controlled. If the actual expense has exceeded the budgeted amount, no more renminbi or foreign exchange should be spent in that year for sending visiting groups or personnel abroad. Any expense by a visiting group abroad incurred against the regulations should not be approved by the financial and accounting departments; the excess should be converted into renminbi and repaid by the persons concerned through deduction in installments from their wages. In addition, the persons concerned should be subjected to criticism and education or given disciplinary sanction by the party or government according to the seriousness of their cases.

Strengthen ideological education and strictly enforce discipline in dealing with foreign affairs. Leading cadres at all levels should set an example by refraining from vying with each other to make trips abroad by taking advantage of their positions and power. When examining and approving applications for traveling abroad and when organizing visiting groups to foreign countries, they should act in accordance with the principle of party spirit. It is necessary to earnestly step up ideological and political work among those going abroad. Prior to their departure, they should be given a period of education in the current situation and policies and in the discipline that should be observed in handling foreign affairs.

In carrying out activities in foreign countries, everyone should be loyal to his duty, strictly guard secrets, be honest in carrying out his official function, abide by discipline in handling foreign affairs, and avert anything harmful to our national dignity or to one's own personality. All localities and departments should conduct a serious examination of the work in sending their personnel on temporary stays abroad since last year and, if problems are found, submit feasible corrective measures. The Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee should emphasize conducting checkups in some localities and departments to see how they examined and approved applications for traveling abroad. In case major problems are discovered, it is necessary to grasp typical examples and deal with them. From now on, the departments examining and approving applications for traveling abroad and departments in charge of discipline inspection should conduct periodic checkups so as to sum up experience, commend good examples, correct undesirable phenomena, and solve the problems uncovered. The circular requests that following the dissemination of this circular, leading party, government, and Army organs at all levels as well as all people's organizations and all discipline inspection departments seriously take it as an important political task to correct the chaotic situation and unhealthy practices with regard to making trips abroad and see to it that remarkable results for this task are achieved in a short time.

STATE COUNCIL ORDERS THRIFTY SPRING FESTIVAL

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jan (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the State Council issued a circular today, strictly banning extravangance and waste, as well as dinners and gifts, during the Spring Festival. The circular says: The Spring Festival is approaching. To implement the guidelines of central leading comrades' speeches at the meetings on improving party style of central organs, and to fulfill the requirements set by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in the circular on a solution for a number of serious problems currently existing in office work style, the following regulations strictly banning extravagance and waste, as well as dinners and gifts, during the Spring Festival period are reiterated and circulated in accordance with tbe opinion of State Council leading comrades:

1. All units should not hold tea parties or receptions during the Spring Festival period, except for receiving foreign guests or Overseas Chinese, or for promoting united front work. If a tea party or reception is indeed necessary, it should be approved in advanced by higher authorities, and only a cup of tea, instead of sweets and pastries, should be provided on the occasion.

2. Leading organs at various levels should not seek or accept gifts from subordinate units, nor take advantage of position and power to purchase festival goods at lower prices from grass-roots units. Dinners or gifts from lower-level units to higher authorities or supervisors are strictly forbidden.

3. Dinners and gifts between various units and departments at public expense are forbidden. It is necessary to practice thrift in unfolding essential activities to express gratitude.

4. Departments should not give lavish staff celebrations and awards. If a celebration or award meeting is needed, it is necessary to stress practical results and guard against formalism, and issuance of bonuses or awards in cash or in kind is prohibited.

5. Governments and departments concerned at all levels should educate cadres and the masses of people to foster new socialist style and oppose ostentiation and extravagance, and they should strictly ban gambling and feudal superstitious activities.

TACKLING TOUGH PARTY STYLE PROBLEMS ENCOURAGED

[Commentator's article: "Acting as a 'Blacksmith' in Establishing a Correct Party Style of Work"]

[Text] Gan Dehua, deputy secretary of the Discipline Inspection Committee of Zigui County, is a man who adheres to principle, handles matters impartially and is not swayed by personal considerations. In the face of unhealthy tendencies and evil practices, he is upright, never stoops to flattery, and dares to tackle tough problems. People praise him as an "impartial discipline inspector" and the Hubei Provincial CPC Committee has conferred on him the glorious title "model cadre of discipline inspection."

We have talked too much about the importance and necessity of checking unhealthy tendencies. We should now perform actual deeds. As the central leading comrades have repeatedly stressed, we should earnestly investigate and seriously deal with major cases of evil practices, violation of the law, and discipline occurring in areas and units of which we are in charge. Therefore, leading cadres and cadres for discipline inspection of various levels should strive to become "blacksmiths" "who dare to tackle tough problems." Why is it that some localities cannot solve their problems for an extended time? Why is it that minor problems are resolved but major ones cannot be smoothed out? Why is it that some problems involving leading cadres cannot be thoroughly investigated and dealt with? A major reason for this situation is that leading cadres, including cadres in charge of discipline inspection work, do not dare tackle tough problems. However, Comrade Gan Dehua is not such a man. Backed by the county CPC Committee, he dared to investigate problems involving a deputy secretary of the county CPC Committee, problems involving a deputy head of the county, and problems involving anybody else. This required plenty of guts, courage, and resourcefulness. If one does not have the spirit of "he who is not afraid of death by a thousand cuts dares to unhorse the emperor," he can hardly achieve it.

In the face of unhealthy tendencies, some comrades may wish to become "blacksmiths." But though they dare to hit snags once or twice, they dare not do more, as they lose courage and a dashing spirit and lack the indomitable revolutionary spirit of "the foolish old man removed the mountains." Do doubt it is not easy to thoroughly investigate complicated problems and deal with tough cases one after another. The fight against unhealthy tendencies and violations of the law and discipline is not a task that can be fulfilled in a short time and at one stroke. Only by making firm, serious, and unremitting efforts to wage staunch struggle as the foolish old man did will we be able to gradually improve party work style and, generally, social mood. Comrade Gan Dehua has engaged in discipline inspection work for many years, but he always has high morale. He is a good example for us. Discipline inspection work is very important and hard. To be successful, on the one hand, cadres engaged in discipline inspection should adhere to principles and dare to tackle tough problems; on the other hand, party committees and leading comrades at higher levels should support them, especially when confronted with difficulties and obstacles. Supporting and giving rein to cadres of discipline inspection will facilitate the improvement of party work style and general social conduct.

MODERN ENTERPRISE MANAGEMENT DISCUSSED

[Commentator's article: "Make a Success of Enterprise Management"]

[Text] The 5 years of the Seventh 5-Year Plan are key to laying foundations for the invigoration of China's economy in the 1990's.

Over two-thirds of industrial output value and state revenues set in the Seventh 5-Year Plan should be accomplished by existing enterprises. To improve enterprise management and bring the full potential of these enterprises into play is of utmost significance to the fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and economic development in the 1990's.

Attainment of this goal is a matter of great importance. Over the past few years, a great deal of work has been done in this aspect. Through overall reorganization and preliminary reforms, the managerial level of these enterprises has been raised to a certain degree. However, the endeavor is just beginning. Leading comrades of the State Council pointed out recently: Our enterprises are falling behind in both technology and management. Comparatively speaking, they lag behind especially in management. We must therefore strive to improve management in particular.

Backward managerial expertise in our enterprises finds expression mainly in the poor quality of their products, high consumption of raw materials, and undesirable economic results. Over 10 percent of enterprises have suffered losses over a long period of time. Less than 30 percent of the products of our engineering and electronics industries, (which are suppliers of technical equipment for our economy,) are now at the level of the 1970's and early 1980's. The consumption of raw materials in the majority of our enterprises is eminently higher than enterprises in developed countries. Of course, improving quality and lowering consumption depends mainly on updating products and equipment and enacting technological transformation. However, under current circumstances, enhancing the scientific management level of enterprises is more important and urgent than other things. Some of our enterprises are well-equipped, or even equipped with foreign up-to-date machinery and technology. But economic results remain discouraging, and production cannot reach advanced levels. The crux of the problem is the lack of good management.

In saying that production does not go up, some comrades often blame it on backward expertise and equipment, but they do not admit poor management work. Referring to better economic results, they often pin their hopes on increasing investment and building more new projects, but they fail to stress improving enterprises performance; they do not stress improving management. This is obviously a lopsided view. Under the new situation of enacting reforms, opening up to the outside world, and enlivening enterprises over the past few years, great changes have taken place inside and outside enterprises. After freeing themselves from the previously closed structure of operations, they have gradually become independent economic entities. To understand the new situation, they have to have modern management knowledge and establish applicable management systems, organizations, and measures. At present, enterprises with a poor foundation and those with a good foundation should both make great efforts to improve their management and enhance their management level. If not, they can hardly bring advanced technology and equipment into full play, nor can they attain high efficiency in production, improve quality, and achieve better economic results.

In assigning work for this year, the recent national economic work conference laid special stress on improving enterprise management. It also set some basic demands and standards for improving enterprise management under the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Enterprises are urged to strive in mapping workable plans for an overall upgrade of their operations in line with actual conditions so as to conscientiously fulfill the task of strengthening management. We believe that, provided our cadres and workers on the economic front work hard at this in the new year, we will be able to step forward in establishing a socialist modern management system with Chinese characteristics.

GANSU OIL WORKERS PRAISED FOR PARTY STYLE

[Report by investigation group of Gansu Provincial CPC Discipline Inspection Committee: "Yumen Oil Field Improves Party Style by Constantly Linking Education in Party Spirit With Reality"]

[Text] Yumen oil field, a great contributor to the development of our country's petroleum industry, has been elected as a "six-good enterprise" for its good party style and prevailing morality and for its continuous improvement of economic results in the late stage of the oil field. The Yumen oil field has had successful experience in grasping party style. "The key lies in the leadership." All the members of the party committee have been strict with themselves, set an example by their own deeds, played an exemplary role, and thus seized leadership power in grasping party style. Last winter and spring, when new unhealthy practices were spreading throughout the oil field, no problems with exploitation of power, sudden promotion of cadres, or indiscriminate payments of bonuses in cash or in kind emerged. This was mainly due to the fact that for a long time party organizations at all levels in the oil field had given first priority to satisfactorily grasping party spirit education among party members.

The most outstanding characteristic of the Yumen oil field in grasping party spirit education is the relevance and regularity of the education. For years, people there link education with practice, focus on a key aspect of education in a particular period and at a particular stage, and thus imbue education in party spirit, style, and discipline with concrete contents and scored high achievements. The living conditions at Yumen oil field are arduous. In addition, as the exploitation of the oil field is in its late stage, total income and fringe benefits for staff and workers there are not as favorable as those in other oil fields in the country. Therefore, quite a few people thought of applying for transfer from Yuman oil field. Through party spirit education, a change emerged in the minds of the party members who were not keeping their minds on their work. Among the seven party members in drilling team No 852, five did not concentrate on their work in the past. They time and again applied for transfer to jobs elsewhere. But now, they unanimously express the view that "no matter how small Yumen oil field is, it is a treasure of our motherland, and no matter how old it is, we will contribute its remaining strength to the people."

Another outstanding characteristic of Yumen oil field in grasping party spirit education is the diversification of forms, flexible methods, and continuous efforts to make education scientific. The people there have been able to refrain from clinging to old methods and have adopted new methods in light of the new situation and problems in the minds of party members. They have adhered to the principle of enlightenment and strived to convince people with arguments, move people with sincerity, and attract people with lively and interesting forms, refusing to be satisfied with making general calls. In light of the relatively large number of young party members, some units have carried out activities of "three thoughts" and "four glories:" At the question of whether their life is hard, think of the arduous process of establishing the petroleum industry; at the question of whether their labor is heavy, think of the older generation of people who have devoted themselves to the oil field; at the question of whether they have got the worst of it, think of the border troops who are fighting bloody battles with Vietnamese troops. "It is glorious to devote oneself to the work of oil prospecting," "it is glorious to find oil in the wilds," and so on. By so doing, they have roused party members to be first in undergoing hardship and to strive to make contributions.

Some units have raised different requirements for different party members in light of the actual situation and have done their best to ensure that all party members have actually received what party spirit education intends to teach them. At present, a fine prevailing morality of regarding adherence to the principle of party spirit as glorious and violation of the principle of party spirit as shameful has gradually taken shape in the oil field. The reason Yumen oil field has scored relatively distinct achievements in its party spirit education and has prevented formalism in carrying out education is, to a fairly great extent, because it has grasped inspection and implementation, continued to consolidate its achievements, and regularized education.

[Commentator's article: "Education in Party Spirit Must Be Realistic"]

[Text] It is very difficult for a large enterprise like Yumen oil field to have no malpractices in power exploitation, sudden promotion of cadres, or indiscrimate payment of bonuses in cash or in kind. It deserves the honor of the title of "six-good enterprise" with good party style and prevailing morality and has continued to improve the economic results of a late-stage oil field. A fundamental reason why Yumen oil field has scored such a satisfactory achievement is because its party committee has managed the party and conscientiously persisted in carrying out party spirit education. There are two aspects of experience in Yumen oil field's party spirit education worth noting.

1. Education is closely linked to reality. On one hand, a conscientious analysis is made in light of the reality in the thinking of party members and cadres and of their common problems in order to decide the content of the party spirit education and thus ensure objectives in education. On the other hand, the oil field has linked its party spirit education with production and reforms, implemented education soundly, and promoted development of production and reforms. The achievements of its party spirit education are concrete and are something people can see and feel; therefore, they are well accepted by both the leadership and the masses.

2. The oil field has grasped its party spirit education in a down-to-earth manner, made good arrangements for conducted inspection of it, and established a responsibility system geared to its education in party spirit and discipline. By so doing, it is possible to promptly uncover problems, promptly correct unhealthy practices, and thus check erroneous ideas at their outset.

Party spirit education seems to be "theoretical" work, but only by doing this "theoretical work" in a practical manner will we persist in doing it and in achieving actual results. We believe that as long as the party committee in all areas and units really understand the importance of party spirit education, striving to pursue good results and explore methods of actually doing the work, they will certainly be able discover the methods of party spirit education suited to the reality in their areas and units and effective in practice, and be able to gradually regularize education.

COMMENTATOR URGES IMPLEMENTATION OF FISHERY LAW

[Commentator's article: "Apply the Law in Promoting and Supervising Fishery"]

[Text] Along with the readjustment of rural production structure and the raising of urban consumption standards, fishery production will occupy an increasingly important position in our country's national economy and people's lives.

The promulgation and implementation of the fishery law of the People's Republic of China have provided a legal guarantee for the rapid development of our country's fishery production. This is a major event in the history of our country's fishery. For quite a long time, because of the lack of a good understanding of objective law in the fishery economy, we made a series of mistakes in our general and specific policies concerning fishery production. As a result, our country's fishery production has become a weak link in our national economy, and it has become more and more "difficult" for people living in both urban and rural areas to "eat fish." In rural reforms implemented in recent years, we have carefully reviewed experiences and learned lessons, and have gradually corrected our guiding ideology for accelerating the development of fishery production, defined production policies, economic policies, technological measures, and methods concerning the strengthening of protection and management of fishery resources, and have achieved remarkable successes in practice. The new fishery law aims at encouraging, supporting, and promoting the further development of fishery production, and at legalizing the general and specific policies, experiences, and methods proven to be correct in practice over the past few years, thus enabling them to become authoritative, stable, and continuous. This will produce a profound impact on the development of our country's fishery.

Because in the past we failed to effectively protect fishery resources and to strictly manage fishery production, coastal areas blindly increased the number of fishing boats and fishing nets, violated regulations concerning prohibited fishing zones and prohibited fishing periods, and fished recklessly. In inland waters, some people destroyed the ecological environment of fish by poisoning, using explosives, stealing, and rushing to catch fish. In order to protect national interests and the legal rights of fishery workers, the new fishery law clearly stipulates specific disciplinary, civil, and criminal sanctions against offenders, which are not only essential for safeguarding social order but also conducive to the further development of fishery productive forces.

The fishery law of the People's Republic of China is a basic fishery law formulated since the founding of the People's Republic of China. It fully embodies the spirit of applying the law in promoting and supervising fishery and the spirit of "relaxing, invigorating, and administering." The people's governments at various levels and the relevant fishery departments must carry out propaganda and education among the masses and take the lead in observing and conscientiously carrying out the new fishery law. We believe that so long as the broad masses of cadres and people consciously observe the new fishery law, a new situation will surely emerge in our country's fishery production.

IMPROVED MANAGEMENT OF CONTRACTS EMPHASIZED

[Commentator's article: "Seriously Deal With the Practice of Using Contracts To Carry Out Illegal Activities"]

[Text] The promulgation and enforcement of the law on economic contracts have played a positive role in developing lateral economic relationships, invigorating enterprises, and promoting planned commodity production and circulation. However, some lawbreakers and companies who are not following the correct path use economic contracts to obtain advanced payments, to speculate, and to cheat, seriously infringing upon the estate and assets of the state, enterprises, and individuals, thus undermining the normal order of social economic activities. If they are not promptly dealt with and allowed to continue unchecked, economic structural reform and the four modernizations drive will be hampered.

An economic contract has legal binding force. Signing an economic contract is a legal action. Either side which fails or partially fails to abide by the terms and conditions of the contract will be held responsible under the law for the consequences arising therefrom. Using an economic contract to engage in illegal or criminal activities will result in more serious punishment. Administrative, law enforcement, and judicial departments should do their best to surmount all obstacles and achieve more effective results in examining the practice of using economic contracts for illegal activities.

Administrative leaders in some localities have a poor concept of the legal system and therefore stand in the way of the examination of illegal and criminal cases. Some even view swindlers as the "gods of wealth" and protect them by every possible means, seriously hampering administrative, law enforcement, and judicial work. This has not only delayed the work of handling illegal and criminal cases, but also damaged the sanctity of the law. Those who substitute power for the law and bend the law for the benefit of their relatives and friends must be held responsible for what they do, and discipline must be enforced with them.

It is necessary to seriously examine and deal with illegal and criminal cases, but examination can be inadequate. The state and the people demand that efforts be made to greatly reduce and prevent illegal and criminal cases. Industrial and commercial administrative and managerial organs should strengthen their supervision over economic contracts. All enterprises and institutions, as well as departments in charge of enterprises and institutions, are required to exercise good management over the work concerning economic contracts. They should take effective measures with regard to the signing, implementation, supervision, and arbitration of economic contracts and constantly improve their management work concerning economic contracts.

STATE COUNCIL GREETS DAQING ON OIL OUTPUT

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jan (XINHUA) -- The State Council sent a message to the staff and workers of Daqing oil field on 25 January, congratulating them on achieving the goal of maintaining stable output for 10 successive years. The full text of the message reads as follows:

To the Daqing City People's Government and the cadres of all levels, engineering and technical personnel, and comrade workers of the Daqing Petroleum Administrative Bureau, through the Heilongjiang Provincial People's Government:

It is gratifying to hear that Daqing oil field has successfully fulfilled the goal of maintaining a stable output of 50 million metric tons annually for 10 successive years. The State Council extends warm congratulations and cordial greetings to the Daqing City People's Government and the cadres of all levels, engineering and technical personnel, and comrade workers of the Daqing Petroleum Administrative Bureau, who have made outstanding contributions to China's socialist modernization!

The goal of maintaining a stable output for 10 successive years has been achieved at a time when oil extraction has become gradually more difficult due to the need for extraction from sources with a medium or high water content and to big changes underground. Your down-to-earth efforts in production and construction, your courage in scaling new heights in science and technology, and your creative labor have not only earned a great amount of wealth for the state but also enabled the oil field's technique of oil extraction from sources with a high water content to reach the world's advanced standard. This is an important achievement in our socialist economic construction, as well as our scientific and technological development.

Daqing oil field is an advanced enterprise well-known throughout China's socialist modernization for a long time. During the oil field's pioneering period, your hard-working spirit and efforts at self-improvement set a brilliant example for people throughout the country. After the oil field's completion, you persistently performed meritorious services and continued to advance in the frontline of socialist modernization, thereby making the oilfield one of the large industrial enterprises contributing most to the country.

It is hoped that you will guard against arrogance and rashness, work harder, continue to display the fine tradition of making reform and innovations, pay close attention to building socialist material and spiritual civilization, further improve and explore advanced technologies for developing the oil field, step up the enterprise's modern management, and continue to raise economic efficiency in order to make still greater contributions to the country.

[Signed] The State Council, 25 January 1986

CENTRAL COMMISSION LAUDS HARBIN CITY PRACTICES

[XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1248 GMT on 28 January transmits a "public notice" relaying a message from the Office of the Central Commission for Party Rectification, requesting newspapers to publish the following item in a "prominent position."]

[By reporters Ren Yongda and Zhang Chijian]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Jan (XINHUA) -- A note from the Office of the Central Commission for Party Rectification reads: In the course of improving party style, the Harbin City CPC Committee adheres to a principle of being strict and dealing with concrete matters, proceeds from stepping up investigations and studies, and breaks through various resistances. It has investigated and handled a number of important and known cases. It has the courage to deal with leading organs and leading cadres that violate law and discipline and does not spare anyone's sensibilities. It carries investigations through to the end and firmly takes further steps to correct unhealthy tendencies. Its practices are very good and worth recommendation. We should proceed from dealing with concrete cases; this is the way to improve party style and social conduct.

Poor party style and poor social conduct pose a conspicuous problem at present. Comrade Deng Xiaoping sternly pointed out at the National Conference of Party Delegates: "In recent years production has gone up, but the pernicious influence of capitalism and feudalism has not been reduced to a minimum. Instead, some evil things that had long been extinct after liberation have come to life again." Our economic success will lose its significance, and will face the danger of moral degeneration if we fail to undertake construction and enforce law persistently at the same time, if we fail to make great efforts to promote socialist civilization and make the greatest determination to improve party style fundamentally, and if we let poor party style and poor social conduct continue.

Why can't some localities and organizations successfully improve their party style today? A primary reason is that their leading cadres are too bureaucratic. They fail to conduct investigations and study and are unaware of the actual situation. They talk a lot, do very little, and conduct empty talks without performing actual deeds. They are irresolute in handling problems and fail to make quick decisions about some unmistakable cases of law and discipline violations. As a result, unhealthy tendencies and evil practices still cannot be stopped.

Moreover, while some leading cadres are not honest and upright in their ways, they dare not touch on their own problems, and they even shield one another. This is also a reason not to be ignored for the failure to improve party style. In order to improve party style and social conduct fundamentally, one must first resolutely abandon such a bureaucracy and the bad practice of shielding one another. Otherwise, a person will be seriously divorced from the masses and lose his popular trust, and his wrongdoings, if not corrected, will harm the country and the people.

The key to improving party style is to set strict demands and firmly abide by them. Whether the leading organs and the leading cadres have truly overcome bureaucracy and whether they have "first improved themselves before correcting others" should be two important criteria for us to judge whether their attitude is correct and whether their work is solid in the course of improving party style. (End of note)

After readjustment, the new leading body of the Harbin City CPC Committee persists in strictness and in dealing with concrete matters to improve party style. In last 7 months and more, the leading members have proceeded from conducting investigations and studies, broken through resistance, and personally taken a hand in resolutely investigating and handling a number of important cases exposed in the course of party rectification.

In the course of party rectification, Harbin City has successively discovered several dozen serious criminal cases involving evil practices, abuse of power to seek private interests, and severe bureaucracy. However, investigation and handling of the cases proceeded slowly because some cases involved leading cadres and the offenders were protected by "under-the-table relationships." Some persons used reform as an excuse to obstruct the investigation, and the leading bodies of some organizations dared not deal with tough cases.

After the leading body of the Harbin City CPC Committee was readjusted in May 1985, Li Genshen, a deputy secretary of the provincial party committee, became secretary of the city party committee, and Vice Governor Gong Benyan became deputy secretary of the city party committee and mayor of Harbin. The new leading body soon unequivocally pointed out that in order to improve party style, it is essential to be strict and to deal with concrete matters, and it is necessary to make a breakthrough by resolutely investigating and handling typical cases. Then, the secretary of the city party committee personally took a hand in handling cases, the deputy secretary in charge of party rectification work went all out to deal with cases, and the Standing Committee members of the city party committee and vice mayors with party membership took the lead in investigating cases. After a period of thorough investigation, the city soon uncovered the truth about a number of typical cases. Since the beginning of August 1985, the principal leading comrades of the city party committee have openly handled those typical cases on six separate occasions. They have created a tremendous deterrence against persons who pursue evil practices in violation of law and discipline. Of those cadres with party membership who have been subject to party and administrative disciplinary measures, eight hold the post of deputy bureau director or higher. Two bureau-level cadres have been arrested according to law.

TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISES, AGRICULTURE VIEWED

[Article by Wu Xiang and Sun Fangming: "A Brief Discourse on the Relationship Between Township Enterprises and Agriculture"]

[Text] Our country's rural economy is undergoing a historic reform.

If we say that the implementation of the contract responsibility system on a household basis with payment linked to output was the first step of that great reform, then boosting the restructuring of rural undertakings through abolishing the state monopoly on the purchase of agricultural products and developing township and town enterprises are a vital second step of that great reform, a significant step which must not be understimated. In 1984, the gross output value of township and town enterprises totaled more than 170 billion yuan, accounting for one-sixth of gross industrial and agricultural output value for the year. In 1985, gross output value of these enterprises is expected to reach about 240 billion yuan, accounting for one-fifth of the gross industrial and agricultural output value of the whole country for the year. Taxes paid to the state amounted to 12 billion yuan, over 30 percent more than in 1984, thus becoming an important source of revenue. More importantly, these enterprises have provided jobs for over 60 million peasants.

We cannot deny that the rapid development of township and town enterprises has given rise to some new problems and many new relationships and contradictions. But the sustained development of our township and town enterprises creates conditions for solving these problems and contradictions.

Township and Town Enterprises and Agriculture Promote and Coordinate With Each Other in Their Development

Over the past few years, in the process of development of township and town enterprises in some areas, the phenomena of their occupation of too much farm land, the spread of industrial pollution, the undermining of the ecological environoment for agriculture, the widening of the disparity between incomes of those employed in industry and those engaged in agriculture, the decline of the peasants' initiative in undertaking agriculture, and the worsening in the quality of rural labor caused by the movement of young and strong rural laborers to township and town enterprises have emerged. In the face of these problems, quite a few comrades worry that the development of township and town enterprises will deprive our agriculture of its resources and cause it to shrink. Viewing the situation as a whole, we think there is nothing to justify this worry.

Practice has proven that our township and town enterprises do not develop at the expense of our agriculture, nor is their development preconditioned by peasants' bankruptcies. Their development precisely reflects important characteristics of development in our country's rural industry and tertiary industry. From a historical point of view, in the process of the industrialization in most countries, the division between industry and agriculture is shown in the differences between urban and rural areas; the rise of industry in urban areas is always preconditioned by sacrificing agriculture and expropriating peasants over fairly long historical period. But in our country, the development of our township and town enterprises has alleviated the disparity between industry and agriculture and between urban and rural areas, provided some gradually transitional and multilayer intermediate links for rural society in the transformation of industrialized and modern society, and thus promoted the development of agriculture, raised agricultural productivity and commodity rates, and directly and indirectly increased the peasants' income. The prospect of township and town enterprises and agriculture coexisting and developing in harmony has initially emerged in our macroeconomy.

The relatively rapid growth of township and town enterprises in the past few years is not only founded on the sustained prosperity of our agriculture but also constitutes a sudden expansion of the tremendous productive forces that this foundation cannot contain.

It has in turn promoted the modernization of our agriculture. The tens of million of "peasant workers" who have moved to work in township and town enterprises and the approximately 100 million people whom they have to feed require that our agriculture supply large amounts of grain and other agricultural and sideline products. Our township and town enterprises themselves need an increasingly large amount of agricultural and sideline products as their raw materials. Therefore, fundamentally speaking, the further development of our township and town enterprises needs a correspondingly steady growth and increasingly prosperous agriculture.

In many areas, township and town enterprises already occupy decisive positions in the rural economy. The new rural economic structure to which these enterprises have given rise is established on the basis of the division of labor between various trades and on new mutual relations between various trades. Once these relations have taken shape, it is utterly impossible to return to previous economic structures. Any effort to return to previous structure will only lead to general chaos in our rural economy and society, which may give rise to a variety of problems even more serious and difficult to solve than problems faced through the development of township and town enterprises themselves.

The Most Important Factor Determining the Future of Our Rural Economy

In our economic life, retrogression is hopeless. Our country's rural population accounts for over 80 percent of total population. If we do not change the situation of 800 million peasants engaged in food production, our agriculture, as a foundation, will not be stable. The lesson we learned prior to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was profound. As we negated the development of rural commodity production and division of labor, we bound our 800 million peasants to the land and caused stagnation in agriculture as a whole. Moreover, as our country's arable land is limited, agricultural labor productivity was low. With 800 million peasants engaged in food production, surplus products were necessarily limited. Even if the urban economy could provide technology, materials, and goods for the transformation of our agricultural production, our peasants lacked sufficient means to pay for technology and goods. Therefore, the input for agricultural modernization was necessarily limited. As we failed to raise the level of our agricultural modernization, our agricultural production was, to a great extent, determined by natural conditions. This in essence meant that we depended on nature for our food supply. Under such circumstances, our agriculture, as a foundation, could never be stable.

In a sense, we can say that precisely because the increasingly pressing shortage of farm land, due to continuous increases in population, made agricultural production very fragile, and because there was no other way to transfer population, areas which developed township and town enterprises relatively early, such as areas in southern Jiangsu, began to develop rural industry and sideline production in order to find a solution. Since township and town enterprises were developed, they have given much support to agriculture in terms of funds, technology, materials and goods, farm machinery, and power supply. The total amount of their contribution to agriculture has been greater than the state's investment in agriculture over the same period. In the sphere of income distribution, the method of "subsidizing agriculture by industry" has been adopted to subsidize the income of agricultural laborers and thus ensure the stable development of agriculture. In these areas, we can say that without development of township and town enterprises, and without support given by these enterprises to agriculture, there would have been an agricultural crisis and the peasants here would have been left in poverty. Restricting and dealing blows to township and town enterprises will inevitably mean restricting and dealing blows to agriculture and finally dealing blows to peasants.

As township and town enterprises have already become a basic condition for the stability of our rural economy, the idea that "there is no stability without agriculture" is, in a sense, transformed into "there is no stability without industry."

The situation in southern Jiangsu and other areas can to a certain extent be regarded as a preview of rural economics in other areas. In other words, the more developed our rural industry and tertiary industry, the more stable our agriculture can finally be. This is a new characteristic of our country's rural economic development at present.

Practice has also proven that if we do not put an end to the system of 800 million peasants in food production, it will be impossible for our peasants to become rich. Over the past few years, there have been quite a few examples of people becoming rich through agriculture in our rural areas; but viewed overall, in order to effect a radical change in our overall rural economic situation and in order to enable our peasants to become rich as soon as possible, it is not enough to rely only on readjusting our internal agricultural structure. In other words, it is not sufficient to place hope only on agricultural development. When 800 million peasants are all engaged in agricultural production, the average per capita income for each peasant cannot be satisfactory and our peasants cannot become very well-off, no matter how advanced the level of production and how large the quantities of products. It is precisely this fact which has enabled our peasants to conclude that "they cannot be rich if they are not engaged in industry." In our country, the development of rural industry and tertiary industry has already enabled a fairly large number of peasants to embark on the path to wealth. The development of rural industry and tertiary industry has also promoted agricultural technological progress, expanded the scale of agriculture, and thus enabled agricultural workers to become rich. This has already been proven by practice.

The situation in Yuanhe Village, Changshu City, Jiangsu provides us with an example. Because of the relatively developed township and town industry and sideline undertaking there, over 98 percent of the laborers have already moved into industrial production; the remaining 2 percent have undertaken contract responsibility for tilling the over 500 mu of land of the whole village (if all the workforce in the village were engaged in agriculture there, the per capita farm land would be only 0.3 mu). Under the relatively fine material conditions provided by township and town enterprises, four small farms have been established. Putting an end to the transitional form of local rural laborers "being engaged simultaneously in both industry and agriculture," a form not very conducive to agricultural development. The expansion of the scale of agricultural operation (on average a laborer tills about 30 mu of land) has produced notable economic results. The income of a laborer engaged in agriculture is over 20 percent more than that of a laborer engaged in industry; his monthly average income is about 180 yuan. Moreover, as township and town enterprises ensure a minimum income for staff and workers of small farms, and as the level of mechanization is heightened, the intensity of work and working hours of an agricultural laborer are not greater than those of an industrial laborer. This has enabled the contingent of agricultural laborers to stabilize. At present, the commodity rate of small farm products in Yuanhe Village is over 98 percent. These farms have begun to break free of their dependence on industrial subsidies. This has not only made it actually possible for people to become rich through agriculture, but, what is more important, it provides an important pattern for the future development of agriculture.

We can say that the development of township and town enterprises, in other words the development of rural industry and tertiary industry, has become the most important factor in determining the future of our rural economy. The idea that "peasants cannot become rich if they are not engaged in industry" will create conditions to "ensure that those who are engaged in agriculture will become rich." This is a new characteristic of our country's rural economic development.

Practice has also proven that if we do not put an end to the situation of 800 million peasants engaged in food production, we will be unable to enliven our rural economy. Under the condition of a uniform structure in our rural economy, there may not be large quantities of surplus rural products, and our agriculture will inevitably be self-sufficient or semi-self-sufficient. Therefore, commodity exchange in rural areas and between urban and rural areas will be very limited. Naturally, there will be little basis for the emergence of large-scale commercial activity. Under these circumstances, our rural economy cannot be enlivened even if there is commercial activity. The economic history of our country's prolonged feudal society is precisely the history of this long-standing situation. Ours is a country where commercial activity emerged relatively early, but as the division of labor on a social scale and the specialization of various industries was underdeveloped, our commercial activity could only be established on the basis of limited quantities of surplus agricultural products, and thus become economic activities with clear consumption characteristics. Without sustained expanded reproduction and without the development of a commodity economy, it is impossible to maintain commercial prosperity for a long period. As a result, our commerce could only fluctuate in a cyclical manner in response to changes in the supply of surplus agricultural products.

Modern commerce prospers on the basis of the division of labor between various trades on a social scale. It is a major means for the realization of consumption and becomes a condition for the realization of social reproduction and expanded reproduction. In other words, only on the basis of modern division of labor between various trades can commercial activities and circulation in our market play a positive role in stimulating production and coordinating the organization of production. Only on this basis can the idea that "we cannot enliven our economy without commerce" really be a law.

Provide Our Agriculture With a Large and Steadily Expanding Market

The division of labor between various trades on the scale of our rural areas and the rapid development of township and town enterprises have, first, caused tremendous changes in the modes of production and exchange in the sphere of rural economy. Second, they have changed the basic structure of the economic relations between our urban and rural areas. Third, as a large amount of labor has moved to sectors other than agriculture, a change in the mode and nature of consumption has emerged. All these changes will inevitably cause a sharp increase in the turnover of commodities and the development of commercial activities.

An analysis of the impact of the transfer of a large number of people into the commercial circulation sector can explain this question. The hundreds and thousands of employees in our township and town enterprises gradually obtain all the grain, foodstuffs, and vegetables they need from the market, instead of producing these foods themselves. However, in a traditional rural economy, all these products are part of self-sufficient production, are not included in the commodity production of agriculture, and are seldom exchanged. This is now not the case; for this portion of products has already been transformed into commodities within our agricultural sector. The more developed our township and town enterprises, the larger the number of people transferring into these enterprises, and the more stable the enterprise system, the larger the quantities of agricultural products transformed into commodities in this form.

If the staff and workers of our township and town enterprises had been forced to remain in the agricultural sector, then the level of the potentially surplus population engaged in agriculture would be much higher. This population exceeding requirements for agricultural reproduction does not constitute a factor of reproduction; therefore, their consumption of grain and other agricultural products appears as "negative consumption" -- consumption merely for the purpose of maintaining survival, a heavy burden on the reproduction of agriculture itself. On the other hand, once this portion of grain and agricultural products is transferred to the consumption of the staff and workers of our township and town enterprises, it changes into a factor of reproduction and expanded reproduction in rural industry and tertiary industry, and appears as "positive consumption" -- consumption of a productive nature. Obviously, these two situations provide completely different foundations and raise completely different requirements for commercial circulation. Under self-sufficient or semi-self-sufficient agriculture, commercial circulation is necessarily traditional and low-level; while under the situation of rural large-scale division of labor among various trades, commercial circulation necessarily is increasingly lively. It has not only acquired a material foundation for its continuous growth, but has in turn become an important condition for maintaining the normal operation of our economy and achieving economic development.

It goes without saying that in our rural economy, the township and town enterprises represent a new production mode and productive force, and are the most lively factor in our rural economy. It is precisely the situation of rural industry and tertiary industry developing simultaneously with agriculture which has created conditions for the sustained prosperity of our commerce. This is another new characteristic of the development of our country's rural economy.

Various Aspects of Help and Support Should Be Given to Township and Town Enterprises

To summarize the impact of sustained development of township and town enterprises on our agriculture has three aspects: First, our country is short of farmland for its huge population. The average scale of agricultural production is small. Under the restrictions of this small scale, it is impossible for the level of agricultural commercialization, the level of agricultural modernization, and the level of peasants' income to be high. However, our township and town enterprises have absorbed a large portion of rural labor and population and thus provided a real possibility for expansion of the scale of agricultural operations. Second, the technological foundation for our country's agricultural modernization is weak, but, through various forms of "subsidizing agriculture by industry," our township and town enterprises are changing this situation. Third, in the process of the transformation from a self-sufficient or semi-self-sufficient traditional agriculture to a modern commodity agriculture in our country, our township and town enterprises provide our agriculture with a steadily growing market of a huge size, providing an important impetus to this transformation.

We can be assured that as our township and town enterprises develop, our agriculture not only will not shrink, but, on the contrary, will be strengthened and enabled to quickly develop toward modernization. Of course, the necessary work of guidance, planning, and coordination will become even more important.

A new thing with vitality can always withstand the test of practice. A conscientious review shows that over the past few years, our township and town enterprises have already made great progress in improving the quality of their administration and management, developing their technology and products, opening up their markets, and exploiting intellectual resources. We are justified in believing that future progress in these areas will be even greater. On the other hand, nothing new can be perfect in its initial stage.

We should help and support it and thus enable it to grow healthy and strong. For example, the "sparks plan" that the State Scientific and Technological Commission has drawn up to strengthen the input of applied technology to our township and town enterprises is precisely a plan to give them the support and help they most urgently need. We are sure that a "sparks plan" is much more beneficial and wiser than fault-finding criticisms. It serves as a good beginning for state operational departments to correct their service attitude, change their work methods, and transform their work style.

MACROECONOMIC REGULATION SYSTEM DISCUSSED

[Article by Zhang Zhenbin: "A Tentative Discussion on the Macroeconomic Regulation System"]

[Text] Human regulation of social economic life can be divided into two basic categories: macroeconomic and microeconomic regulation. These two types of regulations require the interaction and mutual coordination of numerous forms, levers, and methods of regulation. Hence, there are macroeconomic and microeconomic regulation systems functioning in social economic life. In this article I would like to discuss my views on the macroeconomic regulation system.

The Choice of the Forms of Regulation

Economic regulatory forms are the core of the macroeconomic regulation system and a substantial element principally deciding general characteristics and functions of the macroeconomic regulation system. The forms of regulation discussed here mean the basic pattern by which people regulate social economic life, and they are the principal part of the macroeconomic regulation system. In regulating the movement of social economic life on a macroeconomic basis, it is first necessary to choose an effective form of regulation.

Regarding the choice of the forms of regulation, there are two trends in the present-day world. In the West, capitalist countries are transforming the traditional unitary form of regulation by market mechanisms and applying regulation by planning to a certain extent in an attempt to seek a new way out of regulating the macroeconomy through combination of these two regulatory forms. However, the nature of the capitalist system determines that it is impossible to effectively carry out regulation by planning in a capitalist society. In the East, socialist countries are transforming the traditional unitary form of regulation by planning and applying regulation by market mechanisms to varying degrees in the hope of coordinating and controlling the overall movement of social economic life in a more effective and flexible way through the combination of the two regulatory forms. Hence, there are two waves of transformation engaged in a trial of strength. Our task is to make a socialist choice about the combination of planning and the market. In other words, we must base ourselves on the basic principle of a planned commodity economy and seek the optimum combination of regulation by planning and regulation by market mechanisms.

If we study the forms of regulation as a subsystem of the macroeconomic regulation system, we will understand that the structural relationship between regulation by planning and regulation by market mechanisms, which forms the subsystem, is a relationship in which the component parts of an entity are interrelated and interact with each other. That is to say, applying regulation by planning to the macroeconomy according to social demand does not necessarily mean excluding the role of the market, for regulation by planning can be realized through the role of the market.

For example, one of the important aspects of macroeconomic regulation is to regulate the proportionate relationship between accumulation and consumption. When controlling the scope of overall social accumulation and consumption, we cannot divorce ourselves from the market, because, and this is particularly important, a considerable portion of consumption for everyday life in the socialist economy is related to the market. Similarly, the regulation by market mechanisms in the macroeconomy cannot totally exclude control and guidance by planning. The socialist market is a market existing in the socialist planned economy rather than a free market characterized by capitalist blind competition. Therefore, market in all fields of endeavor should be put under the supervision and guidance of regulation by planning and regulation by market mechanisms, the two are interrelated and interact with each other. Hence, a complete regulatory form is achieved. This is a very complicated formation. It is very difficult to strictly differentiate the two types of regulation from each other. In the regulatory form that combines regulation by planning with regulation by market mechanisms, exclusive regulation by planning or regulation by market mechanisms is nonexistent under any circumstances. What does exist is complicated combinations on different scales and to different degrees. It is precisely such combinations that function as an integral whole in the macroeconomic regulation system.

The Application of Regulatory Levers

In the course of regulating the macroeconomy, after an appropriate economic regulatory form is chosen, it is necessary to define effective economic regulatory levers, which are an important, indispensable component of the macroeconomic regulation system and the core of the system.

In a planned commodity economy, pricing, banking, and financial levers are central in regard to macroeconomic regulation. However, the roles various regulatory levels play in regulating the movement of social economic life are mutually restrictive and interact with each other. Therefore, we should make a thorough analysis of the structural relations of various regulatory levers rather than confining our understanding of them to just bringing to light the rules governing them so that we can use these regulatory levers in a comprehensive way.

By logical analysis, the movement of the structural relations of these regulatory levers will result in a logical integral functioning manifested in the amplification of their effect or their comprehensive amplified effect. In other words, the effect resulting from the interrelation and interaction of these regulatory levers will be greater than the effect of the movement of a single regulatory lever. For example, when using pricing levers to regulate the macroeconomy, we should adopt flexible measures in light of the realities in the current social economic life rather than considering problems exclusively from the angle of the price lever itself. This is, in fact, a problem of how to adapt the pricing system to realities in social economic life. Another example is that when using banking levers to control monetary supplies, instead of sticking to the growth rate of a stable money supply as advocated by Western monetarist theory, we should control money supplies in a flexible and elastic way in light of the changed conditions in the movement of economic life. Therefore, how the various regulatory levers of macroeconomic regulation function depends on how economic life reacts to them or partly on the congruity of economic life and the role of regulatory levers, manifested mainly in whether or not regulatory levers play a role in keeping economic life moving normally and overcoming abnormal elements and partly on the degree of economic life's reaction to regulatory levers. It must also be noticed that the role of any regulatory lever is not onesided, and it may have side effects. In harmonizing the movement of economic life an the objectives of man's regulatory efforts, a regulatory lever may have a contrary or different effect than intended.

For this reason, in using regulatory levers we should weigh the pros and cons and try as far as possible to apply them appropriately in the right places so that they can have maximum results commensurate with expected ones in keeping the social economic life moving normally. In addition, the role of various regulatory levers itself is in a process of development in which their regulatory effects are constantly changing. China's present pricing system reform is essentially aimed at changing the functions of pricing levers. In the final analysis, the reform in the banking and financial sectors is a question of a transformation of the functions of levers. In the course of numerous reforms, regulatory levers will inevitably lose some of their old functions; meanwhile, they will take on some new functions.

The Differentiation of the Facets of Regulation

The movement of social economic life is the reflection of the intersection and convergence of the different facets of economic life. In macroeconomic regulation, the form of regulation and the role of regulatory levers should be materialized in all facets of social economic life. Macroeconomic regulation is multi-dimensional, stereoscopic regulation rather than linear, plane regulation. It should be materialized in every facet of social economic life. Thus, given the macroeconomic regulation system as a whole, it is a multi-faceted, stereoscopic structure. In a planned commodity economy, macroeconomic regulation is implemented mainly in the five facets of enterprises, cities, regions, the state, and foreign economic activities.

Enterprises are the first facet of the macroeconomic regulation system. Strengthening macroeconomic regulation should be based on microeconomic invigoration. Without microeconomic invigoration, macroeconomic regulation will certainly not work. The centerpiece of China's economic structural reform is invigoration of enterprises. This strategic policy decision is of great significance in strengthening the macroeconomy.

Cities are an intermediate facet of the macroeconomic regulation system. As huge and intricate systems engineering, macroeconomic regulation involves different links and facets of social economic life. To effectively implement macroeconomic regulation, it is very necessary to locate some important fulcrums in the national economy so as to properly coordinate macroeconomic regulations and microeconomic activities. The central role of cities lies in the fact that cities can serve as a link connecting macroeconomic regulation and microeconomic activities under the macroeconomic regulation system. The key objective of the urban economic structural reform is to enable cities to give full play to their functions in regulating the macroeconomy.

The macroeconomic regulation system should not only locate some solid fulcrums in the national economy, but should establish a network among the fulcrums so that relatively independent areas fanning out from and covered by these fulcrums can be formed. This means that the important role of regions in regulating the macroeconomy should be brought into full play. Particularly so is the case with a big country like ours where the development of the productive forces is uneven from region on region. Bringing into full play the economic role of regions in regulating the macroeconomy refers mainly to controlling and coordinating the social economic life of some regions by transcending cities and on the basis of the objective development of the national economy.

The state is the leading facet of the macroeconomic regulation system. This is because the main executive of macroeconomic regulation is the state as a socialist principal economic entity. As an economic entity, the state can thoroughly understand the overall situation of the national economy and regulate the economic relations in various fields of endeavor in a systematic, rhythmic, and flexible way.

However, from the viewpoint of macroeconomic regulation, the state must carry out overall economic regulation by transcending enterprises, cities, and regions rather than directly interfering in the production and operational activities of enterprises and in the intermediate facets of economic regulation of cities and regions. This will make it possible to harmonize the smooth development of the macroeconomy as a whole.

In addition, macroeconomic regulation should be geared to the needs of the world and the world commodity economy. This is an important strategic principle which we should follow in working out a macroeconomic regulation system in the course of economic structural reform and is also a peripheral facet of the system.

What has been mentioned above is the basic situation of the macroeconomic regulation system in the planned commodity economy. While restructuring the economy, we must steadily perfect the macroeconomic regulation system.

OWNERSHIP ROLES, OPERATION POWER CONSIDERED

[Article by Liu Fuyuan: "Relative Division Means Partial Separation of Management From Ownership"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee's decision on reform of the economic structure points out: "Ownership can be duly separated from the power of operation." Here, "due separation" includes two concepts -- separation and being appropriate. "Being appropriate" is a concept of degree. Some comrades substitute "relative division" for "due separation," and this is not wrong. However, we should not regard "due separation" or "relative division" as something equal to "separation" and "division," because the connotations of "due separation" are much richer than those of "separation" or "division."

Relative division or due separation is not the same thing as complete division or complete separation. That is to say, the ownership of the means of production is somewhat rather than completely separated from the functions of the means of production in the course of reproduction. In other words, the ownership of the means of production is somewhat rather than completely separated from operation and management in the course of actual reproduction. Because any specific form of operation must be a concrete demonstration of some specific ownership relations, the separation of the power of operation from ownerhsip must be limited to an appropriate degree and must be relative in order to ensure the character of the specific ownership form which is demonstrated by the form of operation and management. If the power of operation is completely separated from ownership, ownership will only be demonstrated in the form of rent or interest. Land rent represents land ownership, and interest represents the ownership of funds and capital. However, land rent and interest cannot demonstrate the socialist character of our state-owned enterprises. In France, 98 percent of the capital of the electricity industry is owned by the French Government, but as the power of operation is completely separated from ownership, the ownership character of the enterprise has been completely changed. The enterprise cannot be regarded as a state-owned enterprise. It can only be regarded as an enterprise using capital provided by the state. Such separation of the power of operation from ownership is quite common in capitalist countries.

If land and funds owned by everyone in our country are transferred to enterprises in the forms of lease and credit, and the enterprises, whether they are operated by collectives or individuals, can do business on a completely independent basis, then, nothing can guarantee the form of their operation.

In recent years, since land was contracted to individuals and enterprises were operated by individuals on a contract basis in rural areas, the operational form of hiring labor has become quite common in all parts of the country. This is an inevitable result of the complete separation of ownership from the power of operation. Although enterprises which hire labor use the land and funds of the collectives or the state on a lease or credit basis, it is hard to maintain the original character of ownership, because the state or collective ownership can only be realized through rent and interest. So those enterprises are no longer socialist enterprises owned by the whole people or owned by collectives.

In our socialist state-owned economy and in the relationship between the state and enterprises, the relative nature of the separation of ownership from the power of operation guarantees the socialist character of the enterprises' operations. Although some powers of operation have been decentralized, no fundamental changes have been made in the form of production and operation. The enterprises have been given some power indirectly handling their business, but their operation power is not complete. Their operation is relatively independent but is not yet completely independent. So, this is a dual operation system. The state merely delegates part of the operation power to enterprises, so the decisionmaking mechanism of the enterprises is also of a dual character. The proportion of this double decisionmaking process should be determined by the degree of the enterprise production's socialization. In such enterprises as the railways, whose operation is highly socialized, its operation must be directly handled by the state; in some enterprises where the degree of socialization is low, that part of operation in these enterprises can be completely separated from state ownership. Thus, these enterprises will no longer be part of the state-owned economy. The above cases are the two extremes. For most enterprises, the decisionmaking mechanism can be divided into two parts in different proportions. Leaving part of enterprise operational power in the hands of the state will guarantee the state-owned character of these enterprises. The purpose of giving part of the direct operating power to enterprises is to solve the contradiction between the low degree of productive forces and socialization and the ownership of entire society and to acknowledge the unequal work abilities of enterprise workers as their natural rights.

Under the dual operation system, the distribution mechanism for enterprises is also of a dual characters. Not only do the enterprises have to bear responsibility for their profits and losses, but the state is also responsible for their profits and losses. The planning mechanism of the national economy must be based on the state's overall responsibility for enterprise profits and losses. If ownership is completely separated from the power of operation and if the distribution mechanism is of a single character, the planned economy will not be able to exist. If the state can manage the enterprises only through legal means or through such macroeconomic levers as credit and monetary policies, then our enterprise management will become the same type as that in capitalist countries. Under the conditions of a commodity economy, the nature of the planned economy is ensured through the planned distribution of profits in all economic sectors and enterprises. That is, a considerable part of the power to decide enterprises' reproduction should remain in the hands of the state. This marks the basic difference between a planned economy and a market economy. In recent years, we have not been able to lower the scale of capital investment throughout the whole country. A basic reason for this is the fact that under the present financial quota system, the central authorities have no effective instrument to control the reproduction of localities and enterprises. Sun Yefang did not agree to surrender any power of reproduction to enterprises. His opinion sounded a bit too absolute. But if the power of reproduction is completely delegated to enterprises, that would also be too absolute. This absolute approach to decentralization will simply remove the foundation for a planned economy and remove all guarantees for the state-owned character of enterprises.

Therefore, the relative division of ownership and the power of operation or the due separation of ownership from the power of operation means a partial separation of operational power from ownership and a division of operation power between the state and the enterprise. This division may lead to the division of the earnings. This division is thus in essence a division of enterprise ownership. The state will continue to exercise part of its ownership over the enterprises rather than merely over their funds. The state will not move out of the production process like moneyed capitalists who live on interest income.

INDIRECT, DIRECT CONTROL OF ENTERPRISES EXPLAINED

[Article by Huang Taiyan: "Basic Conditions for Establishing Indirect Control" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Indirect control refers to efforts on the part of the state to influence, mainly by economic means and through market mechanisms, the consequences of enterprise operation in order to prevent, given that the enterprises are allowed to operate independently and that decision-making power is decentralized, them from operating beyond state control. On the whole, state control of enterprises will change from direct control to indirect control. This essentially means that operation of enterprises will be controlled through the fulfillment of various targets. In this way, enterprises will be full of vitality and not confusion.

Indirect control necessarily involves relations between the state, the market, and the enterprises and will give rise to a control chain between them, whereby the state controls the market and the market controls the enterprises. Given such a control chain, the state will be the controller, the market will be the medium, and the enterprises will be the controlled. The market as a medium will have a double identity. On the one hand, the state is its controller. However, on the other hand, it is the controller of the enterprises. Given the above relations, the question of whether or not the state can effectively exercise indirect control of enterprise operations will depend on the following factors:

THE DEGREE TO WHICH THE MARKET IS CONTROLLED. The degree to which the market is controlled is inversely proportional to the extent to which market trends and changes are spontaneous and unguided. However, it is directly proportional to the effectiveness with which the state indirectly controls the enterprises. The degree to which the market is controlled is mainly determined by the profoundity of the state's understanding of the laws governing market trends and by the thoroughness with which the state applies economic means. Thus, we will be required to reform, in accordance with the requirements of our socialist planned commodity economy, those irrational and outdated financial management systems and bank management systems and to perfect and strengthen those means by which we supervise and control taxation, credit, currency, and prices.

THE STATE OF MARKET MECHANISMS. As an intermediate link between the state and enterprises, market mechanisms will directly affect the effectiveness of the indirect control exercised by the state. The state of the market mechanisms refers mainly to two things: First, the degree to which a market system has been established and perfected. The presence of a defective key elements market [yao su shi chang -- 6008 4790 1579 1034] and a defective product market can prevent the market mechanisms from guiding the enterprises. On the other hand, the absence of a capital market, a labor market, and a technology market can prevent the enterprises from expanding or curtailing production according to market information and hinder the state from indirect control of enterprises.

Second, the degree to which the key elements of the market mechanisms have been perfected. The distortion of even a few of these elements can lead to less effective indirect control. For example, the distortion of China's price mechanisms has brought the fall of prices in accurately reflecting supply and demand trends. Thus, high-price products were not necessarily in great demand in society. However, in their own economic interest, the enterprises prefer producing high-price products in order to make large profits, with the result that their operation easily deviates from the goal of state control and the state has great difficulty controlling them. In order to raise the efficiency of indirect control, it is necessary to establish and perfect a system of market mechanisms and to correct certain mistakes.

THE DEGREE TO WHICH THE ENTERPRISES RELY ON THE MARKET. Only by relying mainly on the market and focusing their attention on it can enterprises positively react to even the slightest market changes. If enterprises fail to react positively to market changes, indirect control is bound to fail. In order to make enterprises rely mainly on the market, it is necessary to satisfactorily solve the following problems: 1) Make the enterprises truly relatively independent producers and operators of commodity production; give the enterprises the power of operation they are entitled to; and put an end to the practice of higher level organs meddling with the enterprises' microeconomic activities for the sake of their own interests. 2) Gradually make the market the main supplier of those important materials and goods necessary for normal production in the enterprises and make enterprises sell their products on the market in order to directly influence the latter's economic benefits. 3) Dignify the status of factory directors (managers), tie their benefits to the performance of the enterprises, and allow enterprise leaders material benefits different from those of the workers. Thus, in the event of a conflict of interest, these factory directors will stand up for the enterprises' interests and ensure their survival and development. 4) Be harsh with budgets in order to prevent the enterprises from not showing concern for their own performance and from seeking help and protection from above in the event of poor performance. and 5) Formulate bankruptcy law and reform the social security system.

SUCCESSFUL START TO SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN URGED

[Editorial: "Take the First Step in Fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan in a Down-to-Earth Manner"]

[Text] The year 1986 is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Great success can be achieved only with a good beginning. At the beginning of the new 5-Year Plan, we must, in accordance with the spirit of seeking truth from facts and advancing steadily, take the first step in down-to-earth manner.

Generally speaking, China's current economic situation is excellent. The implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan has been better than expected. Headway has been made in production and construction. The people's living standards have improved remarkably. The situation of the national economy is characterized by a sustained, steady, and coordinated development. Thanks to the urban and rural economic reforms carried out over the years, China's economy is now full of vigor and vitality, the masses have further manifested their initiative and creativity for socialism, and people throughout the country are confident of economic revitalization in the nineties. Naturally, we must also be aware that the unstable factors in the course of China's economic development are not yet thoroughly eliminated. Viewed comprehensively, the main problem is that social demand exceeds supply. It is wrong to put undue stress on the matter; however, if we underestimate it, treat it lightly, and allow it to develop unchecked, it will cause disorder in economic life, thus undermining smooth implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

In order to develop the national economy in a steady and coordinated manner, it is necessary to further rectify economic relations in all fields. At present it is of particularly great significance to reasonably control social demands, eliminate excessive distribution of the national income, curtail the overextended scale of investment in fixed assets, control the unchecked growth of consumption funds, and strive to maintain a balance of social supply and demand. The heart of the question is to control the scale of investments in fixed assets; the key to the solution lies in readjusting the irrational investment structure. The current structure of investment in fixed assets is irrational, as indicated by the following: Of total investment, the proportion of basic facilities and industries such as energy, communications, and raw materials is too low, while the proportion of nonproductive projects is too high. If we cannot put an end to such a state of affairs, it will become a hidden peril for our future economic development.

The key to maintaining the balance of social demand and supply lies in strengthening macrocontrol and organically combining macrocontrol with microflexibility. On the one hand, we must check the overextended demand, and on the other, we must adopt measures to improve supply. In light of different circumstances, tightening measures should be adopted and due support should be given as appropriate. Only in this way can we avoid imposing uniformity on all cases in our economic work and prevent unnecessary losses. While stabilizing the economic situation, the purpose of strengthening macrocontrol is to further invigorate the economy, rather than impairing vitality acquired through reform of the economic structure. Therefore, it is extremely important to establish an effective macromanagement mechanism through which we may ensure that economic vitality stimulated after simplifying administrative procedures and delegating power will advance on a track conforming to the interests of the whole. We have suffered a good deal from the dull and sluggish situation in the past. While laying stress on macrocontrol, we must particularly bear in mind historical experiences and lessons and take note of protecting the vitality of economic development.

For years many comrades have considered that economic development could be promoted only by expanding the scale of capital construction. This is a one-sided view and also the ideological root leading to the expansion of capital construction on repeated occasions. At present we must concentrate our efforts and pay special attention to the expansion of intensive reproduction, that is, gradually rectify the economic relations in various fields and, on the existing basis, tap latent economic potential. Only by doing a good job in this respect can we attain better economic results in society as a whole and promote the sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy.

Straightening out economic relations is a rather complicated matter covering a wide area. In this respect, we must insist on carrying out the reform of the economic structure. The CPC Central Committee has already set the direction and road for the reform of the economic structure. So long as we put them into practice, it will be possible to further straighten out economic relations. Naturally, the steps, methods, and concrete arrangements should be made in line with local conditions so as to strive for further reliability. While carrying out the reform of economic structure during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must pay special attention to the following: The reform should correspond to the target of economic and social development; the extent of microflexibility should be suited to the extent of macromanagement; the reforms of planning, pricing, taxation, finance, and labor and wages should be coordinated; and experiments must be conducted for all major reforms and then be spread gradually after drawing experience. A big step was taken in the reform of the economic structure in 1985. The task for 1986 is consolidation, assimilation, supplementation, improvement, and preparations for taking bigger steps in future reforms.

In a word, gradually rectifying our economy through reforms and ensuring the sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy have an important bearing on the smooth implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. On the occasion of the beginning of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must straighten our our thinking. While handling the relation between speed and results, we must stress results. While handling the relation between need and possibility, we should take objective possibility into account. While dealing with partial and general interests, we should give more consideration to general interests. While making an analysis of the economic situation, we should be aware of favorable conditions as well as unfavorable conditions and should always bear in mind the principle of "seeking truth from facts and acting according to our ability." With a correct guiding ideology and the first step taken in a down-to-earth manner, the Seventh 5-Year Plan will certainly be realized so long as we continue to follow the principles and policies of the CPC Central Committee.

OPEN LATERAL ECONOMIC NETWORK TAKES SHAPE

[Roundup by reporter Xu Hong: "A Lateral, Open Economic Network Has Taken Shape in China"]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- A lateral, open economic network is gradually taking shape on the Chinese mainland. This will further emancipate its urban and rural social productive forces. Data provided by the national economic work conference, currently being held here, shows that from January to October 1985, the value of technological cooperation carried out through the new economic network was 6 billion yuan, that of cooperation related to materials and goods exceeded 10 billion yuan, and 50,000 talented people were exchanged through the network.

Authoritative people in Chinese economic circles speak highly of this new development and hold that it has broken the old pattern characterized by separation between upper and lower levels and between departments and areas. They say: "In a sense, this is an achievement at least as great as opening up to the outside world and is conducive to doing so." This new lateral, open economic network consists mainly of the following three parts:

-- Six large open areas of loose economic and technological cooperation have been formed, namely, the northeast, northwest, north China, central-south, southwest, and east China. These areas have been formed in accordance with geographical location and economic realtions naturally taking shape in history. They are formed on the basis of voluntary participation, equality, and mutual benefit. They mainly study strategic goals and actual projects for jointly developing the areas. For example, in the northeast, 32 trunk highways have been linked through the network, and joint ventures in producing and supplying each other with coal, steel, cement, timber, and other materials and goods have begun.

-- Economic combines with cities as their centers have been formed. For example, in the Jiangsu-Shandong-Henan-Anhui border area, a Huaihai economic zone has been formed with Xuzhou City as its center. In central Liaoning, a network of cities has been established with Shengyang as its center. Nanjing, Zhenjiang, Yangzhou, and Nantong have formed a belt-shaped city group linked by the Chang Jiang, as have Suzhou, Wuxi, and Changzhou, linked by the Shanghai-Nanjing Railway. They exploit the advantages of cities in the groups to carry out a wide range of cooperation in the spheres of economics, technology, personnel, funds, resources, foreign trade, and exports, and thus motivate one another to become prosperous and develop together.

-- Enterprise consortiums or groups of various forms and tiers have been formed. Some of thse groups are formed to jointly produce quality products; others are groups formed by inviting tenders to produce parts; still others are combines formed by production units, scientific research institutes, and colleges; and yet others are combines to deal in and market products. These are new "trusts" formed among different provinces, areas, departments, trades, and units under various types of ownership.

Premier Zhao Ziyang spoke highly of these lateral economic combines. He said that they were comparatively rational in exploiting resources, employing funds, and arranging the productive forces, that their economic results were generally satisfactory, and that they meet the demands of the society and have great prospects for development. The relevant departments have already made decisions to vigorously promote this lateral economic cooperation in this year, formulate policies to support it and protect it by laws.

OFFICIAL ON USING FOREIGN LOANS FOR DEVELOPMENT

HK271027 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 3, 20 Jan 86 p 6

[Interview by LIAOWANG reporter: "Tang Gengyao, director of the State Foreign Exchange Control Administration, Talks About China's Policies for Contracting Foreign Commercial Loans"]

[Text] Under the premise of mainly relying on our own resources and efforts, actively making use of foreign funds to promote our modernization process in various forms is one of China's long-term economic policies. Recently, this reporter interviewed Tang Gengyao, director of the State Foreign Exchange Control Administration, and asked him about China's practice in directly contracting foreign commercial loans in recent years.

Question: Could you please tell me about China's practice in contracting foreign commercial loans in recent years?

Answer: Foreign commercial loans constitute one of the sources of funds for our economic construction in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. With the development of our economic reforms and the improvement of the investment environment in our country, our domestic enterprises have achieved more decision-making power to conduct foreign economic cooperation and ahve raised their capacity to absorb and digest foreign funds. In particular, since the 14 coastal cities were opened, the whole country has further advanced the work of attracting foreign investment and making use of foreign funds. Apart from direct foreign investments in China and loans offered by foreign governments and international monetary organizations, many of our banking and finance institutions have directly contracted commercial credits from abroad in various forms, including the issuance of bonds overseas. In the past year, China's institutions issued seven types of bonds on international money and capital markets in Tokyo, Frankfurt, and Hong Kong, thus raising a total of more than $600 million of funds. At present, foreign commercial loans will comprise a greater proportion of the foreign funds we use.

Question: Will China include the money obtained from foreign commercial loans in its state plans? How will the state control such loans?

Answer: If an enterprise contracts commercial loans from abroad, it will have to bear direct responsibility itself for repaying the loans on time. These loans often bear high interest and are short-term. The creditors generally do not care what the loan is used for and do not undertake any of the risk of projects financed by these loans. Some developing countries have encountered serious difficulties as they did not control the contracting of foreign commercial loans and owed too high a debt to foreign countries.

This has even led to debt crisis in some of these countries. Therefore, in China, all foreign commercial loans contracted by enterprises must be included in the state's plans for making use of foreign funds.

The state's control over the contracting of foreign commercial loans will be exercised mainly through the following two measures: First, the principle of centralist management over foreign funds will be implemented. The State Council has authorized the People's Bank of China to examine and approve all plans to contract foreign loans and to issue bonds in overseas areas. This will prevent such loan-contracting activities getting out of control, and will ensure effective management over these loans. Second, the gross scale of foreign loans will be brought under control in light of both needs and possibilities. The needs refer to that part of funds needed in the development of our national economy but which cannot be raised at home, so we need to borrow money from abroad. The so-called possibilities refer to our payment capacity or solvency. In short, the general scale of our foreign debt is not only determined by the need for funds in our economic construction, but must also be in line with the country's payment capacity.

Question: How will the foreign exchange management department help the enterprises reasonably use means of commercial credit to raise funds and ensure the payment of foreign debts on time?

Answer: As a foreign exchange control department of the state, we are responsible for ensuring that the money we borrow from abroad will be used in state priority projects and will be used to develop production and meet the needs of investment. This foreign money must not be used to import consumer goods. Whether the debtor enterprises can reasonably make use of foreign commercial credits and repay debts on time depends mainly on the selection of their investment projects. Therefore, the state has laid down some strict demands for units planning to contract foreign loans: First, they must submit reports on the feasibility studies, which should include the assessment of the projects' economic results and their ability to earn foreign exchange; second, the investment projects must be included in the state's capital construction plan and fixed assets investment plan; third, renminbi funds for the projects must be first guaranteed; and fourth, they must draw up plans for using and repaying foreign loans. All these documents will be carefully examined by the foreign exchange control department before they are submitted to the People's Bank of China for final approval. So, in general, we can ensure that the commercial loans approved by the state authorities will be rationally used and repaid on time.

Question: What units have the right to act as guarantors for foreign commercial loans?

Answer: According to the existing regulations, the institutions which have the right to act as guarantors for foreign loans are mainly the Bank of China, the China International Trust and Investment Company, and other banking and finance institutions authorized by the State Foreign Exchange Control Administration has authorized more than 30 central and provincial banking and finance institutions to offer guarantees for foreign loans. These authorized institutions have a considerable sum of foreign currency capital, a rather sound financial system, and experience in handling international banking business. They have access to many sources of funds and have many channels for using funds. So we maintain that guarantees for foreign loans are better offered by these banking institutions. If non-banking institutions are to offer foreign currency guarantees, they must have a capacity to earn foreign exchange and must have a certain sum of foreign currency funds at their own disposal. At the same time, they must also be approved by the state authorities before they can offer guarantees.

Question: How do you see the prospect for China's raising of international credits?

Answer: Making use of foreign funds is China's long-term economic policy. China is still a developing country with limited economic strength and insufficient foreign exchange reserves. In our country, per capita national income remains at a low level, and the people's savings rate is also modest. It is obvious that our domestic accumulated funds cannot meet all the needs of our economic construction. The deficiencies will be made up by the introduction of foreign funds. So contracting international commercial loans will be the main way for us to make use of foreign funds. In the future, if there are commercial credits provided on favorable terms in international money markets, I believe that Chinese enterprises will be positive in considering the utilization of funds from these sources.

LACK OF CONFIDENCE AMONG YOUTH EXAMINED

[Commentator's article: "We Should Be Full of Confidence"]

[Text] Some young friends sometimes lack confidence in bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party style and the general mood of society. We can gain a good deal of enlightenment from the CPC Central Committee's important policy that the rectification of party style should start with the party, government, and Army organs at the central level and Beijing.

Why do some young people lack confidence? There are many reasons. However, the main reason is that they have one-sided views on appraising the status of party style and assessing the healthy factors in the party. If we seriously study the speeches by several leading comrades of the central authorities at the meeting of central organ cadres and calmly think about the great changes in the economic and political situation since the 3d Plenary Session of 11th CPC Central Committee, we will find it easy to understand this: Although there are many problems in party style, and some are very serious, and new unhealthy tendencies keep emerging while old problems are being solved, on the whole party style has prominently turned for the better over the past few years. The party's ideological line of seeking truth from facts has been reestablished; a whole set of lines, principles, and policies have been formulated and implemented; the "leftist" guiding principles have been corrected, and the party's democratic centralism and its principle of collective leadership have been restored and developed. Has everyone not seen these significant changes in party style? These facts strongly suggest that healthy factors occupy a leading position in the party. If the party can rectify a mistake as big as the "Great Cultural Revolution," which affected the overall situation, it will certainly be able to clean away the dirt on it and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party style. CYL members and young people should conscientiously study the CPC Central Committee's relevant documents and speeches made by leading comrades of the central authorities, enhance their understanding, and increase their confidence. CYL cadres who are party members should take the lead in action and strive for the rectification of party style.

Second, over a period of time, some leading organs and leading cadres have had the problem of being afraid to check unhealthy tendencies, saying much but doing little. Empty talk will, of course, not help stop unhealthy tendencies but will, instead, allow unhealthy tendencies to spread. This cannot but affect the confidence of some comrades. The CPC Central Committee pointed out that in rectifying party style, it is necessary to solve the six problems listed in the circular issued by the offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council (the circular demands that the unhealthy tendency of contending for the purchase and exchange of imported sedans be resolutely checked; that the unhealthy practice of sending people abroad at will be resolutely stopped; and that the illicit practice of using public money to tour scenic spots be resolutely stopped.)

Extravagance, waste, and the bad habit of giving dinners for relatives and friends at the expense of public interests must be strictly forbidden; the practice of party and government cadres obtaining extra income apart from their salary and collective benefits must be strictly forbidden. Those who abuse their power and take advantage of the favorable conditions they have to do business in violation of the rules and regulations must be seriously dealt with); it is necessary to do a good job in the four aspects of work such as strengthening ideological education, perfecting rules and regulations in order to strengthen discipline, dealings with major cases, and perfecting inner-party life; and it is necessary for discipline inspection organs, judicial departments, party committees of various organs, and inquiry offices to concentrate their main efforts on discovering and dealing with the above cases. Now the six problems have been explicitly defined and the four aspects of work have been made clear and specific. As long as we resolutely follow the CPC Central Committee's plans, we will certainly make prominent achievements in rectifying party style and correcting unhealthy tendencies.

Third, some young people feel that although the CPC Central Committee has issued many instructions on correcting party style and rectifying unhealthy tendencies and a clear distinction has been made in applying the relevant policies, they are not sure how to proceed and what effective methods to adopt. This feeling has made them lack confidence. Now the CPC Central Committee has decided that the rectification of party style and unhealthy tendencies should start with the central organs and Beijing. This is the best opportunity to make a breakthrough. Comrade Zhao Ziyang said: "The general mood of society in our country is determined by the quality of party style, the quality of party style depends on the general mood of the leading organs, and the general mood of the leading organs is determined by the general mood of the party, government, and Army leading organs at the central level. In short, all this is determined by the general mood in Beijing." If the problem of party style in central organs is not solved, it will exert a bad influence on the general mood of the entire party and add to the difficulties of rectifying party style. If central organs can act in line with the requirements of Comrade Hu Yaobang and display their lofty spirit and fine work style before the country, they will play a positive role in improving the style of the entire party and will help bring about a change for the better in the general mood of society. Therefore, the crux of rectifying party style and unhealthy tendencies lies in bringing into play the exemplary role of central organs.

Rectifying party style and unhealthy tendencies accords with the will of the party and the people. Since the central authorities have made up their minds, worked out correct principles and plans, and given prominence to specific methods, the target of bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party style and the general mood of society, set by the 12th CPC National Congress, will be realized in due course, and we should have full confidence in this.

MARXISM CAN AID REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

HK280924 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 13 Jan 86 p 14

[Article by Yu Guangyuan: "Marxism and the Study of Regional Development Strategy"]

[Text] Marxism is of greatest significance in guiding the study of regional development strategy. At the conference of party delegates victoriously concluded not long ago, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: At present, among our cadres there is an argument that we are now at the stage of socialist construction and what we need most is professional knowledge and managerial skills, that there is no great immediate need to study Marxist theory. He pointed out that this is a misconception. After studying Comrade Deng Xiaoping's speech, we all thought that while dispelling the misconception, he urged all cadres, both new and old, "to keep on devising solutions to new problems in light of changing conditions. By this process, Marxist theory itself will be further developed."

We also thought these remarks were extremely significant to China's modernization program. In our study of regional development strategy, it is definitely very necessary to think deeply about the relationship between Marxism and regional development strategy and to deepen our understanding of this issue.

It must be acknowledged that to study regional development strategy, one must master scientific knowledge and technical know-how in both the natural and social sectors. They have no class character and are equally applicable to capitalism and socialism. Therefore, they can be called "universal science and technology." At present we have learned too little rather than too much in this regard. However, relatively speaking, "Marxist science" is equally indispensable to us. As I see it, it must be admitted that we have attached insufficient important to its study. What then is the relationship between Marxism and the study of regional development strategy? In my opinion, it is manifested in the following:

-- Marxism can guide us in understanding the great significance and fundamental objectives of the study of regional development strategy.

--Marxism can guide us in adhering to socialist principles and firmly forging ahead along the road of scientific socialism in the study of regional development strategy and guide us in understanding the tasks, principles, and measures of reform during the socialist construction period.

-- Marxism can guide us in better understanding the scientific theory concerning socialist construction planning (including regional economic and social development strategy.)

-- Marxism can help us understand how to solve basic political, economic, social, and cultural problems associated with the study of regional development strategy.

-- With its philosophy of dialectical materialism (the highest development in the history of human thought and world philosophy), Marxism can also help us solve more cleverly numerous problems which crop up in the study of regional development strategy.

These are just a few of the ways in which Marxism can guide us in the study of regional development strategy. We could cite more. All of these, of course, still call for more detailed explanations. We should combine the study of Marxism with that of China's real problems. This is the path we should take in advancing and developing Marxism. The study of regional development strategy is an important study of practical problems which can contribute to the advancement of Marxism.

PLA FLEET DISCUSSES POLITICAL WORK IN OPEN AREAS

[Report by Jian Xuan: "PLA South China Sea Fleet Holds Discussion Meeting on Political Work in Units Stationed in Areas Opening Up to the Outside World"]

[Text] How to carry out the "four haves" education -- education in fostering lofty ideals and moral integrity, becoming educated, and cultivating a strong sense of discipline -- and how to improve and strengthen ideological and political work in the PLA units stationed in the open areas are a matter of great interest to leaders of the PLA South China Sea Fleet. At a meeting in Zhanjiang recently for representatives of advanced individuals and units of the Armed Forces in building spiritual civilization stationed in the special economic zones, open cities, and Hainan Island, the Political Department of the fleet made a serious study of the matter and discussed it earnestly.

Most units of the fleet are stationed in the special economic zones and the open areas. With the development of the commodity economy and increasing contacts with people of other countries, the decadent capitalist ideas of "money is everything" and "personal interests are above everything else" have been growing among a certain number of officers and men. It is therefore more urgent and important to carry out the "four haves" education in depth and to intensify political and ideological work in PLA units stationed in the open areas.

After listening to reports by political work cadres of 16 primary units on their experiences in conducting education in fostering lofty ideals and cultivating a strong sense of discipline, the meeting proposed that all PLA units conduct the "four haves" education in earnest before March this year.

The meeting also suggested a reform of forms and methods of political and ideological education, taking advantage of adequate information facilities in the open areas and conducting timely education in some budding problems. As for the methods of education, it is necessary to combine general education with heart-to-heart talks so as to carry out political and ideological work in accordance with special characteristics. We must publicize both positive and negative examples so that officers and men will learn from images of revolutionary heroes and will distinguish between true and false and between right and wrong by virtue of the experiences of others. We must also combine classroom courses with contests of knowledge and meeting for giving lectures and holding debates so that those who receive an education will not be bored.

In carrying out the "four haves" education and improving and intensifying political and ideological work, the key lies in the fact that party committees should attach importance to it and leading cadres should play an exemplary role. The meeting especially stressed that leading cadres at all levels should strive to become revolutionary soldier soldiers with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education, and a sense of discipline. In checking unhealthy tendencies, the higher levels should take the lead and play an exemplary role for the lower levels. Party committees at various levels should strengthen unified leadership and take the "four haves" education as a part of their work, while all departments should make concerted efforts and work in cooperation with each other. Meanwhile, political work cadres at various levels of the fleet should fight in the vanguard to become "four haves" pioneers.

LI DESHENG TRIP TO XINGAN RANGE RECALLED

HK280901 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 pp 22-23

[Article by Li Yuezhu: "The General Goes to Xingan Range for a Sixth Time"]

[Excerpts] In July 1985, Li Desheng, who had just resigned from the post of commander of the Shenyang Military Region, handed over work to his successor, talked with every one of the members of the new body, and drove straight to the Xingan Range without even resting for a day. He wanted to see once again before leaving his post the frontier guards safeguarding the motherland in areas where conditions are the toughest.

Against the cold wind in the deep of the night in the northern Xingan Range, and then despite scorching sun at noon, he took a train, changed to a car, and drove day and night across the mountain range. Everywhere he went, he would go to the soldiers' camps, shaking hands with every one of them, and cordially ask where they hailed from, whether they were used to the life there, and whether there were any problems needing to be solved. Since ancient times, good generals have cherished soldiers. After 11 years in the border areas, going through bitter winters and scorching summers, Li Desheng has build a profound friendship with the frontier guards. The latest trip was his sixth to the Xingan Range.

CPPCC URGES EMULATION OF HONG KONG-BORN DOCTOR

[Report by correspondent Wang Jin: "The CPPCC National Committee Holds a Forum on Emulating Hong Kong-Born Doctor Pan Enliang"]

[Excerpt] Following Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu, Pan Enliang -- another brilliant representative of outstanding intellectuals -- evoked strong repercussions in the CPPCC National Committee and among organizations engaged in united front work. On the morning of 21 January, the CPPCC National Committee invited its members who were in Beijing and some 100 persons in charge of various party groupings to hold a forum on emulating Pan Enliang.

Before his death, Pan Enliang was vice chairman of the Taian County CPPCC Committee in Liaoning Province and president of the county's People's Hospital. He was born in Hong Kong in 1930, returned to the mainland with great enthusiasm in 1951 and was enrolled at the Dalian Medical College in 1953. In 1958 when he graduated, he suffered an injustice and was sent to remote Taian County in Liaoning Province as a doctor. Although he was treated unjustly in previous political movements, he never wavered in his trust in the CPC and his love for the socialist cause. He persistently served the people wholeheartedly at his medical post for some 20 years. As a Hong Kong-born resident, he was to have returned to Hong Kong to inherit a large legacy but he silently devoted himself to the service of the people rather than apply to return to Hong Kong.

At the forum, all participants unanimously praised Pan Enliang for his praiseworthy spirit of loving the motherland persistently and earnestly undergoing all kinds of frustrations in life but never changing his utter loyalty to the motherland. Li Ganliu said: The reason Pan Enliang could withstand all kinds of trials under tough conditions and remained utterly loyal to the motherland although experiencing frustrations in life lies in the fact that he has a sincere and ardent lvoe for his motherland and a firm faith in socialism. Cheng Siyuan said: Pan Enliang's heroic deeds have proven that most sons and daughters of the Chinese nation living abroad are patriotic. Although living abroad, they always cherish the motherland and hope our country and people, with a firm foothold, will become more prosperous and stronger. This serves as a guarantee that our motherland will surely be united and our four modernizations program will certainly be achieved. Shen Qizhen said: The name of Pan Enliang has been enshrined in the annals of rejuvenating China and his spirit will live in the hearts of the people forever. He made some proposals on how to commemorate Pan Enliang.

The forum was presided over by Yang Jingren, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN ADDRESSES PARTY MEETING

OW290529 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jan 86 p 1

[Excerpts] A provincial meeting of prefectural, city, and county party committee secretaries was held in Fuzhou yesterday. The meeting was called mainly to implement the guidelines laid down by a central conference on rural work and a conference of cadres of central organs, and to solve problems in further invigorating the rural economy and carrying out party rectification in the rural areas.

Xiang Nan, secretary of the provincial party committee, presided over the meeting. On behalf of the provincial party committee, Jia Qinglin, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee, made a report entitled: "Conscientiously Implement the Guidelines Laid Down by the Central Conference on Rural Work and Further Bring About a New Situation in Our Province's Rural Work."

Comrade Xiang Nang addressed the meeting. After analyzing the situation in rural Fujian and its agriculture, he said: The situation in the rural areas is good, manifesting itself in three aspects: First, the total income of the village and town enterprises in the province last year increased 75 percent over 1984, with its increment rate ranking third in the country; second, total aquicultural output ranked first in the country; and third, the afforestation plan was overfulfilled by 70 percent. However, we should still note problems in agriculture. The main problems are: A weak agricultural foundation, a reduction in investment, a lack of staying power, and insufficient services for agriculture. We must not take rural, grain, and agricultural problems lightly. All localities and departments should strengthen the agricultural foundation and staying power.

On strengthening land management and effectively carrying out village and town construction, Xiang Nan said: It is a terrible thing that farmland has been reduced year after year. Some cadres have arbitrarily seized farmland and built houses on it. They have really set a bad example in this regard. Each township should assign a special person to take charge of land management and village and town construction, and such management should be strengthened by administrative, economic, and legal means.

Rural party rectification is a major task in rural work. Comrade Xiang Nan advised carrying out this task well. It is necessary to appraise the situation in the rural areas accurately. The current situation there is good, thanks to the efforts of large numbers of party members and people. It should also be noted, however, that there are indeed unhealthy tendencies, such as abusing power to seek personal gain, and even violations of law and discipline. Comrades of all county party committees should act carefully, according to the provincial party committee's "four requirements," "four benefits," and "four disapprovals," and strengthen their leadership over party rectification.

Attending yesterday's meeting were members of the standing committees of the provincial party committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, and the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, members of the leading party group of the provincial People's Congress; vice governors; members of the leading party group of the provincial CPPCC Committee; leaders of the provincial military district; secretaries of various prefectural, city, and county party committees; the chairman of the provincial agricultural commission; and responsible persons of various departments, commissions, and offices under the provincial party committee, and of various commissions, offices, departments, and bureaus under the provincial authority, totaling 343 persons.

FUJIAN: QUANZHOU'S NEW MAYOR INTERVIEWED

[Report by Li Jiancheng: "Conversation With Chen Rongchun, Quanzhou's New Mayor" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE Headline]

[Text] Fuzhou, 17 Jan (ZHONGGWUO XINWEN SHE) -- I interviewed Chen Rongchun, new mayor of Quanzhou City, Fujian Province, soon after he assumed office.

The 47-year old mayor has a lean face and bright piercing eyes, giving people the impression of an intelligent and capable man. Chen Rongchun, a native of Huian County, graduated from the Beijing Foreign Affairs Institute and has served as a diplomat for more than 20 years. He talked cheerfully and humorously during the interview.

Asked about the administrative program of the current municipal government, Mayor Chen said: Our goal is to turn Quanzhou into an open city. To achieve this goal, we must do a good job in five [as published] aspects, namely: 1) Expansion of exports -- in the coming 5 years, we will build some bases to produce staple export commodities, such as tea, porcelain, canned food, slabstone, footwear, textiles, and fresh and live goods; 2) development of tourism and cooperation with foreign interests in the field of labor service; 3) full utilization of funds provided by Overseas Chinese and foreigners in the development of business in the forms of processing of provided raw materials, joint ventures, and cooperation projects; 4) the strengthening of cultural, scientific and technological, and academic exchanges and friendly contacts with foreign countries as well as with Hong Kong and Macao.

Mayor Chen said: In becoming an open city, Quanzhou enjoys five favorable conditions: 1) The city has rich resources to develop forestry, the mining industry, and hydroelectric power. 2) Quanzhou's 421-kilometer coastline and 1 million mu of beaches are definitely advantageous for the development of fishery and aquatic product farming, and more than 10 ports, including Xiaocuo, Houzhu, Chongwu, Xiutu, Shijing, Dongshi, and Anhai, are excellent places to develop sea transport. 3) More than 3 million Quanzhou natives live abroad, spread over more than 90 countries and areas in the world. 4) Quanzhou is separated from Taiwan by only a strip of water and is only 140-odd nautical miles away from Kaohsiung; in addition, 40 percent of Taiwan Han compatriots are of Quanzhou origin. 5) Quanzhou is a cultural center with many historic sites, more than 200 spots in the city have been classified as protected cultural relic units; moreover, as the departure port of the ancient "silk road by sea," the city enjoys exceptional advantages for developing tourism.

At present, the priority task for Quanzhou is to step up the construction of infrastructure and to improve investment conditions. Regarding energy supply, the city's short-term tasks are the Longmentan water diversion and hydropower project, the Xinlan hydropower station project, and the Xiamen-Quanzhou 220,000-volt electric transmission and transformer substation project. With regard to communications, it is necessary to step up the construction of the Tianhushan feeder line and the Hutou-Quanzhou section of the Zhangzhou-Quanzhou railway, as well as the Xiaocuo and Houzhu port expansion projects, to form a sea transportation fleet, and to open direct shipping lines between the ports of Chongwu, Wangchuan, Dongshai, and Shijing on the one hand and Hong Kong and Macao on other hand. With regard to telecommunications services, emphasis must be placed on the construction of the Quanzhou 8,000-line and Jinjiang 4,000-line program controlled telephone projects.

Mayor Chen pointed out: At present, another important task for Quanzhou is to further implement the policy on Overseas Chinese affairs so as to win confidence among Overseas Chinese.

He said: Changing the household registration of more than 2,600 returned Overseas Chinese households has been completed and more than 30,000 unjust, false, and wrong verdicts involving returned Overseas Chinese and their family members have been reversed. The tasks currently under way include: 1) The implementation of the housing policy for Overseas Chinese. According to a survey, a total of 1,580 houses with a floor space of more than 400,000 square meters had been wrongly confiscated after the land reform. By early January the property rights to 95.6 percent of these houses has been returned to their owners, and 70 percent of this real estate is now being used by the owners. It is planned to return the property rights to all the houses to their owners by the first quarter of this year and return to all the owners the right to use these houses by the end of this year. 2) The implementation of the policy toward returned Overseas Chinese, their family members, and intellectuals of Overseas Chinese origin. At present there are 1,413 returned Overseas Chinese, their family members, and intellectuals of Overseas Chinese origin residing in the city. It is necessary to arrange appropriate jobs for them according to their own conditions. So far 189 people are holding leading posts at and above the county or section level. We must also mend our ways in helping this group of people to solve such specific problems as their children's education, employment, housing, separation between husbands and wives because they are working in different places, the irrelevance between their professional qualifications and the nature of their present jobs, and soon. 3) Those returned Overseas Chinese and their children who were forced to leave the city in the early 1960's should be allowed to return. They total more than 400, of whom more than 140 have returned to the city and have been settled, and the rest are to return and be settled by the middle of this year, while those who are older will be allowed to retire according to normal procedure.

HAN PEIXIN ADDRESSES JIANGSU CYL MEETING

OW260940 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] A Jiangsu provincial conference of CYL delegates concluded successfully in Nanjing on the afternoon of 23 January.

Han Peixin, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended and addressed the conference. The conference elected 51 additional members and alternate members to the Eighth Jiangsu Provincial CYL Committee.

In his speech Comrade Han Peixin stressed that party organizations and party cadres at all levels throughout the province should display communist farsightedness and vision by attaching importance to youth work, be concerned about it, and assist in carrying out the work. Party committees at all levels should be concerned about the work, help CYL cadres in their daily life, and help them to mature as soon as possible. They should provide more opportunities for CYL cadres to temper themselves, create the objective conditions needed by CYL cadres to carry out their work, and solve actual problems for them to enable them to do a still better job. Party committees at all levels should consider it a matter of great importance to train CYL cadres and have CYL cadres with both political consciousness and competence assigned to the various CYL organizations.

The average age of the additional committee members and alternate members elected at the conference is 28. Sixty percent of them have acquired a university or higher level of education.

On the morning of 22 January, 50 comrades who had already left their CYL work posts, attended a discussion meeting of new and old CYL cadres.

Sun Jiazheng, former secretary of the provincial CYL Committee and member of the Standing Committee and director of the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee; Gu Hao, former deputy secretary of the provincial CYL Committee and director of the Organization Department of the provincial CPC Committee; and (Ji Yongchi), former secretary of the provincial CYL Committee and secretary of the Lianyungang City CPC Committee, made remarks full of warm feelings.

[Excerpt] The Propaganda Department of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee and the provincial Philosophy and Social Science Federation jointly held a forum at the Jiangxi Hotel this afternoon to discuss how social sciences could contribute to Jiangxi's revitalization. Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Liu Fangren and Xu Qin, deputy secretaries; Bai Dongcai, member of the Central Advisory Commission; Zhao Zengyi, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; (Chen Guizun), vice governor; and Ma Jikong, honorary chairman of the provincial Philosophy and Social Science Federation, were at the forum.

WAN SHAOFEN ADDRESSES JIANGXI JOURNALISTS

[Excerpts] Wan Shaofen, secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, this morning addressed a forum of journalists sponsored by the General Office and the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee and the General Office of the provincial government. She said: Journalists in Jiangxi have worked hard and achieved great success in helping revitalize Jiangxi and promoting the four modernizations this past year. I hope that you will continue to work hard in the new year and fully play your part as the party's mouthpiece to prepare public opinion for speeding up the arrival of socialist material and spiritual civilization, deepening the economic reform, and fundamentally improving our province's party style and social conduct. Liu Fangren, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the forum.

Comrade Wan Shaofen spoke at the forum's end. She emphatically pointed out: In propaganda work, we must pay attention to social effects. We must give our propaganda a distinctive feature. Our propaganda on the Red Army's course in Jiangxi is of profound significance to developing Jiangxi's spiritual wealth and carrying out education in our revolutionary traditions. We must heighten the people's spirit by means of propaganda and arouse them to work with one heart to carry out the four modernizations.

JIANGXI LEADERS ADDRESS CADRES' MEETING

[Excerpts] The Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting of cadres of provincial-level organs at the Jiangxi Theater in Nanchang City this morning, calling on them to play an exemplary role in improving party style throughout the province.

Xu Qin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, chaired the meeting. Attending were Secretary Wan Shaofen, Deputy Secretaries Liu Fangren and Xu Qin, Standing Committee members Wang Zhaorong, Pei Dean, Wang Baotian, (Lu Xiuzhen), (Wang Taihua), and Zhao Zhijian, and veteran Comrade Ma Jikong of the provincial party committee; Chairman Zhao Zengyi, Vice Chairmen Di Sheng and (Liu Zhonghou), and Standing Committee members (Wang Linde), Liang Jianguo, and Dong Chao of the provincial Advisory Commission; secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission Zhu Zhihong; Chairman Wang Shufeng and Vice Chairmen Wang Zemin, Huang Xiandu, Peng Shengxi, and Liu Bin of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Vice Governors Qian Jiaming and (Sun Xiyue) and adviser Fang Qian of the provincial people's government; Vice Chairmen Yang Yongfeng, Shen Hanqing, Lu Liang, Wu Yongle, (Wu Quyu), and (Wu Yunzhong) of the CPPCC Provincial Committee; Political Commissar Wang Guande, Deputy Secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission (Shen Zhongxiang), Chief of Staff (Liu Ziming), and Director of the Political Department (Chen Lijiu) of the provincial military district; and Vice President (Liu Zhifu) and Deputy Political Commissar (Yang Linxiong) of the Nanchang Army School, as well as some 3,400 cadres of provincial-level organs.

Secretary of the provincial party committee Wan Shaofen was the first to speak at the meeting. Then, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee Liu Fangren spoke. He discussed, in particular, questions related to the improvement in party style of provincial-level organs. He said: Party organizations at various levels throughout the province have done a tremendous job in improving party style over the past few years. There are positive signs of a marked improvement in our party style. However, while fully confirming the achievements in improving party style, we should note that manifestations of the unhealthy tendency pointed out in the central leading comrades' speeches do exist in varying degrees in our work, and that some are rather serious. In improving party style, provincial-level organs should pay close attention to work in the following aspects: First, it is necessary to intensify ideological education in order to achieve greater unity in thinking and enhance understanding. Second, it is necessary to earnestly conduct a comprehensive and thorough examination and consolidation of party style in the provincial-level organs. Third, it is necessary to reinforce discipline and take firm action to investigate and punish violations of discipline, especially major and grave cases. Fourth, it is necessary to set up and improve relevant rules and regulations to institutionally guarantee strict investigation of unhealthy tendencies. Fifth, it is necessary to improve the quality of leading bodies, so that leaders can set a good example in improving party style.

Zhao Zengyi, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, and Wang Baotian, Standing Committee member of the provincial party committee and commander of the provincial military district, also spoke at the meeting. Comrade Zhao Zengyi said: The central leading comrades have told us that, although we have retired from the frontline of administrative work, we should never retreat to the secondary front as far as work related to party style and discipline is concerned. As long as our party membership continues in our lifetime, we should remain in the frontline and play an exemplary role in this regard.

We should also constantly improve ourselves on such fundamental issues as enhancing party spirit, observing party discipline, and safeguarding party unity.

In his speech, Wang Baotian said: The Central Military Commission's decision that the Army should play the leading role in improving and bringing about a fundamental improvement in party style this year is a glorious task entrusted to it under the new situation. Party style in the provincial military district is, in general, good, as reflected in the marked results achieved in implementing the party's line, principles, and policies and carrying out all tasks, especially in the Army's structural reform and reduction-in-strength reorganization. However, to fulfill the requirements set by the party Central Committee and the Military Commission, much needs to be done, and weaknesses need to be overcome. In line with higher authorities' arrangements and demands, party committees and organs of the provincial military district and military subdistricts have made serious efforts to further improve party style. The party committee of the provincial military district has mapped out a 10-point plan for improving party style in 1986. The Standing Committee of the party committee has also formulated six measures for raising the quality of the leading body. We are confident and determined to unite as one in taking the lead in improving, and bringing about a fundamental change for the better in party style in the province.

SHANDONG SECRETARY SPEAKS AT PARTY MEETING

SK260242 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] On 24 and 25 January the provincial CPC Committee and government held separate meetings of responsible persons of the departments, committees, offices, section, and bureaus directly the province. Yang Xingfu, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee, and Ma Lianli, vice governor of the province, relayed the guidelines of the speech on correcting party style and improving the work styles of organs delivered by Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, at the Standing Committee meeting of the provincial CPC Committee. Based on the actual situations of the provincial organs, they also put forward specific opinions on implementing the guidelines.

On 21 January the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee held a meeting to hear a report on the situation of the provincial organs in improving their work styles, and to conduct conscientious study regarding the next step of the work involving improving the styles of thinking and work of provincial organs. Comrade Liang Buting pointed out. The present work of provincial organs with regard to improving their styles of thinking and work is an important step to consolidate the develop the achievements in earlier party rectification. It represents the continuation of party rectification. Great achievements have been scored in party rectification, and many positive results should be fully affirmed. However, there are indeed some problems that have not been solved successfully. We should adopt positive methods to solve such problems. The very purpose of the present work of improving the work styles of organs is to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the party and administrative styles of the organs. This is an important task bearing on the work for the entire year.

He stressed: In carrying out this work, we should, first of all, list all the conspicuous problems that the masses are most concerned about, which affect the relations between the party and the masses and which interfere in the normal progress of work, and solve them successfully one by one. We should emphasize actual results and avoid flourishes.

With regard to the steps to be taken to solve the problems, after the previous ideological mobilization, we should start with and emphasize the implementation of the guidelines in the circular on solving some current serious problems concerning the work styles of organs issued by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, with the focus on solving the problems in the economic field, and then gradually extend our efforts to the political, organizational and ideological fields to correct their unhealthy trends, such as liberalism, sectarianism, and a negligence of organization and discipline.

He continued: The present work to improve the work styles of organs is different from other general work. The CPC Central Committee has made a firm determination. It called on the central organs to act as examples throughout the country, and has taken very quick action. We should also be determined to do so. Provincial organs should act as examples throughout the province, formulate some rules and regulations, and take the lead in abiding by them. All units should institute the responsibility system with their leaders taking the responsibility, and should report their situations in a timely manner, exchange their experiences, conduct inspections, and give guidance.

Comrade Liang Buting said: We should be firm in our attitude and prudent in our steps when solving problems in the work styles of organs. We have been lenient in dealing with the problems of a general nature. From now on we should be strict in dealing with such problems, with the major purpose being to educate people and check future problems. Those who violate discipline to a serious extent should be thoroughly investigated and corrected, and be handled according to discipline. With regard to the small number of people who violate the criminal law, we should punish them according to law after clarifying the facts regarding criminal activity, and should never be soft-hearted toward them. All departments and units should work out necessary regulations and stipulations to counter the problems in the work styles and the loopholes in the systems of organs, including establishing and improving the award-penalty system for the personnel of the organs. The awards and penalties of a cadre should be recorded in his personal files and be regarded as an important basis on which to evaluate and use him. The work in this aspect should be perfected gradually.

After the 21 January meeting of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial CPC Committee and government held meetings of responsible persons of various provincial departments, which were presided over by Yang Xingfu, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee, and Ma Lianli, vice governor, respectively, to relay the guidelines of the Comrade Lian Buting's speech and put forward demands for the next step of the work involving improving the work styles of organs.

1. It is necessary to continue to penetratingly study the speeches of Hu Yaobang and other central leaders delivered at the rally of cadres of central organs, further enhance understanding and correct attitude, and continuously raise awareness in correcting party style and improving the work styles of organs.

2. It is necessary to study, examine ourselves, and correct our problems immediately, all at the same time. It is necessary to stress actual results and refrain from doing work superficially. Measures should be adopted immediately to solve the problems that can be solved within a very short period of time. We should regard the implementation of the circular on solving some serious problems in current work styles of organs issued by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council as an area where a breach should be made for the purpose of improving the work styles of organs, and pay attention to and solve the problems one by one.

3. It is necessary to sum up and introduce good experiences in a timely manner. The provincial CPC Committee has decided to hold a meeting for provincial organs to exchange experiences in improving work styles after the Spring Festival. It has also decided to establish a leading group for the improvement of the party style of provincial organs. CPC committees and leading party organs of all units should consider improvement of work style an important task for the present, institute the responsibility system at every level to make each level hold responsibility for the work of the next lower level, and fulfill the task successfully in line with the requirements of the provincial CPC Committee.

ZHEJIANG CIRCULAR ON IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

[Excerpts] Yesterday the General Office and the Propaganda Department of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee issued a circular to party committees of all cities, prefectures and counties, as well as party committees and groups of all provincial units, in connection with the study and implementation of the speeches by leading comrades of the party Central Committee at the meeting of cadres in central organs.

The circular pointed out: In order to effectively study and implement the guidelines of the central leading comrades' speeches in light of the actual conditions in our province, we should currently concentrate on the following things:

1. Follow the guidelines contained in the central leading comrades' speeches when summing up the work in 1985 and defining the objectives in 1986. In summing up our work, we should be realistic, affirm the achievements, face the problems squarely, understand our weak spots and gaps, and look for ways to make improvements.

2. Further implement the related documents of the General Office of the party Central Committee, and effectively solve the six serious problems in the work style of party and government organs. Party organizations at all levels should regard the satisfactory solution of these problems as important practical actions in correcting party style. Units that have completed party rectification should conduct reviews and earnestly uncover and seek effective solutions to their own problems.

3. Thoroughly investigate and sternly handle cases of grave importance that have been uncovered. Party committees and discipline inspection commissions of all localities and units, those at and above the county level in particular, should review how the cases have been handled so far, and instruct the departments concerned to investigate and handle cases of grave importance without delay.

4. Party organizations at all levels should hold democratic meetings before the Spring Festival so that party members may measure themselves against the guidelines of the central leading comrades' speeches, carry out criticisms and self-criticisms, voluntarily accept supervision by the party organization and the masses, and rectify unhealthy practices.

5. Provincial organs should take the lead in studying the central leading comrades' speeches, and set good examples for the whole province. Provincial units should carry out study activities while summing up work experiences, making assessments, and holding democratic meetings. They should simultaneously study and correct mistakes, seek satisfactory solutions to their own problems, improve office work style, and do their best to serve grass-roots units and the people. Party committees of provincial organs should be aware of the studying being conducted in subordinate units, and should exercise supervision and conduct investigation accordingly.

HUNAN RADIO ON FAILURE TO CHECK UNHEALTHY TRENDS

["Today's Forum" article: "Matching Our Words With Actions"]

[Text] One of the reasons there has been no fundamental turn for the better in the party work style in some localities and units so far is that the leading comrades of these localities and units have failed to resolutely check unhealthy trends. As the old saying goes: The superior man uses only his tongue and not his hands. In correcting unhealthy trends, they have confined themselves to conveying documents, aimless reasoning, and going in for flourishes rather than doing solid work in solving problems. Are they lazy and not ready to take the work in hand? Things are not that simple. They fear tackling the problems for complicated social reasons. For instance, those who are followers of the theory of relationships fear that they will be unable to get along well with those they have criticized. Those have scruples about power and influence fear being dismissed from office. Those who are engaged in encouraging unhealthy trends fear that they might be criticized if they criticize others. Some cadres who have committed gross mistakes fear making self-criticism will encourage criticism from others. For these reasons people have failed to expose some unhealthy practices and to handle some cases.

The CPC Central Committee has great determination to curb unhealthy trends prevailing within the party. At present, the Central Secretariat has started with the work of the central organizations and Beijing Municipality, thus setting an example for leaders at various levels. The superior men who use only their tongues and not their hands should no longer take a wait-and-see attitude and be overcautious and indecisive. It must be understood that if you do not start criticizing and correcting your mistakes by yourself, others naturally will.

HUBEI APPOINTS NEW ACTING GOVERNOR, OTHERS

[By reporter Ren Zhaoying]

[Text] Wuhan, 30 Jan (XINHUA) -- Based on a request submitted by Huang Zhizhen, the 13th Session of the Standing Committee of the 6th Hubei Provincial People's Congress, which concluded today, decided that he would no longer hold the post of governor of the province. The session appointed Vice Governor Guo Zhenqian as acting governor of Hubei Province. At the same time, it appointed Duan Yongkang [3008 3057 1660] and Xu Penghang [1776 7720 5300] as vice governors.

WANG RENZHONG INSPECTS HUBEI PREFECTURE

HK270727 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Recently, Wang Renzhong, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, inspected Hubei's Xianning Prefecture. He stressed that in correcting the party work style, we should now begin with the leadership. We should strengthen the party's ideological and organizational building, and correct the unhealthy tendencies. He also spoke at an enlarged meeting of Xianning Prefectural CPC Committee, which was attended by cadres at and above the (?county) level. His speech mentioned the issues of the standpoint, viewpoint, and methods of approach of a communist.

Comrade Wang Renzhong made the inspection tour from 28 December 1985 to 19 January 1986. He visited Toncheng, Chongyang, Puqi, Jiayu, and Tonghsan Counties, as well as the Puqi textile factory, where he held forums with cadres, intellectuals, and technicians.

He also inspected factories, villages, forestry centers, reservoirs, markets, and peasant households.

At the enlarged meeting of the prefectural CPC Committee, Comrade Wang Renzhong said: Starting from the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has brought order out of chaos and made great achievements in correcting the line, principles and policies. The present situation is very good. We must uphold reforms and the principle of developing the national economy and taking agriculture as the base.

On correcting the party work style, Comrade Wang Renzhong stressed: We must begin the work now with the leadership. Party committees at all levels must organize their cadres and party members to seriously study the remarks of central leading comrades made at the meeting of central organ cadres, which was held on 9 January.

On correcting the unhealthy tendencies, Comrade Wang Renzhong explicitly expounded on the standpoint, viewpoint, and methods of approach of a communist. He said: Every communist must use the Marxist standpoint, viewpoint, and method of approach, that is the dialectical materialist and historical materialist viewpoint and method of approach, to understand and change the world.

On how to think work, Comrade Wang Renzhong stressed the integration of collective leadership with division of labor; the separation of party management from government administration; the separation of government administration from enterprise supervision; the practice of discussing problems through study; the combination of study, work and writing; the practice of focusing our work on the rich and the poor so as to bring along people who make mediocre achievements; the practice of helping the poor catch up with the advanced units; the practice of grasping other tasks while focusing on the key work; the practice of training cadres and qualified personnel through various means; the practice that the party committees become the united, vigorous core of leadership; and the practice that the party committees are good at summing up their work by applying the Marxist law that "one divides into two," so as to strengthen the party's organization and ideological building.

Zhao Xinchu, member of the Central Advisory Committee, accompanied Comrade Wang Renzhong in the inspection tour. Also accompanying him was Lin Shaonan, vice chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee.

NEI MONGGOL CHAIRMAN ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK281230 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Text] Comrade Bu He [in his report to the regional meeting of banner and country CPC Committee secretaries] said that we should pay attention to the work in two fields when carrying our rural and pastoral party rectification.

First, we must basically estimate and correctly analyze the rural and pastoral situation, the work situation of the grass-roots party organizations, and the conditions of the broad masses of party members. During the past few years, the situations in many fields have been getting better and better year after year, thanks basically to the correct line, principles, and policies of the party. However, we must understand that it will be impossible for us to have this excellent situation without the concerted efforts of the broad masses of the people under the leadership of the 340,000 party members of the 1,600 grass-roots party committees and 15,000 party branches. The party's fighting power has been ceaselessly enhanced. Only a few grass-roots party organizations lack fighting force or are in a state of paralysis or semiparalysis, and only a few party members have seriously violated the law and discipline. Problems existing in the grass-roots party organizations and among the party members were, for the most part, caused by lack of knowledge of, experience in, and methods for adapting to the demands of the new situation in carrying out reform and the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, and in developing the commodity economy. Therefore, we must enhance education.

Second, while comprehensively fulfilling the four tasks for party rectification, we should focus the rural and pastoral party rectification on the issue of how to make the grass-roots party organizations, the organizations of political power, the economic organizations, and grass-roots cadres adapt to the demands of the development of the commodity economy. This is a key point of the second-step rural and pastoral reform, as well as the main direction of attack in making comparisons and examinations, correcting mistakes, and conducting rectification in the course of the rural and pastoral party rectification.

In the course of party rectification, we should, first, conscientiously grasp the study of the documents on party rectification, particularly the party Constitution, and generally and extensively conduct education on the basic knowledge of the party and the basic purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly in order to further enhance party spirit among the broad masses of party members, upgrade their ideological awareness, and build closer relations between the cadres and the masses. Second, we should further consolidate and perfect the party organizations at the township, town, sumu, and village levels. Efforts must be made to define their duties and to set up, in a step-by-step manner, management systems suited to the demands of the two civilizations. Third, banners and counties should take charge of cultivating grass-roots cadres in groups and by stages in an effort to upgrade these cadres' ideological and practical levels. Through party rectification, the grass-roots party organizations should further bring their fighting forces into play, while the party members should bring their vanguard exemplary role into play. Through party rectification, the grass-roots party organizations and the broad masses of party members should be further aroused with enthusiasm for leading the masses to pursue wealth, and make efforts to promote the development of the second-step rural and pastoral reform and accelerate the two civilizations.

GNP SURVEY CONDUCTED IN TIANJIN MUNICIPALITY

[Text] Tianjin, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- The result of a general survey of the gross national product [guo min sheng chan zong zhi 0948 3046 3932 3934 4920 0237] in Tianjin Municipality was announced the other day.

The results of the general survey show: Tianjin Municipality's GNP in 1984 was 14,747 million yuan, of which 1,114 million was produced by primary industry, 9.61 billion by secondary industry, and 4,023 million by tertiary industry. The proportions of the three industries in the municipality's GNP were 7.5 percent, 65.2 percent, and 27.3 percent respectively.

Following Shanghai, Tianjian is the second municipality using the GNP index to appraise its economy. The fruits of labor in the primary, secondary, and tertiary industries can be shown completely by making such an appraisal, and this can provide reliable data for developing a strategy for economic development and making long- and middle-term development plans.

The general GNP survey shows Tianjin Municipality's basic economic conditions, including the following:

In terms of its permanent population, Tianjin Municipality's per-capita GNP was 1,868 yuan in 1984, ranking third among the major cities of the country, below that in Shangahi and Beijing.

In 1984, the municipality had 30,292 independent economic accounting units, and their total assets were 47 billion yuan, including 30.1 billion yuan worth of fixed assets. There were 4,774,000 people employed in the municipality at the end of 1984, and their distribution among the industries was: 1,258,000 people worked in primary industry, 2,316,000 in secondary industry, and 1.2 million in tertiary industry.

Domestic commerce, communications and transport, and banking have become the three mainstays of tertiary industry in Tianjin Municipality. The total output value produced by domestic commerce, communications and transport, and banking in the municipality in 1984 was 3,017 million yuan, accounting for three-fourths of the tertiary industry's output value as a whole. In tertiary industry, the average per-capita productivity of the banking and insurance institutions was more than 36,000 yuan, ranking first among all trades in the municipality.

The general survey showed quantitatively the importance of intellectual trades in Tianjin Municipality for the first time. At the end of 1984, 268,000 people were providing scientific and technological advice and technical services, or were engaged in scientific research, cultural and educational work, sports and public health, broadcasting, television, the press, publishing, or other intellectual trades, accounting for 22.4 percent of all the personnel employed by the tertiary industry in the municipality; the intellectual trades had 1.75 billion yuan worth of fixed assets, constituting 17.1 percent of tertiary industry's fixed assets as a whole. Of those engaged in intellectual trades, educators made up the majority, numbering more than 153,000. Such large-scale intellectual trades in Tianjin Municipality have provided important conditions for cultural development, technological progress, and the development of intellectual resources in the municipality.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY DISCUSSES CYL WORK

[Report on speech by Sun Weiben, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee, at a provincial CYL Committee work conference held on 6 January: "Attach Importance to CYL Work"]

[Text] The recent provincial CPC Committee work conference put forward a general guiding ideology for the work of the province for this year -- to conscientiously implement the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates, persistently promote the two civilizations simultaneously, uphold the strategic principle of "carrying out reform and technical transformation, opening to other provinces and foreign countries, and developing resources in order to make the country and the people prosper," work together in high spirits, and create a good beginning for the fulfillment of the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan. In order to implement this guiding ideology, it is necessary to arouse the enthusiasm of the people throughout the province. It is also necessary, no doubt, for CYL organizations at all levels throughout the province to lead the masses of CYL members and other young people and work in the vanguard. Efforts are needed with regard to two aspects in giving play to the role of young people and CYL organizations. First, young people and CYL organizations themselves should clearly understand their historical missions and the important responsbilities they are shouldering, and learn to focus their activities on the party's central work. Second, CPC committees at all levels should attach importance to and strengthen leadership over CYL organizations, and allow them to fully perform their functions. With regard to the first aspect, this conference has held fairly full discussions. What I would like to stress is the other aspect, that is, responsible comrades of CPC committees at all levels should attach importance to and strengthen their leadership over CYL work with the foresight and sagacity of communists. Attaching importance to something is an issue regarding understanding, and strengthening something is an issue regarding work. I will discuss them separately.

Why should we attach importance to CYL work? I think there are at least three reasons:

First, during protracted practice in revolutionary struggles, the party and the CYL have established inseparable flesh-and-blood relations, and attaching importance to the CYL has been our party's fine tradition for more than 60 years. The early-stage Chinese Socialist Youth League was established immediately after the establishment of the earliest communist group, and played an important role in establishing the party. After the founding of the party, the CYL always remained a close assistant and reliable reserve force of the party. When leading the revolution and construction, the party always paid close attention to the CYL's role and function as an assistant. The CYL also wrote brilliant chapters in carrying out the revolution and construction led by the party. The relations between the party and the CYL, established during protracted practice in revolutionary struggles, and the fine tradition of the party in attaching importance to CYL work should not weakened in the slightest in the new historical period, but should be inherited and developed more successfully.

Second, attaching importance to CYL work has been decided on by our party on the basis of its profound understanding of its own missions. Our party regards the realization of communism as its lofty ideal. However, this ideal is not to be realized by one or even several generations of people. It requires a long historical course, and the continuous arduous struggles of generations upon generations of people. This mandates that our party should always be geared to the future and to young people. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong said: "The world is yours, but it is also ours. In the final analysis, however, it is yours."

In this sense, whether or not a party organization or a leading person attaches importance to young people and the CYL organizations is an important criterion in judging whether or not the organization or person has strategic foresight and political sagacity, and whether or not the organization or person is mature.

Third, attaching importance to CYL work and the role of young people is also urgently necessary for our party in its endeavor to lead the people in building the two civilizations and fulfilling the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan. The National Conference of Party Delegates issued a great call for "working together for a splendid future," and defined the strategic goals of the "Seventh 5-year" Plan. The work conference held by the provincial CPC Committee also put forward the strategic ideas on the province's economic and social development for some time to come on the basis of the actual situation of the province. What should we rely on in order to realize these goals and ideas? Most importantly, we should rely on arousing the initiative of the people throughout the province, and in particular, on giving play to the role of young people. Among the population of more than 30 million in our province, 10.5 million are young people. How the role of this contingent of young people is developed decides, to a great extent, the features of Heilongjiang, and the development of our various undertakings and fulfillment of our various tasks.

From these reasons, we can see that, in every sense, young people and CYL work merit our great attention. However, we must not merely pay lip service to this, "acknowledging their importance verbally, putting them in the secondary position when doing work, and neglecting them when we are busy." We must show our attention with actual deeds.

The best manifestation of CPC committees' attention to CYL work is their conscientious efforts to strengthen leadership over it. Here, I would also like to stress three things.

First, strengthening leadership over CYL work means that we should understand CYL building as an organic component part of party building, and exert efforts to make CYL building successful. CPC committees at all levels should hold discussions on and inspections of CYL work at regular intervals; be good at guiding CYL organizations to "discuss major affairs, have a good grasp of the overall situation, and take good charge of their own work"; be good at indicating the orientation and putting forward work tasks to CYL work; and be good at helping CYL organizations solve major problems. They should resolutely support CYL organizations to carry out their work in a lively and creative manner based on the characteristics and needs of the masses of young people, and to fully perform their functions as a shock force and a bridge providing a link with the masses of young people. They should actively help CYL organizations to improve their systematic leadership, to consolidate and build grass-roots CYL organizations successfully in the course of party rectification, and to conscientiously change the situation in which the CYL organizations in some localities are lax and paralyzed. In our future inspection of grass-roots party building, we should take whether CYL work is vigorous as an important criterion.

Second, strengthening leadership over CYL work means that we should truly use the CYL as an assistant as stipulated in the party Constitution. It is stated in the party Constitution that the CYL is an assistant to the party. With regard to this issue, CYL organizations should study how to take the initiative in playing their role as an assistant, and CPC committees should also study how to give play to the role of CYL organizations as an assistant. At present, we should pay particular attention to two things: 1) CPC committees at the county level and below should earnestly implement the stipulation of the party Constitution that party-member cadres of the CYL may attend as observers the CPC Committee sessions and CPC Standing Committee session at the corresponding level so that these CYL cadres can understand the party's central tasks in a timely manner. 2) Attention should be paid to disseminating the heroic spirit of the party's revolutionary struggles among young comrades, passing on experience, giving help and setting an example to CYL cadres, and continuously enhancing their party spirit and idological and political consciousness. In this way, each and every CYL cadre will foster a communist world outlook, bear firmly in mind the purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly, carry forward the spirit of devotion, responsibility, and solid work, and successfully lead the entire CYL contingent.

Third,, strengthening leadership over CYL work means that we should mobilize the forces throughout society to show concern for the growth of young people. Youth work is a social undertaking with the CYL as its core, and youth education is an overall project that can be completed only with all the forces of society. CPC committees at all levels should strive to create, in their own localities, departments, or units, a common practice of showing concern for the growth of young people. They should put youth education high on their agenda, and organize and coordinate all departments and units to do solid and good things for young people. Literary and art, press, and education circles, as well as other fronts, should also adopt their special methods and make contributions to training a new generation of communist-mind people with ideals, morality, education, and a sense of discipline.

As long as CPC committees at all levels truly attach importance to it and strengthen leadership, CYL work will certainly become more vigorous, and all our undertakings will be all the more prosperous.

JILIN SECRETARY MEETS OUTSTANDING PARTY MEMBER

SK290532 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Excerpts] This afternoon, leading comrades of the provincial party and government, including Gao Di, Wang Xianjin, Wang Zhongyu, Hui Liangyu, Gao Wen, and Wang Jinshan, met with Comrade Zheng Changlu, an outstanding Communist Party member who had led the masses to become wealthy, at the meeting room of the auditorium of the provincial CPC Committee. Upon meeting with Zheng Changlu, Gao Di and other leading comrades shook hands with him. Comrades Gao Di and Wang Xianjin warmly held Zheng Changlu's hands and made him sit between them. They said to him sincerely that they were learning from him. Then they engaged in small talk about their work and talked very happily.

In their informal discussions, Gao Di and other leading comrades stressed again that to learn from Comrade Zheng Changlu, we should learn from his firm communist conviction, his lofty character of sparing no efforts to fight for the four modernizations construction and making contributions with untiring efforts, his overall point of view and broad state of mind of sharing the burdens of the state and helping the people to get over difficulties, and his outstanding qualities of working earnestly and carefully for the four modernizations.

Comrade Zhang Changlu said that he will continue to persist in reform, implement the specific measures with unceasing efforts this year, strive to do all things which should be done by a Communist Party member, and not let down the hopes of the party and the leading comrades at all levels.

Also present on the occasion were (Hu Yuxia), deputy secretary of the Changchun City CPC Committee, and the responsible comrades of the propaganda departments of the provincial and Changchun City CPC committees.

SHAANXI'S BAI JINIAN ON PROBLEMS IN PARTY WORK

HK190223 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Jan 86

[Exerpts] On the morning of 18 January, Comrade Bai Jinian met journalists covering the provincial conference of party delegates and spoke to them on three problems meriting attention in party work in the province.

He said: The first problem is organizational work. In the past few years the leadership groups of the party organizations at all levels have taken big strides in reducing the average age of their members. Large numbers of young cadres have taken up leading positions. The focus in organizational work should now be shifted to stepping up education and enhancing the quality of the cadre force.

He said that training cadres and improving cadre quality has become the key to the success or failure of socialist modernization. Correct policies cannot be implemented and fine ideas will be just empty talk unless we have large numbers of good quality cadres in all sectors. The party committees at all levels must regard training grass-roots cadres and strengthening grass-roots work as the cardinal link in party building during the next 2 or 3 years and get a really good grasp of it.

The second problem is that of carrying out work right down to the grass roots, with the whole party working to implement this. This should be a year in which our minds are emancipated still further and our economy develops still more. It should be a year of big improvement in leadership style and of putting all work on a sound basis. The provincial organs must take the lead in straightening out party style and spontaneously correct various unhealthy trends. They must set a good example for the whole province in improving efficiency, studying assiduously, strictly observing discipline, and strengthening party spirit.

The third problem Bai Jinian spoke on was that the party organizations and party-member cadres at all levels must have a pioneering spirit and be skillful, bold, and creative in work. Conservative thinking is a tremendous obstacle to social development. The conservative and backward mentality of looking to see whether higher authority has issued regulations and whether or not there are precedents to follow before doing anything, mechanically copying documents and passing them on, and regarding all new creations as heresy must be resolutely eradicated.

COMMENTARY CONDEMNS U.S. MILITARY AID TO MAINLAND

[Station commentary: "Playing With Fire"]

[Text] The U.S. State Department confirmed a couple of days ago that the U.S. Government is negotiating with Peking for the sale of U.S.-made radar and navigational electronics to help modernize Red China's F-8 jet fighters. The amount involved is reportedly to reach 500 million dollars. The impending arms deal comes close at the heels of two other developments: The transfer of U.S. nuclear technology to Red China under the recently approved nuclear agreement and a naval passing exercise in South China Sea. It signifies that the U.S. Government is playing the so-called China card with seriousness.

We have no idea how many other arms deals are being discussed between Peking and Washington. What is known is that the U.S. is ready to sell Communist China naval equipment as well as hardware for its ground troops.

It is a dangerous game that the U.S. is playing, because Washington obviously believes that Peking will use the U.S.-provided arms to fight the Soviets. Peking has given no such guarantee and will never do so, just as it has refused to give an ironclad guarantee not to use U.S.-supplied nuclear technology and material to help other nations developing nuclear weapons.

Red China would not lift a finger against the Soviets unless Russia attacks the Chinese mainland. Such a possibility does not exist, because Moscow is not stupid enough to bloody itself in a clash with an ideological ally for the benefit of the U.S. If the Soviets really wanted to invade the Chinese mainland, they would have done so before the U.S. moved into the picture.

It is even less likely for Communist China to pick up a fight with the Soviet Union, considering that Peking is even unable to teach Vietnam a lesson, and that the regime is mending fences with Moscow so as to win Soviet help to update its obsolete factories.

Considering the scope of U.S. arms sales to Peking, it would be decades away before the Chinese Communist Armed Forces can stand up against the Soviets. However, even limited U.S. military assistance is sufficient to make the Peking regime acquire air and sea capability to threaten its neighbors.

The Republic of China on Taiwan in particular feels the threat most acutely. Although Peking is talking about peaceful reunification, it has refused to rule out the use of force against Taiwan.

Peking's party chief Hu Yao-pang said several months ago that Red China would acquire the ability to invade Taiwan in 5 to 7 years. Teng Hsiao-ping even hinted at a naval blockade anytime. Under the circumstances, the Republic of China's need of more advanced air and naval weapons to maintain the balance of power in the Taiwan Straits has become more acute than ever. We hope that Washington will recognize the pressing need and act accordingly, while proceeding with caution about arming a future enemy.

LIEN HO PAO ON SALE OF U.S. FIGHTERS TO TAIWAN

[Editorial: "From the Soviet Union's Eastward Expansion to the Question of America's Selling New Military Aircraft to our Country"]

[Text] In studying how to enhance relations between the Republic of China and the United States or how to make a breakthrough in the current Sino-U.S. relations or, more specifically, how to obtain new U.S. weapons and military aircraft, some people suggested recently that we should exploit the situation of Soviet expansion in the western Pacific and its threat to the United States, and explain to the United States the strategic importance of Taiwan. They thought that in this way we could obtain due military aid from the United States as part of the overall U.S. strategy in the western Pacific.

This kind of suggestion is based on the fact that since the "17 August communique" in 1982, the United States has imposed qualitative and quantitative limitations on the sale of weapons to our country and has been reluctant to sell us new types of military aircraft. They thought that we must break this stalemate or otherwise the level of our arms and defensive capability would be adversely affected.

However, what is the practicability of this suggestion? We think that it is necessary to analyze and judge the merits of this suggestion. We shall discuss it first from the perspective of military sales to us.

As a matter of fact, F-16 fighters or similar fighters that we want are no longer the latest military aircraft as far as the United States itself is concerned. The United States has already supplied such fighters to its allies throughout the world in large quantities. In addition to its West European allies, those who received F-16 fighters include Israel, Saudi Arabia, Greece and Turkey in the Middle East. The United States has promised in principle to sell such aircraft to Jordan, pending formal approval by the Congress. In the Asian region, Japan, Korea and Pakistan have long had such aircraft. Thailand also received such aircraft recently. Now the United States has promised to sell such aircraft to Indonesia. Therefore, theoretically, the supply of F-16 fighters to our country by the United States should not pose any problem and is quite appropriate in view of the traditional relations between our two countries. Even the U.S. Congress and public opinion in the United States are in favor of supporting the U.S. Government in selling such aircraft to our country.

Nevertheless, the U.S. Government has for several years been reluctant to make any new decision on this matter and has been unwilling to sell any type of new military aircraft to our country. For a time, it was widely rumored that the United States would sell F5-G or F-15 fighters to our country but it did not become reality. Recently, some people have been saying that the United States will sell F-20 aircraft to us but this is still up in the air. U.S. difficulties and hesitation in selling us new types of military aircraft have mainly been due to the following two considerations: First, if the United States supplies us with a new type of military aircraft, the Chinese Communists will likely lodge a prompt protest. This will adversely influence their relations. The United States cannot tolerate this at a time when it is striving to expand relations with the Chinese Communists. Second, the U.S. policy toward the Taiwan Strait is to maintain a military balance and it is convinced that there is no need presently to supply our country with new types of military aircraft.

In the face of this difficult situation, people are offering various ideas. One idea is that we temporarily change our strategic concept. Instead of stressing our own needs, we can work for the interest of the overall U.S. strategy in the western Pacific and become a part of the U.S. strategic setup and work for the same great cause. In recent years, the Soviet Union has greatly expanded its influence in the western Pacific region.

In particular, it has obtained naval and air bases in Vietnam and stationed crack air and naval forces there. This has caused a great threat and annoyance to the United States and created difficulties for the U.S. position. Under such circumstances, if Taiwan -- which occupies an important strategic position in the western Pacific -- joins the United States in its overall strategy and shares the common task of containing the Soviet Union's expansion together with a number of other countries, everyone will benefit from this "cooperation." Under the major premise of jointly containing the Soviet Union, the United States will have a "proper reason" for selling all kinds of weapons to the Republic of China. The fulfillment of this joint task is a necessity and could easily result in a common understanding as a consequence.

However, in order to materialize this idea, the following three conditions must be met:

1. The U.S. containment of Soviet expansion in the western Pacific has the assistance of Japan and Korea in controlling the Tsugaru Strait and the Tsushima Strait in the north and has the assistance of Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia and Indonesia in controlling the Strait of Malacca and the Sidra Strait in the south (for this reason, the United States is planning to supply Indonesia with F-16 fighters). Then, will the United States still attach great importance to our strategic role in the Taiwan Strait and the Bashi Channel?

2. Under the major premise of jointly containing the Soviet Union, the United States may sell new military aircraft to us. However, the United States must first obtain an understanding from the Chinese Communists. This is apparently a very complicated matter. How can the United States solve all the disputes?

3. The current limitations on the United States regarding the sale of arms to Taiwan are based on the binding force of the "17 August communique." Can the United States remove such limitations if it supplies new types of military aircraft to us based on the need of joint efforts to contain the Soviet Union?

Therefore, the realization of this idea is still rather questionable despite its sound basis.

In short, in our opinion, the question of the United States selling us new types of military aircraft is not a question of our making demands or one of willingness or unwillingness on the part of the U.S. Administration. The main decisive factor is whether the military strength on both sides of the Taiwan strait can continue to maintain a balance.

Therefore, we are convinced that once the United States discovers a major improvement by the Chinese Communists in their military aircraft and combat effectiveness and their air superiority -- which threatens Taiwan's security -- the United States will naturally make efforts to raise the resistance strength of the Republic of China in order to maintain the military balance. It was reported that the United States has already sent a "Jian-8" fighter of the Chinese Communists back to the United States for study and is assessing the overall strength of the Chinese Communists. If the United States reaches a new assessment, it will soon supply our country with necessary new aircraft. This will be a necessary step based on U.S. policy.

DING LISONG DETAILS DIRECTION FOR SPECIAL ZONES

HK290725 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 26, 27 Jan 86 pp 1,2

["Special Interview" by reporter Kuang Yu: "Ding Lisong on the Direction for the Special Zones"]

[Text] [Editor's note] The national special economic zone conference has already concluded, but there are still repercussions and there is much conjecture among the people. Quite a few people are concerned about the following questions: What is the future direction for the Shenzhen special zone and Hainan Island; will the Shenzhen special zone's power be weakened; will the special zone administration line be given up in spite of its having been established; will the Shenzhen special zone become isolated from the world if its border and this line are both closed; how will the problem of "rushing to build guesthouses" that has cropped up in Shenzhen in the past few years be solved; and what has become of Lei Yu, former responsible person of Hainan Island, who was dismissed from office. This reporter has recently had an interview on these questions with Ding Lisong, deputy secretary general of the Guangdong provincial government office and director of the provincial special zone office. I have sorted out his answers to the questions as follow. [end editor's note]

Question: Some people believe that since the national special economic zone conference, Shenzhen's power, including the power to examine and approve contracts, has been reduced. Is this true?

No Change in the Limits of Authority To Examine and Approve Contracts

Answer: There has been no change in the power to examine and approve contracts, but the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is required to do the following: 1) before giving approval, it should report to the upper level and after giving approval, it should keep records in its files; and 2) the approval of relevant provincial and state departments is necessary when signing contracts concerning the domestic sale of products. This is mainly out of consideration for the state's macroeconomic control because the special zone is closely related to the hinterland. This is also a conclusion that we have drawn through summing up our experiences in opening up to the outside world in the past few years. Shenzhen should also subordinate itself to the interests of the country in totality and control the transference for sales of imported goods and light industrial products from it to the hinterland. However, allowance should be appropriately given for the sale of these goods within the special zone. This will be conducive to reducing the special zone's consumption of foreign exchange and enable it to spend more of its foreign exchange importing equipment and raw materials.

Entirely Opening the First Line Is Impractical

Question: The Shenzhen Special Economic Zone administration line will be formally put into operation in the first half of this year. What good measures do the authorities have to solve the problems related to "introduction from abroad and cooperation with the hinterland?"

Answer: We already have a new plan at present. The first line of the special zone (the border with Hong Kong) will continue to maintain the status quo rather than carrying out the original planned idea of entirely opening the first line and strictly controlling the second line (the border between the special zone and non-special-zone areas). The commodities that go across the line from the special zone to the hinterland will be taxed at a rate of 50 percent of the rate of tariff at national borders. The second line mainly performs the function of checking the goods that go across the line.

The current practice of hinterland people having to show border passes in entering the special zone will continue. This will facilitate not only contacts between the special zone and the hinterland, but also prevent the products of the special zone and the foreign goods imported by it, from flooding the hinterland market. Therefore, this practice will not yield any unfavorable impact on "introduction from abroad and cooperation with the hinterland."

For example, goods that are carried into the special zone from the hinterland and that have certificates attached with the source of origin, will not be checked at the second line. Only those goods carried from the special zone to the hinterland need be checked and strictly controlled.

Question: Who will be in charge of the second line? Will the depression in Shenzhen market be aggravated after the second line of the zone is established.

The Second Line Will Be Administrated by the Provincial Government

Answer: Trial administration of the second line for Shenzhen has been carried out for some time since last year and the line will soon be put into formal operation. In the future, the State Council will entrust it to the charge of Guangdong Province.

Shenzhen market will not be affected by the establishment and operation of the second line. In the future, we will not restrict the growth of the number of people who enter the special zone from the hinterland. If there is any impact on the Shenzhen market, it must be the impact of other factors for example, the extent of restriction on the commercial sector wholesale business in importing goods to the hinterland. However, in fact, the development of commerce in Shenzhen in the past failed by a large margin to be suitable for the development of the special zone. Quite a number of people believe that for some time to come, certain phenomena of depression are perhaps unavoidable in Shenzhen. However, as long as the special zone is determined to follow the path of developing its productive forces, when the number of factories and enterprises set up in the special zone increases, the contacts between it and the hinterland will intensify and this will promote market prosperity.

Question: Why is there no administration line in Zhuhai special zone near Macao or in Shantou special zone?

Answer: First, this is a conclusion drawn by summing up the establishment of the second line in Shenzhen special zone. The state's investment and daily expenditure is large when establishing a second line. Second, the original tentative idea was that the first line would be opened entirely while the second would be strictly controlled, but now this does not seem practical enough. Therefore, the idea has been put forth that in Zhuhai and Shantou no second line is to be established. However, this does not mean that we should not check or control the goods that are carried from the two special zones to the hinterland. The methods of checking and control in other special zones are the same as those in Shenzhen. Shantou and Zhuhai have adopted the method of sending customs staff to factories.

Question: Will the control of the second line in Shenzhen be favorable to investment by foreign businessmen?

Answer: I think that it is favorable rather than unfavorable. At least it can ensure the legitimate rights and interests of foreign businessmen in carrying out decent undertakings. Although approval has to be acquired before the products of enterprises with foreign capital can sell their products in our country, we have adopted some measures. For example, if the terms of sale, price and quality of their products are the same as the foreign goods that the hinterland imports, priority is to be given to allow the products of foreign capital to enter our domestic market. We call this "substituting home-produced goods for imported goods."

Will Shenzhen Have More Difficulties in the Future?

Question: Will it be more difficult for Shenzhen, as opposed to other special zones, to transform into an externally-oriented economy with industry as the core?

Answer: For all the special zones, we have a general requirement, which asks them to grasp their economic results, improve their level, and strive to develop externally-oriented enterprises. Over the past few years, the Shenzhen special zone has concentrated its strength on its capital construction and created a satisfactory investment environment. At the same time, it has also conscientiously grasped the work of introduction from abroad and cooperation at home. Various central industrial departments and some provinces and cities have already established a number of enterprises, and a large number of enterprises are being established. This is the foundation for "introduction from abroad." I believe that with this foundation, it is not as difficult as is imagined to develop externally-oriented enterprises in Shenzhen. The crux of the matter is that those who work in the special zone should overcome the difficulties in a down-to-the-earth manner and try to develop externally-oriented enterprises.

The Practice of "Rushing To Build Guesthouses" Should Be Stopped

Question: Over the past years, there has been a "rush in building guesthouses," and it seems the market is now saturated. Have the authorities noticed this extreme tendency?

Answer: There has been excessive construction of guesthouses not only in Shenzhen but also in Zhuhai. The rate of occupancy in some guesthouses makes them unprofitable. The two special zones have already paid attention to organizing sources of travelers from home and abroad and at the same time are developing some recreational sites with small investment to attract tourists.

It is also necessary to suspend or delay the construction of a number of guesthouses and comprehensive buildings that hinterland areas are building in the special zones.

What Should Be Done for Hainan Island in the Future?

Question: Since the emergence of the "Hainan Island automobile resale incident," the investment confidence of foreign businessmen seems to have been affected. Have the authorities taken any remedial measures?

Answer: It is a pity that this incident has smeared China's image in opening up to the outside world. However, the CPC Central Committee has not changed the principles and policies toward the opening up of Hainan Island. The various central departments will continue to support Hainan Island according to the previously formulated plans, including those related to the island's port, railway and energy development. Hainan Island's development should be focused on exploiting tropical, aquatic, and mineral resources, and it is expected that there will be utilization of natural gas in the future. Recently, the state stressed vigorously developing tourism. Sanya in the south of Hainan Island is a winter tourist city. As long as the people there correctly implement the central authorities' principles, and as long as they step up their work to create a satisfactory investment environment, the island will continue to be very attractive to Hong Kong, Macao and foreign countries.

Question: What is the situation like on Hainan Island now?

Answer: An internal consolidation is being carried out there now. At the same time, the island is reformulating its economic development plan and focusing on using local resources in introducing foreign technology and opening up to the outside world.

The island should also develop cooperation at home in order to introduce the technological force and skilled workers from the hinterland to the technical contingent on Hainan Island.

Lei Yu Is Working as an Official in Conghua County

Question: It is said that Lei Yu, former responsible person on Hainan Island, is now working as an official in Conghua County. Is this true?

Answer: He is now deputy secretary of Conghua County CPC Committee.

Question: The new Shenzhen-Luohu Joint Customs Building will be purchased by the state. What is your opinion on this?

Answer: This building involves many complicated problems. Of course, the state should manage it. As for ownership over the building, negotiation is under way.

Question: According to foreign news agency reports, Deng Xiaoping has recently been to Shenzhen. What is his view of the special zone?

Answer: As far as I know, from last year to the beginning of this month, Chairman Deng did not visit Shenzhen.

INTERVIEW WITH SHENZHEN'S LI HAO, ZOU ERKANG

HK270759 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 160, 16 Jan 86 pp 6-9

[Report by Li Kuo-chiang: "Shenzhen Mayor Li Hao Exclusively Interviewed by This Magazine's Reporter" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] WILL CHINA'S POLICY TOWARD THE SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES CHANGE DRASTICALLY?

What course will Shenzhen follow? Is China now "tightening its policies? Will China's opening up policy change? These are the questions that those who take great interest in China's affairs in other countries and those who do business with China are paying close attention to.

Just as the new year rang in, the 10-day long work conference on the special economic zones ended on 5 January. Attending the meeting were the governors and CPC Committee secretaries of Guangdong and Fujian Provinces, and responsible persons of the 4 special economic zones and the 29 departments and committees of the State Council. It has been learned that the meeting discussed the strong and weak points of the special economic zones, stressed the importance of developing the export-oriented economy, and called for "attaining a yet higher goal." However, what on earth is the inside story of the meeting? Is there anything special that caused the meeting to be held at this moment? Did the meeting work out any new plans for the special economic zones? And will any changes take place in these zones? Obviously, vast numbers of our readers are interested in these questions.

WHAT ON EARTH IS THE INSIDE STORY OF THE MEETING?

The contents of the work conference on the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone was not further disclosed. Therefore, we had no alternative but to interview authoritative persons who attended the meeting, if we wanted to know about the developments in Shenzhen and the new trends in China.

So we decided to interview Shenzhen Mayor Li Hao and General Secretary of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone Zou Erkang. We hoped we could find out about the whole situation of the meeting from them and lose no time in reporting to our readers.

Early on the morning of 7 January 1986, the temperature dropped to 9 degrees centigrade. Accompanied by Li Yizhong, head of a certain department of Shenzhen City, Li Yuechan, our assistant editor, and I drove from Kowloon and crossed the border at Wenjingdu. It was still early in the morning when we reached Shenzhen.

QIAN JIAJU'S WIFE'S HANDBAG WAS SNATCHED

In the Shenzhen City government building, Lu Zufa, deputy general secretary of Shenzhen City and chairman of the city's economic societies, and Qiu Junyao, deputy director of the Research Office of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, gave us a brief account of the recent situation in Shenzhen. Referring to public security and criminal activities in Shenzhen, they quoted a case which "interested" us, saying that one day when the wife of Qian Jiaju, well-known Chinese economist whom we also knew, was shopping in the streets, her head was suddenly covered by a towel and her handbag was snatched. That handbag contained foreign currencies including Hong Kong dollars, deutschemarks, and greenbacks. This was money given to her by Lao She's wife, Hu Jiqing, to buy something for her children. Lu Zufa said that at 2300 that day, the Shenzhen Public Security Bureau found clues to solve the case and the criminal was arrested at Taiping town, Dongguan County at 0030 the next day. The handbag was returned to the owner in good condition. The criminal came from Guangxi. He pointed out: Generally speaking, public order in Shenzhen is good and the crime rate is not too high. Seventy percent of the criminals are from other parts of the country, 20 percent come from Hong Kong, and only 10 percent are local residents.

LI HAO AND ZOU ERKANG ARE INTERVIEWED

At 0900 on 8 January, we met Li Hao, vice governor of Guangdong Province and mayor of Shenzhen, and Zou Erkang, a member of the Shenzhen City CPC Committee Standing Committee and chief information spokesman of Shenzhen at the city's government building. The interview covered a wide range of topics. All answers to our questions were candid and concrete. In the words of Zou Erkang, they "did not evade" any questions fired at them.

Reporter: Was there any special purpose for China holding such a large-scale meeting on the work of the special economic zones?

Li Hao: The meeting was very important and timely and very good as well. In the past few years, the central authorities have held a meeting of Guangdong and Fujian Provinces every year. To the best of my memory, such meetings were held yearly from 1979 to 1984. However, the recent meeting specially discussed the work of the special economic zones as a whole. So it was not a meeting of the two provinces but a meeting on the work of the special economic zones. It was a routine meeting (once a year) but it had something special. We say this important meeting, coming as the country completes the Sixth 5-Year Plan and starts the seventh, is different from the ordinary ones because we should "attain a yet higher goal" and develop an export-oriented economy. The meeting was attended by leaders and responsible persons of all departments and responsible persons of departments under the State Council, including those of the special economic zones. This indicates that the central authorities take very seriously the work of the special economic zones and have a deeper understanding of the role of these zones in our "four modernizations." Since this is so, the central authorities have to help sum up experiences, analyze the current situation, identify and tackle problems early, and give necessary support and cooperation. If the work of the special economic zones was not important, the central authorities would not have done this.

LI HAO SAYS: THE MEETING SOLVED PROBLEMS MORE CONSTRUCTIVELY THAN I EXPECTED

Reporter: How did the meeting on the work of the special economic zones go?

Li Hao: State Councilor Gu Mu himself presided over the meeting and the atmosphere was lively throughout. Participants in the meeting definitely affirmed the achievements made by the special economic zones in the past few years; analyzed outstanding problems, difficulties, and contradictions realistically; and achieved unity of thinking about things to be done in the future. All the central departments concerned have had a better understanding of some problems related to their policy-making and daily work. The meeting solved many problems more constructively than I expected. All this will bring about a great advance in the work of the special economic zones. Of course, we cannot say that all problems have been resolved, but we have made headway on most of the major issues. For example, the central authorities have realistically considered our problem of having insufficient loans after they tightened macroeconomic control. This shows that the central authorities support the special economic zones. I think that our chief information spokesman, Zou Erkang, will have some points to add.

Zou Erkang: The recent meeting on the work of the special economic zones was the largest we have ever held. It was held in Shenzhen, not in Beijing as before. It lasted 10 days. We held meetings and discussions in the morning, and made visits and inspections and examined our work in the afternoon. We adopted the method of "dissecting a sparrow" in analyzing the work of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone because it is larger than the others and its work might exert great influence. Therefore, responsible persons of all departments came to the meeting to give their views and devise solutions to problems. We started building the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone 5 years ago, also in the first year of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. It has now rung in its sixth year and also entered the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. At this crucial moment, we put forward the guiding ideology of "attaining a yet higher goal." Over the past few years, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone has laid a foundation and achieved successes, but it also came across many new problems. What is the future objective of Shenzhen and what measures should be taken to attain the objectives? Some measures should be taken by Shenzhen itself and some should be adopted with the help of the province and the central authorities. We should pool the wisdom and efforts of everyone to make a success of the special economic zones, which in turn will be of service to the whole country. The central authorities are determined to run the special economic zones successfully. The meeting has made us much more confident. We know we still have difficulties but we have seen a bright future.

Repotter: What is the bright future?

Zou Erkang: This means that the meeting has set encouraging demands that the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone has to attain by 1990 or even by the end of this century.

Reporter: What are the demands that the zone has to fulfill by 1990?

IN BUILDING THE SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES, WE SHOULD NOT CONSIDER ONLY THESE ZONES BUT ALSO THE COUNTRY AS A WHOLE

Zou Erkang: As Gu Mu said, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone should attain the demands of laying stress on exports and earning more foreign exchange, giving full play to the role of "four windows" (the window of technology, the window of management, the window of knowledge, and the window of foreign policy) and the role of the economy "fanning out in two directions," and striking a balance between foreign exchange receipts and expenditures and even have a surplus.

Before 1990, we will strive to attain the demands of earning more foreign exchange through exports, the "four windows" and making the economy fan out in two directions, and we hope we will do better in some aspects. If we take the whole country into account, we should give full play to the role of the "four windows" and the role of "making the economy fan out in two directions." This will do much good for the whole country, and for the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone too. We must not fix our eyes only on the special economic zone, we should also look at the country as a whole as well as Hong Kong. In the words of Gu Mu, Hong Kong and Shenzhen supplement each other and they think and act in one and the same way.

Reporter: Will it be easy to attain the target of the "four windows" by 1990?

Zou Erkang: It will not be easy to reach the target. If we import ordinary technology alone and not advanced ones, we can hardly build the window of technology. Meanwhile, we must absorb good foreign experiences in management as much as we can to advance our "four modernizations" and stimulate reform in various field. Knowledge is the key to economic construction and we must introduce more useful knowledge to the whole country through the window of Shenzhen. In saying that "the economy fans out in two directions," we mean that it should fan out to other parts of our country and abroad as well. This also calls on us do a lot.

Reporter: Can you tell us the figures for the foreign exchange earned through exports in 1985? Can you estimate the figures for 1986 and even for 1990?

Zou Erkang: Gu Mu said that we expect that 60 percent of our manufactured goods will be exported by 1990. Now about 40 percent are exported. It is estimated that Shenzhen's industrial output value in 1985 amounted to about 2.5 billion yuan. Forty percent of it was export goods, and most of these goods were produced by enterprises built with foreign funds, Overseas Chinese capital, and Hong Kong capital.

GU MU SAYS: A CENTRAL DOCUMENT SHOULD BE ISSUED

Reporter: After the meeting, will any further measures be taken?

Zou Erkang: The measures are quite clear. Gu Mu said that we should prepare a document to submit to the central authorities for approval. Then we will do everything by the guidelines in the document. We may therefore say that this meeting was a very important one in the history of the special economic zones.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING IN THE HISTORY OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES

Li Hao: As a result, after the meeting, we have become more confident, have a clearer aim, and work in a more coordinated way. This will play a great role in the future work.

ZOU ERKANG WAS ALSO ONCE ASKED BY A FOREIGN EXCHANGE SPECULATOR: "DO YOU HAVE HONG KONG DOLLARS TO CHANGE?"

Reporter: What is the situation in the foreign exchange balance in Shenzhen?

Li Hao: As I wasn't in Shenzhen last year, maybe it is a little bit subjective to talk about it. During a certain period of 1984 and 1985, there was great demand for foreign exchange; and the black market speculation was so wild that as soon as you stepped out of the Shenzhen railroad station, you would be asked "Sir, do you have Hong Kong dollars to change?"

(Zou Erkang chipped in: I was also once asked by a foreign speculator: "Do you have Hong Kong dollars to change?") Because of the Hainan Island incident as well as the speculative buying of foreign exchange in Shenzhen, outsiders got the impression that Shenzhen was a place consuming foreign exchange. Was this right? To some extent, it was right. Why? At that time, as no control was exercised over the importing of some consumer goods and large commodities, the demand for foreign exchange exchange was very strong. At present, following the adoption of measures, the problem of an imbalance in foreign exchange is not as serious as what outsiders imagined; and after the elimination of the abnormal factors, the black market dealings in foreign exchange were greatly reduced. This is because the abnormal demands have decreased, management has been strengthened, and more importantly, the normal foreign exchange revenues and expenditures in Shenzhen have become balanced. I think that through our efforts we can strike the foreign exchange balance required by State Councilor Gu Mu before 1990. However, at present foreign exchange from trade still lags behind. This means that it is not enough just to rely on the 40 percent of export output value to import the means of production and equipment, including market materials. Nevertheless, we still have nontrade foreign exchange and profits from tourism and other aspects which have almost been balanced. I think that through our efforts, we may strike a balance within this year.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE IN SHENZHEN MAY STRIKE A BALANCE WITHIN THIS YEAR

Zou Erkang: The state does not subsidize us with much foreign exchange. What was the reason behind the great disturbance about foreign exchange not long ago? In the latter half of 1984 and the first half of 1985, the incident or reselling cars at a profit occurred in Hainan Island. As Hainan Island and some regions and units which went to Hainan Island to resell cars at a profit needed foreign exchange, they carried renminbi in gunnysacks to Shenzhen to rush to purchase Hong Kong dollars at very high prices. As long as there were Hong Kong dollars to be purchased, they were willing to offer any high price, at exchange rates of 100 Hong Kong dollars to 50, 60, 70, 80 or even more yuan. As a result, a stir was created immediately. At the beginning, as we did not pay enough attention to it, some units in Shenzhen were also involved. Later, after discovering the problem, we adopted stringent measures including criminal sanctions. Following the strict administrative measures enforced around the railway station and the square, the tumult basically subsided, and now the relatively normal exchange price has been maintained on the market. (Giu Junyao: The exchange rate at present is 100 Hong Kong dollars to 58 or 60 yuan.) In the future, we shall continue to adopt stringent administrative system against speculative buying.

Reporter: Is China going to move a number of enterprises in the interior which can earn foreign exchange through the export trade to Shenzhen in an effort to increase the export trade of Shenzhen?

WILL CHINA MOVE FACTORIES IN THE INTERIOR WHICH CAN EARN FOREIGN EXCHANGE THROUGH THE EXPORT TRADE TO SHENZHEN? WHY IS IT NECESSARY TO PROMOTE THE INTRODUCTION OF ADVANCED FOREIGN TECHNOLOGY AND STRENGTHEN COOPERATION WITH UNITS IN THE INTERIOR?

Li Hao: I think that I should explain the question of promoting the introduction of advanced foreign technology and strengthening cooperation with units in the interior. Some people think that it seems that we need a pot of flowers to decorate a flowerless room. This is a misunderstanding of us as well as the vitality of "promoting the introduction of advanced foreign technology and strengthening cooperation with units in the interior." Originally, Shenzhen was only a small town with a population of over 20,000 and without an industrial basis, not to mention technical forces.

Shenzhen owes its development to the role of the principle of "promoting the introduction of advanced foreign technology and strengthening cooperation with units in the interior." Being a special economic zone, the role of Shenzhen is not just to build a city, but to open up to the outside world, promote the building of the four modernizations in the interior, and build socialism with Chinese characteristics. To be specific, it should play the "role of four windows, introducing technology, management, knowledge and foreign policy." According to more complete official wording, it could be summarized as: a base for training qualified people, an experimental ground for reform, and a region for scientific and technological research at the appropriate time. These "three roles" do not purely benefit Shenzhen. To play the role of a window, we cannot only depend on the window itself, but also we should see whether the window can be opened both inwardly and outwardly. Nor should the base for training qualified people only meet the needs of one place, but rather it should train qualified people for the whole country. The same for its role as an experimental ground for reform. As long as Shenzhen's reform is significant for the whole country, it is an experimental ground. Therefore, the relations between Shenzhen and the rear are very close. In sum, Shenzhen's main role is to rely on and supplement the whole country. At present, after reaching a common understanding, people have all come to attach importance to and make use of this window, and we have also further clarified the need of relying on the interior. Recently, every ministry has sent people here to run enterprises and set up windows which means that they have a better understanding of Shenzhen. This is a good thing and will exert far-reaching influence in the future. By doing so, it does not mean that we do not need contacts with the outside world. But rather, we can expand our contacts with the Hong Kong and Macao markets as well as the international market.

By doing this, we can also further raise the efficiency and effectiveness of our cooperation with the outside world. Why was Shenzhen able to develop so rapidly over the last 5 years? The source of our strength lies exactly here. This point is very important. If the strength of Shenzhen is integrated with the strength of the interior and the outside world, we can quicken Shenzhen's economic development as well as its cultural and scientific and technological development. This is where our confidence is created.

Reporter: If the enterprises in the interior with which Shenzhen should strengthen its cooperation are moved to Shenzhen, will production and wage costs be increased?

Li Hao: That is another question. In the future, Shenzhen should pay attention to the investment environment and bring the increase in some expenses and costs under control. We should always attach importance to these, as in the many lessons from other countries, such as Singapore, the West European countries, and so on. The West European countries have done too many welfare things. Singapore's recent economic difficulties are due to two causes: First, public welfare was overemphasized; and second, there was a lack of research and development capability. At present, Singapore has adopted many measures to solve this problem.

From now on, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone should also strive to raise production and work efficiency. Various expenses should be increased in a planned way and along with the increase in labor productivity. Otherwise, we shall lose our superiority and competitiveness.

Reporter: What do you mean by saying various expenses?

Li Hao: I mean wages, welfare expenses, land fees, and all the other expenses.

Reporter: Will the morale of the workers and staff be affected by this change?

Li Hao: Though I do not worship Japan, I think that Japan has something worthy of being studied. According to some statistics in their weekly work hours, industries spirit, and work efficiency, in terms of the proportion of labor productivity to wages and welfare facilities, Japan only accounts for one-half of that of the United States, while their wage levels are close to those of the United States and their work efficiency is very high. Therefore, we should not compare things only in terms of wage levels. We should judge things by work efficiency, because it is justifiable to get high wages for high labor efficiency.

As Zou Erkang said just now, we are not expanding Shenzhen's exports at the expense of the interior's exports. Moving the export factories in the interior to Shenzhen, does not mean that the interior will lose all these factories, but rather, that Shenzhen and the interior will cooperate and integrate their information, strength, and some capital, equipment, and so on, which will not harm the interior but only draw advantages to it. Therefore, this cooperation is mutually beneficial. Beside the economic benefits derived from it, the most important is that we can learn advanced management methods and technologies, while technical personnel can be trained.

Zou Erkang: As our country's technology still lags behind that of the advanced countries, it is necessary to carry out the modernization drive. Even after the factories in the interior are moved to Shenzhen, the window still belongs to China.

Reporter: So far, what factories and enterprises are going to move to Shenzhen?

Li Hao: Zou Erkang is more familiar with this. And he will give you a detailed briefing in a while.

THE FUTURE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN HONG KONG AND SHENZHEN

Reporter: How do you view the future relationship between Hong Kong and Shenzhen? How will Shenzhen cooperate with the industrial circles in Hong Kong while avoiding the sharp competition between them? How will Shenzhen shun the expansion of Hong Kong's backward industries?

Li Hao: Before I came to Shenzhen, I was very much concerned about the future relationship between Hong Kong and Shenzhen in Beijing. To make the work of Shenzhen a success, it is necessary to handle well three relations: First, to depend on the central authorities's policies which are generally clear and definite; second, to handle well relations with Guangdong Province; third, to handle well its relations with the outside world, in particular Hong Kong and Macao. It is imperative to strive to do some work, so as to truly do well the work of promoting the introduction of advanced foreign technology and strengthening cooperation with units in the interior. The decision on the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone involved this factor. Though I do not know much about things in Hong Kong and Macao, not to say specific things, I am very much concerned with them. I attach great importance to the West European countries and the United States, as they are technologically more open and have a better basis for cooperation with us. However, the first stop should be Hong Kong and Macao, as people who have come to Shenzhen to make investments and run factories are basically from Hong Kong and Macao. During the first few months of last year, there were many opinions about Shenzhen in Hong Kong, but most Hong Kong Chinese capital has still not been withdrawn.

At a meeting held last year, I talked about two objectives: first, to develop Shenzhen's outward-type economy and construct well the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, which is a task assigned to us by the central authorities as well as an important step in our four modernizations drive as a whole; second, to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability, which is also the objective of the CPC Central Committee as well as our task.

In handling our relations with Hong Kong well, we make our decisions based on attaining these two objectives.

On this note, our interview relating to the special economic zones work conference ended.

During the whole interview, we felt that Li Hao was cool-headed, analytical, and willing to listen to different opinions. Before we parted, I introduced Miss Li Yuechan, a colleague sharing the interview with me, to Mayor Li Hao, saying that "she has a masters degree from Hong Kong University. After graduation, she joined our publishing agency studying economic issues." Mayor Li smiled and said that she was welcome to work in Shenzhen. Although this was a joke, it could actually reflect his work style of not sticking to one pattern to employ people and his feeling of desperately seeking talented people for the special economic zone.

INTERNATIONAL DEFENSE EXHIBIT OPENS IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, January 28 (XINHUA) -- More than 160 manufacturing firms from around the world are displaying defense equipment at an exhibition which opened here today. [Tokyo KYODO in English at 1035 GMT on 28 January in a similar report adds: "On display were aircraft, missiles arms control systems, battle tanks, troops trucks and firearms, most of them mock-ups"]

Participating companies include Boeing, Bell Helicopter, MBB, Siemens, Marconi, GEC, Aerospatiale, and Daussault. The firms represent Austria, Canada, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Poland, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United States and Hong Kong. In addition to the exhibition, seminars on some 40 subjects will be held.

The show, the first of its kind ever held in China, was organized by China Promotion Ltd. Co. of Hong Kong. Minister of Ordnance Industry Zou Jiahua cut the ribbon at the opening ceremony. Also present were Hong Xuezhi, director of the General Logistics Department of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Jia Shi, chairman of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade; and senior officials from the Ministries of Aviation Industry, Astronautics and other departments. The exhibition will close on February 2.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS PERUVIAN, CONGOLESE ENVOYS

[Text] Beijing, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Roberto Villaran Koechlin, new Peruvian ambassador to China, and Jean Claude Ganga, the outgoing Congolese ambassador to China, on separate occasions here today.

SOVIET, ITALIAN COMMUNIST LEADERS HOLD TALKS

[Text] Moscow, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Communist Party leader Mikhail Gorbachev and the General Secretary of the Italian Communist Party Alessandro Natta held talks on international problems here yesterday and today. According to a TASS report, the talks were held in a "frank" and "sincere" atmosphere.

The report said that the two sides stressed the need to exert every effort to turn back the arms race, to prevent the militarization of outer space and to get concrete results in balanced and verified reduction of nuclear and conventional armaments. They also agreed on the need to reach a balance of military forces in Europe. The two party leaders also said that it would be useful to establish constructive relations in different areas between the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance and the European Economic Community. This would mean a considerable contribution to the development of the policy of cooperation in Europe. Both sides agreed that the development of relations between the two parties would also promote better relations between the two countries.

At a dinner given by Gorbachev in honour of the Italian Communist Party general secretary today, Gorbachev said: "We should look ahead into the future, taking along into it only what has stood the test of the times and leaving behind without regret what stands in the way of more concerted and efficient work. It is from this assumption that the CPSU proceeds".

He continued: "There remain differences between our parties in the evaluation of various problems, events and facts. This is natural. And this makes fraternal dialogue between the CPSU and the Italian Communist Party, between communist parties in general all the more valuable and necessary."

GATT BEGINS PREPARATIONS FOR WORLD TRADE TALKS

[Text] Geneva, January 27 (XINHUA) -- A preparatory committee of the 90-member General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) began work here Monday on a proposed new round of world trade negotiations that may begin later this year. Seventy of the GATT members attended Monday's meeting, which is to work out recommendations for the negotiations to be submitted to a GATT ministerial meeting scheduled for September.

Although most of the members agreed on the need for a new round of trade negotiations, the agenda for the negotiations has been an issue of controversy. One of the main obstacles is whether to include service sectors in the negotiations. The United States and other industrialized countries want the talks to cover the service sector, but some developing nations including Brazil and India, are opposed. No formal decision was made at Monday's meeting.

The latest round of world trade talks under GATT's auspices was held in Tokyo in 1982. China has not participated in GATT since 1950 but it has been increasingly taking part in GATT activities in recent years. GATT members now account for nearly all world trade with China. Earlier this month, when GATT Director General Arthur Dundel was in Beijing, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang told him that China hopes to resume its GATT membership.

U.S., USSR, JAPAN SIGN AIR SAFETY ACCORD

[Text] Tokyo, January 29 (XINHUA) -- The pact signed by Japan, the United States and the Soviet Union on ensuring the safety of civil aviation over the northern Pacific went into effect today, Japanese KYODO NEWS SERVICE reported. Under the pact, a communication network involving three air traffic control centers to be installed in Tokyo, Khabarovsk in the Soviet Far East and Anchorage, Alaska will be set up to avoid a repetition of the 1983 Soviet downing of a South Korean airliner in a tragedy that killed all the 269 people on board.

The accord calls for precautionary measures against such an incident to be implemented by the end of August. The accord was signed in Washington on November 19 last year after a series of discussions by the three countries in Tokyo, Washington, and Moscow.

CLOTHING COMPANY OPENS OFFICE IN SHANGHAI

[Text] Shanghai, January 30 (XINHUA) -- Dorden Far East, a branch of Lloyd Williams, a U.S. women's garment manufacturer with annual sales of 100 million U.S. dollars, opened its Shanghai office today. Although their high quality of work and low labor costs have made Shanghai's silk factories a source of imports for at least 10 U.S. clothing companies, Lloyd Williams is only the second to open an office here, following Liz Claiborne, another major U.S. maker of women's clothes.

According to Liu Xinghua, manager of the local operations for Lloyd Williams, 60 percent of the company's production is now done by 11 factories in Shanghai. Shanghai's trade with Lloyd Williams was 10 million dollars last year, he said. "I expect it to reach 15-20 million dollars this year." The company's embroidered silk and polyester imitation silk shirts have "fascinated women in the states," Liu said. Products of the Shanghai venture, which tend to be sold in high-priced stores, are being sent to Canada and Japan as well as to the United States, Liu said, He said Lloyd Williams has agreed to train senior fashion designers in Shanghai.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT GIVES TOP PRIORITY TO SDI

[Text] Washington January 29 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, in his latest long-range planning directive to the military, has raised the star wars program to the "highest priority" among the Pentagon programs, AP reported today quoting Pentagon officials. The defense guidance, signed by Weinberger on Dec. 31, 1985, is a secret document. But several of Weinberger's top deputies, including Under Secretary of Defense Fred Ikle, confirmed details of the directive. "The Pentagon's willingness to talk about the directive apparently was an effort to reemphasize Reagan's commitment to the star wars plan in the face of Soviet demands that the program be scrapped", the AP report said.

The guidance is the basic document used by the military services in devising their long range programs. Since Weinberger issued his first defense guidance in 1981, the top priority has been assigned to what is known as strategic modernization in the production of modern nuclear weapons such as the MX missiles and the B-1 bomber. The Dec. 31 guidance document maintains that emphasis, but adds SDI at the same level. "The highest priority is assigned to the President's strategic force modernization program...SDI (rpt SDI) shares this priority", the document says. In the last guidance document, issued in April 1985, Weinberger did not rank the star wars plan among the Pentagon's top priorities, although he wrote that the Pentagon would actively carry on its research program. The star wars program, known formally as Strategic Defense Initiative, or SDI, will receive 2.75 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1986.

SHULTZ VOICES SUPPORT FOR NICARAGUAN CONTRAS

[Text] Washington, January 28 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz today voiced his support to the program by the Nicaraguan anti-government forces to remove the present legal government in Nicaragua.

Soon after meeting with three leaders of the United Nicaraguan Opposition this afternoon, Shultz issued a statement saying that the statement by the United Nicaraguan Opposition released last week in Caracas is a program very much in keeping with the so-called "democratic trend" which the U.S. Government "strongly supports." One State Department official said that the Reagan administration is going to persuade Congress to provide the Nicaraguan anti-government forces with up to 130 million dollars a year, with 100 million dollars in military aid, and the rest in "non-lethal" assistance. Last year, the United States only provided 27 million dollars to the Nicaraguan rebels.

CLUES SOUGHT IN CHALLENGER EXPLOSION

[Text] Washington, January 29 (XINHUA) -- U.S. experts are now searching for clues to the cause of Tuesday's explosion aboard space shuttle Challenger and the death of seven people in the world's worst space disaster. However, it is perhaps the most difficult problem to solve. An investigation team held its first meeting today to start the long inquiry into the explosion of the 1.2-billion-dollar shuttle.

Since yesterday, eight ships, including four Coast Guard cutters, and nine airplanes search the 50-by-100 mile rectangle area where Challenger's wreckage fell in the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. So far 600 pounds of metal and tiles from Challenger have been pulled from the Atlantic Ocean. The largest remnant was a chunk of metal 12 feet by 4 feet. Experts are now impounding every bit of data for clues to the death of five men and two women aboard the 100-ton shuttle. According to transcripts from the control center, before the explosion, no flaw had been found and the astronauts had no warning of impending explosion. The debris collected by this afternoon did not include clothing or personal effects of the seven crew.

The search for debris is still going on, and Coast Guard officials have warned people not to touch any wreckage they might find from the shuttle, because if anyone touched the green canister that fell from the shuttle, the person would die in two seconds. No one said what was in the canister. There were also several things aboard the Challenger that potentially could be deadly.

NASA officials refused to speculate on the possible cause of the explosion, and some said it might never be found. Experts estimated that a leak or crack in one of the shuttle's twin solid rockets was a possibility. Or a rupture in the shuttle's liquid fuel tank, a huge pressurized canister brimming with a half-million gallons of liquid hydrogen and oxygen. Some engineers speculated that metal fragments might have splintered off the giant turbines, or pumps, that drive the liquid gases to the shuttle's main engines, ultimately leading to the explosion. The investigation could take months. NASA announced there will be no more shuttle flights until investigating teams have made their report and corrective actions are taken.

The tragedy will slow down the U.S. space program, which has scheduled 15 shuttle flights this year. The loss of Challenger will have a "serious" impact on the U.S. Defense Department's space program, jeopardizing long-planned schedules for deployment of a host of spy, weather and navigational satellites, U.S. officials said, adding that experiments connecting with the "star wars" program could also be delayed. Although President Ronald Reagan vowed that the U.S. space program will go on after yesterday's tragedy, the disaster will sharpen the argument that the United States should abandon manned missions and instead send robots to explore the universe.

Meanwhile, NASA scheduled a memorial service at the Johnson Space Center in Houston for Friday. The agency said President Reagan and the First Lady will attend.

PRAVDA PROMISES 'APPROPRIATE RESPONSE' TO SDI

OW301736 Beijing XINHUA in English 1432 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Text] Moscow, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union will make "an appropriate and effective response" to the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "star wars" program, the Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA said today. The paper accused the U.S. Government of attempting to modify the military parity of the two superpowers and of seeking military superiority over the Soviet Union through its star wars program.

PRAVDA said in an editorial today that if the United States accepts the Soviet proposals on halving the Soviet and American nuclear weapons capable of reaching each other's territories, it would constitute an important step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. The newspaper urged Washington to respond positively to the new Soviet disarmament proposals put forward by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on January 15, saying that it is necessary to act concertedly and immediately to put an end to the arms race and to direct international developments onto the course of peaceful progress.

USSR, CUBA REAFFIRM SUPPORT FOR ANGOLA

[Text] Moscow, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union, Angola and Cuba discussed here on January 27 the situation in southern Africa, especially that in Angola, according to a TASS report this evening. The report said that the three sides firmly opposed linking the measures for disarmament with the settlement of the regional conflicts and opposed the U.S. attempt to use the regional conflicts for interference in the internal affairs of soverign states and aggravate East-West confrontation. They condemned the South African regime for stepping up its suppression at home and carrying on aggression against neighboring countries. They also denounced the United States for meddling in the internal affairs of Angola by increasing support for the National Union for Total Independence of Angola (UNITA).

The Soviet Union and Cuba reaffirmed their respect for their treaties with Angola and said they would resolutely stop aggressive encroachments on the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola. The three sides emphasized that the situation could be improved and peace attained in southern Africa only if readiness is displayed by the Pretoria regime and its supporter, the United States, to heed the interests of Angola and the Namibian people and recognize the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) as the sole and legitimate representative of the Namibian people.

GUOJI SHANGBAO DISCUSSES SINO-JAPANESE TRADE

HK300729 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese No 80, 13 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Zhang Xiaomin: "Sino-Japanese Trade: The Present and the Future"]

[Text] In 1985, Japan's exports increased over 1984, while its imports decreased. According to the Japanese Ministry of Finance, between January and November 1985, Japan had a $39.5 billion balance of trade surplus. This tremendous surplus has caused Japan further trade difficulties with the rest of the world. In the new year, friction between Japan and its major world trading partners will further intensify. How to ease the friction has become the most important problem for Japan in developing its foreign trade.

The momentum of rapid growth in Japan's exports to China did not weaken in 1985. The volume of exports to China in the second and third quarters was double that in the same period in 1984. The largest margin of increase occurred in machinery products. In the first 10 months of 1985, Japan's exports of machinery products to China increased by 88 percent over the same period in 1984. The value totaled $5.977 billion, accounting for 57.7 percent of total Japanese exports to China. Commodities that increased by a comparatively large margin were: cars, trucks, ships, scientific apparatus and steel products. In 1985, Japan's export of electrical home appliances was still on the rise. Between January and October, export of TV sets grew 2.2 times over the same period in 1984, refrigerators by 1.6 times, and washing machines by 1.7 times. At the same time, China increased imports of chemical fertilizer and organic chemical industrial products from Japan. Chemical industrial products increased by 26.9 percent over 1984, and chemical fiber and its products by 30 percent.

China's exports to Japan were affected by a general drop in prices on the international commodity market in 1985. With some exceptions the majority of commodities exported in large quantity showed a decrease in volume as well as in money realized compared to the same period in 1984. For example, in the first 10 months of 1985, oil exports were reduced by 9.4 percent, coal by 8.5 percent, chestnuts by 9.6 percent, peanuts by 25.9 percent, and prawns by 18.2 percent over the same period in 1984. The main commodities in which Japan increased its imports from China were: maize, cotton, cotton fabric, raw silk, carpets, garments, rabbit hair, books and paintings. Particularly worth mentioning is maize. China resumed its export of maize to Japan in 1984. More than 200 million tons of maize was exported to Japan in the first 10 months of 1985, more than 20 times that of the same period in 1984. This accounted for 5.4 percent of China's total exports to Japan, and it has become another commodity in the large quantity export category.

To sum up, Japan increased its exports to China by a large margin in 1985, while the growth in China's exports to Japan slowed. Hence the drastic increase in China's trade deficit. Between January and November, China's trade deficit with Japan was $5.435 billion, an increase of nearly 10 times that of the same period in 1984. This has become a problem that should not be neglected in Sino-Japanese trade.

How to eliminate trade deficits and maintain the balanced development of Sino-Japanese trade has become an important topic for developing Sino-Japanese economic and trade relations. For this, the departments concerned in China must adopt an active attitude, work hard to expand exports and to strengthen China's capability of creating foreign exchange in its exports to Japan.

Based on an analysis of the conditions of Sino-Japanese trade in 1985, we find the following existing problems must be solved if China is to expand its exports to Japan:

First, of China's commodity mix in its exports to Japan, more than 50 percent is fuel, 20 percent agricultural and sideline products, and 15 percent textile products. Thus we can see that promoting exports of primary products in large quantities to Japan is still the key to increasing exports. Oil is one of the items China exports in large volume to Japan. However, it accounts for only about five percent of the total volume of oil Japan imports at present, and we can still tap potential in this respect. In January 1986, Japan is to implement a liberalization of oil product imports. China should grasp this favorable chance, make full use of existing refinery equipment and capacity, and process semi-finished oil products for export to Japan, upgrading the additional value of the exports. In recent years, Chinese maize has been exported to Japan in large volume. It is extremely necessary to stabilize its supply, and to guard against any drastic rise or fall.

Second, upgrading the quality of export commodities, and safeguarding a good reputation. In 1985, the commodities China exported to Japan were universally upgraded in quality, a move welcomed by our Japanese clients. However, the quality of some commodities has declined, and this has seriously affected the image of Chinese commodities. The issue of quality has a direct bearing on whether Chinese commodities will stay in the Japanese market. It is necessary to set up healthy, complete and strict criteria for quality.

Third, in the first half of 1985, some units in China exported "parallel goods" to Japan through abnormal channels, harming normal trade between China and Japan, and Japanese businessmen have complained about it. In the latter half of the year, China strengthened its export controls, and implemented a system of export licenses, keeping "parallel goods" under control. We can see, therefore, that it is very important to handle exports to Japan in an organized way, orderly and steadily over a long period. China set up its Maize Export Association in 1985, with a view to strengthening control of maize exports, to the admiration of Japanese businessmen.

Fourth, developing exports of new varieties of commodities is an important channel in expanding China's exports to Japan. The number of potential new varieties of commodities in China is great. We can start with small commodities in this respect, such as small handicraft articles, sundry goods, and articles for everyday use. The Japanese love small Chinese commodities, because of their friendly feelings toward China. At the Tsukuba Fair and other exhibitions of Chinese products, such commodities were in demand and sold out.

And fifth, by the end of the year 2000, the world's demand for nonferrous metals and rare metals will increase to 40 times what it is today. China is one of the countries in the world that abounds in nonferrous metals, rare metals and other mineral resources. Japan is very active in developing China's mineral resources, and some of its enterprises are investigating in China, negotiating on matters of investment. The Chinese side can adopt various ways of using Japanese capital to develop its mineral resources for export. Besides, Japan has a great de and for China's building materials, such as stone and sand. China's relevant departments should actively develop investigation, research, and exploitation.

BEIJING LAO COMMENTS ON INDOCHINESE CONFERENCE

BK301140 Beijing International Service in Lao 1230 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Station commentator Ya Ming's commentary: "Comments on the Communique of the Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Three Indochinese Countries"]

[Text] On 23 and 24 January, Vietnam, Laos, and the Cambodian puppet administration convened the so-called conference of the foreign ministers of the three Indochinese countries in Vientiane. The communique of the conference pointed out that they wanted to settle the Cambodian problem through negotiations. Hanoi newspapers made much propaganda out of it, saying that the conference showed Vietnam's sincerity for peace. Nevertheless, if one closely studies the contents of the communique, one cannot help but wonder what part of the communique shows the sincerity for peace of the Vietnamese rulers. The communique of the conference of the foreign ministers of the three Indochinese countries merely repeats the shop-worn stand of Vietnam and contains nothing new.

An AFP report from Hanoi said that Western diplomats and observers in Hanoi are of the opinion that the communique issued at the conference shows no signs of compromise with regard to the settlement of the Cambodian problem, and does not create any new opportunity for the solution of the problem. The communique simply repeats in full the proposals outlined at a similar conference held in August last year: to hold negotiations with anyone except the Pol Pot group and other similar Cambodian organizations.

World public opinion is fully aware that the aim of the Vietnamese rulers in making such proposals in the past was to undermine the unity of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and to seek ways to legitimize the Heng Samrin puppet regime. However, the proposals have been rejected by the patriotic forces of the Samdech Sihanouk, Son Sann, and Khieu Samphan parties. And now, the Vietnamese rulers have once again tried to present their unreasonable proposals to the world. This move clearly shows that their aggressive nature remains unchanged.

The Cambodian problem arose from the aggression of Vietnam. The key to the settlement of the Cambodian problem rests with the resolutions adopted by the UN General Assembly, which demand that Vietnam totally and unconditionally withdraw its forces from Cambodia and that the Cambodian people be allowed to freely decide their political future without external interference. Without the first condition, which demands that the Vietnamese forces be withdrawn from Cambodia, no peaceful settlement of the Cambodian problem can be achieved. However, the communique of the conference sought to avoid this crucial issue. Even though the Vietnamese rulers have paid lip service to the peaceful settlement of the problem, they, in fact, remain steadfast about settling this problem through military means. The plan to withdraw Vietnamese forces from Cambodia by 1990, as mentioned in the communique, has been mapped out on the basis of wiping out the Cambodian resistance forces through military means within 5 years.

The lengthy occupation of Cambodia by the Vietnamese rulers has driven them into utter isolation. If the Vietnamese rulers genuinely want to extricate themselves from such a deadlock, there is only one way out -- to immediately withdraw the Vietnamese forces from Cambodia. If they fail to follow through with actual deeds in this direction but only resort to diplomatic tricks by calling for dialogues, they will never be able to improve their image.

Thai Minister Doubts Change

[Text] Bangkok, January 30 (XINHUA) -- Thai Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila said here today that the slightly lowered tone in the statement of the recent "Indochinese foreign ministers' meeting" does not prove any change in Vietnam's attitude towards the Kampuchean problem. Sitthi made the comment when he met with Austrian Foreign Minister Leopold Gratz, current chairman of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Sitthi said that Vietnam attempted to use that statement, which appeared to contain some compromise, to deceive the world opinion and sow discord among the member states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). He said that the forces of Democratic Kampuchea are putting up effective resistance in the interior of their country while Vietnam is encountering increasing difficulties. Soldiers of the puppet Heng Samrin regime do not want to die for the Vietnamese and Soviet aid to Vietnam is limited, Sitthi added.

Gratz expressed concern over the contradiction within the faction of Son Sann in the tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, and hoped that the contradiction would be solved soon. Sitthi told Gratz that the occurence of some contradiction is quite common and it could be solved. Sitthi requested Gratz to inform the Vietnamese leaders that Thailand works for peace in Southeast Asia and does not want to be Vietnam's enemy. Gratz arrived here on January 22. After concluding his visit to Thailand, he will visit Indonesia and Vietnam.

SIHANOUK PAYS TRIBUTE TO GUANGDONG'S ACHIEVEMENTS

[Text] Guangzhou, 29 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Prince N. Sihanouk, chairman of Democratic Kampuchea, said here this evening: "I have witnessed the great changes that have taken place in Guangdong Province. This tells us that China's current policies are wise."

He made these remarks at a farewell banquet given in his honor by Guangdong Governor Ye Xuanping. The banquet was given at the magnificent Garden Hotel. On the occasion, Prince Sihanouk expressed great satisfaction over his trip to Guangdong. Comparing with his visit in 1973, he said: "The changes taking place in Guangdong Province are amazing. The people's living standard has greatly improved. Particularly in the countryside, we saw beautiful farmland and orchards wherever we went." He also said that the achievements by China constitute strong support for the Cambodian people in their anti-Vietnamese struggle for national liberation.

Prince N. Sihanouk, his wife, and his entourage arrived in Guangdong on 15 January for a visit. During their stay they went to Guangzhou, Shenzhen, Zhuhai and Shunde Counties and paid a special visit to Zhongshan City and Cuixiang Village, where Dr Sun Yat-sen's former residence is located.

[Text] Beijing, January 30 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, ended his visit to China's Guangdong Province and flew back here today. The president arrived in Guangdong January 15 and visited many places of the province during his two-week stay there. Accompanying the president on the tour, Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Liu Shuqing and Ambassador of the Democratic Kampuchea to China Chan Youran also returned here today.

EVERBRIGHT'S HONG KONG PROJECTS DISCUSSED

[Report by reporters Ling Hongjun and Sheng Meilan: "Wang Guangying on Everbright Group's Development of Business"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 24 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- "It will soon be 3 years since I came here. I have run into more difficulties than I imagined, but the progress achieved has also been faster than I imagined." This was what Wang Guangying, head of the Everbright Group, said in summing up his 3 years in Hong Kong -- years packed with change. The other day, he talked with us at the office of the Hong Kong Far East Financial Center about the development of the Everbright Group's business operations.

He said that Everbright Group had completed transactions involving 26 projects -- bringing more than $600 million to the mainland. Forty percent of the transactions were handled through Hong Kong. "Large transactions like these have always been money losers at the start. But we have boasted of profits here from year to year! So Everbright has been the focus of everyone's attention and the subject of talk. This is nothing strange."

On the develop of the piece of land known as Admiralty II, Hong Kong, Wang Guangying said that the site for the Everbright Building had basically been completed and the whole project is to be finished in early 1988 at the latest. So saying, he asked someone to bring him the model of the building. How to describe this ingeniously designed 47-story building? After a little thought, he said that the best description was to call it a silver dragon hugging a column. He added that work had also started on another similar office building.

The Everbright Group has extended its business operations to northeast China. In cooperation with the Kajima Construction Company of Japan, it will invest in the building of port facilities in Dandong City. A relevant agreement is to be signed soon. It is planned to first build a landing stage-type wharf for 5,000-ton-class cargo vessels, with expansion to be carried out later. Given a modern wharf for Dandong, the strain on the currently overtaxed Dalian Harbor, the gateway to northeastern China, will be relieved.

The Waihai Bridge -- the last line spanning the Guangzhou-Zhuhai highway -- is a project involving cooperation between the Everbright Group and Kumagae of Japan, with an investment of $25 million. An iron bridge with a 1,400 meter span is to be completed in 2 years. Wang Guangying envisioned this project as a new record chalked up in the bridge-building history of China. Work has started on the project, with an official ceremony to be held soon.

Work is being carried out on the site for the 53-story Jingguang Center in Hujialou, east of Beijing. After completion, the Wangfujing Hotel, of a class surpassing five stars, will be one of the best in Beijing. The site for the rebuilt Heping Hotel has been completed. The whole project will be completed 2 years from now. For this reason, the well-known Jinyu Lane will be widened.

"Is your life in Hong Kong, or your life as vice mayor of Tianjin, more exacting?" Pointing to the flecks of white in his hair, Wang Guangying said: "In the past 2 years, we have not been free from setbacks. What we are involved in is of a pioneering and exploratory nature." Of the Everbright Group's 26 projects, he described only a few. In our opinion, this is enough to give us an idea of the whole situation.

EC BANS ARMS SALE TO NATIONS LINKED TO TERRORISM

[Text] Brussels, January 28 (XINHUA) -- The 12 European Community (EC) nations Monday pledged to ban arms sale to nations supporting terrorism but declined to join in the U.S. economic sanctions against Libya. In a statement issued after a one-day meeting, foreign ministers from the EC member nations said that they had "decided not to export arms or other military equipment to countries which are clearly implicated in supporting terrorism." The statement said: "The 12 EC countries condemn all forms of international terrorism." The statement said: "The 12 EC countries condemn all forms of international terrorism." The ministers also promised "to do everything within their power to avoid their nationals and industry seeking any commercial advantage in reaction to terrorist attacks and other terrorist activities."

U.S. President Ronald Reagan had appealed to Washington's Western allies to impose economic sanctions on Libya, which the United States accused of backing the terrorists' attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports on December 27, in which 20 people were killed. The EC nations told John Whitehead, U.S. deputy secretary of state, who recently visited some EC nations to win their support for the U.S. actions, that economic sanctions against Libya would be not be effective.

The ministers vowed to intensify security at airdromes, ports and railway stations and impose tighter controls on people entering or leaving EC nations to ward off possible terrorist attacks. The EC statement also expressed "strong concern" at the tensions developing in the Mediterranean since the United States began an aeronaval manoeuvre off the Libyan coast on January 24. It called for a peaceful resolution of the regional problems.

THATCHER NOT UNSCATHED BY WESTLAND 'STORM'

["News Analysis: Political Storm Over Westland Abates, but Impact Remains" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] London, January 29 (XINHUA) -- The political storm over Britain's financially-ailing Westland Helicopter Company has begun to abate after Parliament Monday defeated an opposition Labour Party motion to investigate the Government's handling of the Westland affair. However, the storm, the worst that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has weathered in her six and a half years in office, has already dealt severe blows to the ruling Conservatives and might affect its future, observers here said. On Monday, an emergency motion by the opposition Labour seeking full details of the background to a leak of a confidential ministerial letter on the Westland Helicopter Company was defeated with 379 against and 219 for it. The vote showed that almost all Conservative Parliament members rallied to Thatcher's defence.

The Westland affair surfaced on January 9, when Defence Secretary Michael Heseltine resigned, alleging that Thatcher and Trade and Industrial Minister Leon Brittan tried to stifle his campaign for a European consortium's take-over of Westland, the country's only helicopter maker. About two weeks after his resignation, Brittan, who Heseltine said had sided with Thatcher in favor of a rescue offer by the giant U.S. helicopter manufacturor Sikorsky, quit after being accused of leaking a ministerial confidential letter detrimental to Heseltine's campaign. Thatcher had since then been questioned whether she knew about the leak which was a violation of the Secrets Act and which was actually permitted by her own office.

Before Monday's vote, Thatcher insisted that she did not know about the leak until January 22, when she was informed by an investigative group. She claimed that the leak "stemmed from a genuine difference of understanding" between her office and the Trade Department. She said the Trade Department believed it had got "permission" to leak the letter while officials at her private office agreed that the news media could be informed about the letter, but not in the form of a leak.

During hours of debate, Brittan, a Thatcher loyalist, said he took full responsibility for the fact and the form of the leak and thereby fended off the charges of the opposition parties against Thatcher. Even Heseltine, who had launched a barage of charges against Thatcher and Brittan after his resignation, joined the chorus of support from conservative MPS for Thatcher's explanations, saying that Thatcher's "brave speech... has brought the politics of this affair to an end." With Conservatives temporarily united against the challenges of opposition parties, Thatcher has emerged from the Westland crisis, but not without wounds, observers said. The opposition parties who have compared Thatcher's handling of the Westland affair with the Watergate scandal still remain unconvinced about her explanation of the leak and will continue to embarrass the government at all available occasions. The Westland affair symptomized the dissatisfaction of some Conservatives with Thatcher's domination and encouraged them to promote rival Conservative nominees for the next general elections.

What appears to be the most severe blow to the Conservative Party, however, is the fall of its popularity caused by the Westland affair. In an opinion poll conducted before Monday's Parliament debate, Conservatives got 29.5 percent of public support, compared with 35 percent for the Social Democratic and Liberal alliance and 34 percent for the Labour Party. An opinion poll conducted on Tuesday by the British Broadcasting Company showed that the Conservatives were again in third place with 29 percent, behind the alliance with 35 percent and the Labour Party with 31 percent.

There was much talk last year that the Prime Minister was likely to call an early general election this fall amid the continuing surge of British economy and the implementation of a large scale tax cut. But the Conservatives hope to win an early third straight general election is certainly diminished by the fall of its popularity and economic uncertainties caused by the fall of North Sea oil price, observers said.

BARTER TRADE PAYMENTS PROTOCOL WITH CSSR SIGNED

OW261420 Beijing HINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1147 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] Prague, 22 Jan (XINHUA) -- The Harbin branch of the Bank of China signed a payments and accounts settlement protocol for local barter trade here this afternoon with the Czechoslovak Trade Bank. This is the first agreement signed between the two countries to solve bank account problems since some Chinese provinces and cities began to carry out barter trade with Czechoslovakia outside the government agreement. So far seven Chinese provinces and cities including Shanghai, Beijing, Heilongjiang, and Jiangsu have signed local barter trade agreements with Czechoslovakia. The protocol signed today will create favorable conditions for implementing these local barter trade agreements and for further promoting barter trade with Czechoslovakia in the future.

FRIENDSHIP ASSOCIATION FETES CSSR OFFICIAL

[Text] Beijing, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries hosted a dinner here today for Bohuslav Kucera, president of the Czechoslovak Association for International Relations. Kucera is also a vice-chairman of the Federal Assembly of Czechoslovakia.

Speaking at the dinner, Vice President Chu Tunan of the friendship association said that China and Czechoslovakia had carried out diversified exchanges in recent years. Cooperation between friendship organizations of the two countries had also been successful. He emphasized that developing the Sino-Czechoslovak friendship is in accord with the fundamental interests of the two peoples and also contributes to world peace. In his toast, Kucera expressed willingness to work for friendship as well as economic and technical cooperation between the two countries. Kucera arrived here this morning on a week-long visit to China as guest of the friendship association.

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER ON TIES WITH U.S., PRC

[Text] Warsaw, January 29 (XINHUA) -- It is possible for Poland to normalize relations with the United States and Poland has suggested to hold intergovernmental talks to review the entirety of matters between the two countries, said Polish Foreign Minister Marian Orzechowski here today.

Making a report on his country's foreign policy at a meeting of the parliament, the foreign minister said that on the Polish-U.S. relations, Poland "will not overlook even the slightest, single sign of goodwill, but it will also not fail to react to any gesture and step that would be unfriendly towards Poland." He said that Poland pays special attention to developing economic relations with Western countries. But, he added, the relations should be carried on without political restrictions.

The foreign minister said that "we hold that it is of importance to maintain relations with the People's Republic of China," and that "the cornerstone for our foreign policy has always lain and will lie in the friendship and complete corporation with the Soviet Union." He continued that Poland supports Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's new proposals on disarmaments and "will supplement them with its own views and initiatives." He said that the Soviet proposals "have expressed our desires and demands and reflected the most profound interest of our people." He pointed out that it is impossible to realize detente rapidly and the international tension is not easy to be got rid of.

UN REPRESENTATIVE CENSURES ISRAEL FOR DESECRATION

[Text] United Nations, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese people including its Moslems condemn the recent acts of provocation by the Israeli authorities against the Islamic holy places in Jerusalem, Ambassador Li Luye said here today.

The ambassador, China's permanent representative to the United Nations, made these remarks at this afternoon's Security Council meeting. The Council has met six times since January 21 at the request of the Arab countries to consider Israeli acts of desecration of the Al-Aqsa Mosque in the occupied city of Jerusalem. Referring to the "acts of deliberate provocation" by some members of the Israeli Knesset, certain government ministers and some extremists, Ambassador Li said that Chinese Moslems sympathize with, and understand, the sentiments of the Islamic peoples towards the Islamic holy sanctuaries in Jerusalem. He pointed out that the recent event was by no means an accidental and isolated incident. "It is in fact the continuation of a series of acts of sabotage and provocation for nearly 20 years in the past against the Islamic holy places in Jerusalem."

Reviewing the recent history of the region, the ambassador said that since 1967, the Israeli authorities have taken legislative and administrative measures which would result in a change of Jerusalem's status and lead eventually to the annexation of the city. The Chinese ambassador also recalled that since 1968, the Security Council has adopted nine successive resolutions, in which it stressed time and again that all such measures taken by Israel had no legal validity and asked Israel to cease all acts of this nature. However, he pointed out, Israel has refused to implement the U.N. resolutions. Instead, it has clung obdurately to their course and has created continuous tensions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

The ultimate solution of the Jerusalem question hinges on a comprehensive, fair and lasting settlement of the Middle East question, he said. To this end, he said, Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it has occupied, including Jerusalem, and the national rights of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries must be restored. Before that goal is achieved, he stated, Israel, as the occupying power, must strictly observe the principles of international law, particularly the relevant provisions contained in the Geneva Convention related to the protection of civilian persons in time of war. It must respect the basic rights of the indigenous Arab people, including their right to religious belief, and the ancient Islamic civilization.

XINHUA ASSESSES EUROPEAN TRIP BY ISRAEL'S PERES

["Round-up: Israeli Prime Minister's European Tour Gets Nowhere" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Israeli Prime Minister Shim'on Peres Thursday wound up his 11-day European tour in a bid to drum up support for his Middle-East peace formula, but his effort got nowhere. Peres toured the Netherlands, Britain and Federal Germany, but he mainly devoted his efforts to convince the British leaders who have strong ties with Jordan, of the formula. Outlining his position at the beginning of his visit on January 19, Peres said that he was ready to talk with a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation in a loose international framework, provided Jordanian King HUsayn selects West Bank mayors or Palestinian members of Jordan's Parliament as Palestinian representatives. But he refused to accept PLO members in the delegation.

He reportedly suggested an international conference lasting for a day or two, apparently for cosmetic purposes, and then bilateral talks dealing primarily with the status of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Other issues like the status of Jerusalem and the occupied Golan Heights would be left until later.

Peres' European diplomatic tour had the backing of the United States, whose government dispatched envoy Richard Murphy to London for an intensive round of shuttle diplomacy between Peres and Jordanian King Husayn, who had been in London just before Peres' arrival. To find a formula for peace talks acceptable to both Israel and the Arabs, Murphy held four long meetings with Peres in five days while shuttling between The Hague and London. No details of Murphy's meetings with Peres and Husayn are available yet, but observers say that the gap between the positions of the two remains wide.

Peres made it clear that there is an urgent need to get the peace process with Jordan moving, for he will hand over his premiership in October to foreign minister Yitzhaq Shamir, who leads the hard-line Likud Bloc that is opposed to territorial concessions to the Arabs. In view of what he has done during his 15-month premiership -- the troops withdrawal from Lebanon; a stabilized economy and improved relations with Egypt -- progress in the peace process might enable Peres to avoid a transfer of power by bringing down the coalition government and winning a new election, which would give him a full four-year term in office. Husayn reportedly believes that time is working against a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict as he considers it easier to negotiate with Peres than with Shamir. However, it is almost impossible for Husayn to go it alone. He needs to be flanked by Syria or the PLO, or preferably both. He also needs the framework of an international conference and the presence of the Soviet Union and the United States to guarantee fair play.

The idea of peace talks between Israel and a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation originated in an accord reached between Jordan and the PLO in February last year. But it had never been realized, because there were differences over the question of who should participate in the international talks and who would represent the Palestinians. The United States and Israel are opposed to the participation of the PLO unless the latter renounces violence and accepts U.N. Resolutions 243 and 338 that call for recognition of Israel's right to exist. But PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat does not agree with these conditions for his participation, while Syria, another major party to the conflict, is not ready to accept either of the international conference formulas. Syria reportedly holds that if there are any peace talks within an international framework, Syria and anti-'Arafat PLO factions should be present.

In his public statements made in The Hague, capital of the Netherlands, Peres delivered a message to the Soviet Union, which has shown some interest in the peace process, to the effect that any Soviet involvement in the peace process must be under the condition that it restores diplomatic relations with Israel which had been severed in 1967 after an Arab-Israeli war and eases emigration restrictions on Soviet Jews who want to move to Israel. In London, Peres persuaded Britain to make use of its good relations with King Husayn and the rest of the Arab world to bring about direct talks according to his formula. But there are reports that Peres has failed to get British leaders to shift their position on the Middle East. They believe that it is dangerous to negotiate a peace settlement in the absence of Syria and the PLO, the sole legal representative of the Palestinians supported by the Arabs and most of the world.

But Peres said he was expecting a "final approach" from Husayn who had met PLO leader 'Arafat in Amman in the past four days after Murphy's mediation effort. 'Arafat told Husayn that the PLO would endorse the U.N. resolutions recognizing Israel only when the United States had recognized the PLO as the sole legal representative of the Palestinians. So the ball is now in the American court. Observers do not expect a positive American response to the challenge. But without one, no bright prospects would be in sight for the peace process.

PLA'S HE QIZONG DISCUSSES REDUCTION WORK

OW301337 Beijing International Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Text] He Qizong, deputy chief of the General Staff of the PLA, said: The Chinese Army will continue to carry out the reduction-in-strength and reorganization this year. The main points of this year's Army reduction-in-strength and reorganization work will be implemented in military academies, the logistics system of the whole Army, and in People's Armed Forces departments at county level. Adjustment of high-level leading bodies was completed in the Chinese Army last year. A series of reforms such as the change from field army to group army, and the consolidation of several services, were also conducted.

The 43 year-old He Qizong took up his present post during that adjustment of high-level leading bodies. He is one of the youngest senior commanders in the Chinese Army. He told the reporter that the reduction of one million troops will also take place smoothly after the completion of those reforms. Referring to arms and equipment of the Chinese Army, he said: Weapons design and production for the Army have been greatly upgraded since 1979. The Army is using more computers. Arms and equipment are gradually updated. He said the arms and equipment of the Chinese Army should aim at the world's advanced level and high level scientific research for arms and equipment should be strengthened. He Qizong also talked about the fighting strength of the Chinese Army. He said: Compared with the Korean war in the 1950s, the fighting strength of the Chinese Army has markedly increased. It can be said that we will surely win a final victory if any country dares to wage an aggressive war against our country.

TRAINING OF DEMOBILIZED ARMY CADRES VIEWED

HK280305 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 p 21

[Article by Ding Shiyi: "An Important Strategic Task -- Jiao Shanmin on Preassignment Training of Demobilized Army Cadres"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee and the State Council have decided to reform the Army structure, to streamline and reorganize the Army, and to cut the Army by 1 million men. In the next few years a large number of cadres will leave the Army and work in civilian posts. What should we do to help the cadres transferred from the military to the socialist construction front adapt themselves to the new environment as quickly as possible and to perform their new tasks well? Bearing this question in mind, this reporter interviewed Jiao Shanmin, member of the work group under the State Council for the assignment of demobilized Army cadres and vice minister of labor and personnel.

The enlarged meeting of the Central Military Commission presided over by Comrade Deng Xiaoping in 1975 decided that the Army should be reorganized. After that, the State Council set up a work group for the assignment of demobilized Army cadres. Beginning in 1980, Jiao Shanmin was in charge of the work of assigning and training demobilized Army cadres. Some time ago he presided over a national work conference on the training of demobilized Army cadres. He told this reporter: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our country has entered a new period of socialist modernization. In an effort to achieve the four modernizations, we should train and bring up, through various channels, a contingent of cadres who are better educated and have both professional knowledge and managerial skills. Preassignment training of demobilized Army cadres is a new task in the new period. It is also a major reform in the assignment of demobilized Army cadres.

Comrade Jiao Shanmin said: As long ago as 1979, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out the necessity of holding training classes for cadres who leave the Army to work in civilian posts, so as to teach them various branches of knowledge, such as industry, finance, and trade, politics and law, and culture and education. He also gave specific instructions on the period, method and organizational form of training. Comrades Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Yu Qiuli, and Yang Dezhi also stressed on numerous occasions that demobilized Army cadres should be given preassignment training.

Jiao Shanmin said: In the spirit of the instructions of the central leading comrades, in 1981 we conducted 6 months of specialized training among more than 80,000 Army cadres transferred to political and legal fronts. We attained satisfactory results by adopting the method in which the Army retained overall responsibility and the local authorities provided training classes with teaching materials and personnel. This provided useful experience for the training of demobilized cadres on a large scale. In 1983 the work of training demobilized cadres was gradually implemented on a national scale. To date, 5 training centers for demobilized Army cadres have been set up and preparations are being made for the establishment of 12 others. There are more than 3,000 special training classes of all types. Almost 200,000 people have received various specialized training, accounting for more than 60 percent of the total number of demobilized cadres who should receive training.

In the course of the conversation, Jiao Shanmin took out a large parcel of documents. He said: Read this data. You can see from this data that the demobilized cadres have markedly improved their professional competence after receiving job-related training. In 1982, cadres transferred to political and legal fronts achieved outstanding success in cracking down on economic crimes and safeguarding public order. Many demobilized cadres succeeded in becoming key members in production and other work in a relatively short time. They have either been commended or placed in important positions.

Jiao Shanmin said: A gratifying situation has emerged in the placement of demobilized Army cadres. The various localities have accepted as many cadres as have been assigned by the central authorities and made good arrangements for their placement. A new situation has emerged whereby quite a few localities vie with one another in accepting tasks for the placement of demobilized cadres. All localities have accepted, according to the plan, their quotas of demobilized Army cadres scheduled for this year. This has been an unprecedentedly excellent situation in the placement of demobilized Army cadres since the fifties.

Jiao Shanmin said: In the past 2 years, the contents of specialized training have also constantly developed in line with the expanding scope of training. In 1983 most localities mainly ran comprehensive training classes. In 1984 training classes were divided according to different specialized subjects, such as industry, finance and trade, communications, banking, tax and insurance, administration of justice, public security, party and government administration, and culture and education. In the course of teaching practice, and curricula were properly adjusted in line with practical needs of demobilized Army cadres in order to conduct training in a systematic and specialized way. This practice is well received by the cadres being transferred to civilian work. Jiao Shanmin said: It now seems good to lengthen the period of training, originally fixed at half a year. Some training classes last 1 or 2 years. Efforts should be made to gradually turn training classes into schools. The demobilized Army cadres who have received training should attain the level of either a special secondary school and/or a university graduate. Training classes can be run in various ways. They can be run independently by the local authorities, jointly run by the Army and local authorities, or assigned to the existing universities, colleges, special secondary schools, party schools, and cadre schools.

At the end of his talk, Jiao Shanmin emphatically said: The Army is an important component of state power. Where there is an Army, there is transferrence to civilian work; those transferred to civilian work should be given training. Preassignment training will become a new system under which we arrange for the placement of demobilized Army cadres. For this reason, the training of demobilized Army cadres should be regarded as a long-term strategic task and not a makeshift measure. On no account should it be provided at the last moment. Even if, a number of years later, all Army cadres should be graduates of military academies with a special secondary school or university educational level, they should still receive specialized training when they are transferred to civilian work. This is because, with all their cultural and educational backgrounds. they have no professional knowledge and are not familiar with economic construction. They will face the problem of updating and improving their knowledge. Jiao Shanmin said that the better the training of demobilized Army cadres is conducted, the easier it will be for their placement and the more advantageous it will be for Army consolidation and building.

REGULATIONS SIMPLIFY VISITOR RECEPTION PROCEDURES

[Text] Beijing, 30 Jan (XINHUA) -- The General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have worked out, on 23 January, regulations to simplify reception of leading cadres at all levels on various tours. They have called on localities and departments to resolutely implement these regulations.

The General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council pointed out: In recent years, when leading cadres at all levels toured various localities, some places failed to earnestly implement the relevant regulations for reception work. Too many people were assigned to greet the guests, see them off, and accompany them on their tours. They entertained them too lavishly. Such practices foment extravagance, waste, and formalism and undermine relations between the party and the masses.

In order to amend this situation, the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have formulated, with the approval of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, regulations on receiving guests with the exception of foreign guests. The main points of these regulations are as follows:

-- It is necessary to abolish the welcoming and farewell ceremonies. When leading cadres at all levels visit various places, there is no need for the responsible comrades of those places and departments to meet the guests or see them off at the airport, train station, or port except for those few comrades who are responsible for receiving the guests. Still less should they meet the guests or see them off at the border of their own locality. When a leading cadre from a higher level stops at various localities, the responsible comrades of various localities and departments "do not meet the guests or see them off. Nor will they come to meet the guests unless they are invited to do so." When a leading cadre inspects a basic-level unit, the particular unit, including the various groups and teams being inspected, is strictly forbidden to mobilize or organize the masses to greet the guests or see them off. Nor should they put up posters or hang streamers to welcome the guests.

-- It is necessary to reduce the number of accompanying personnel and travel with a limited entourage. When a leading cadre visits, various localities must reduce the number of personnel, staff members, and vehicles accompanying the guests.

Except for those who have agreed to meet the guests, there is no need for other responsible comrades to be present. When leading cadres at all levels, including those veteran comrades who had retired, visit various localities to rest or recuperate, there is no need for the local responsible comrades to accompany them. When attending local activities, large or medium-sized buses should be arranged for leading cadres in order to reduce the number of vehicles and avoid traffic congestion.

-- It is necessary to practice frugality in providing food and accommodation for leading cadres. Leading cadres on work and inspection tours are not allowed to stay in deluxe guesthouses; these are for the use of foreign guests and Overseas Chinese. It is forbidden to hold receptions or farewell banquets. Nor should wine be served with meals. Cadres who eat meals must pay for their food according to local standards. They must also pay, in strict accordance with the regulations, for meals of the members of their own entourage, as well as meal allowances if such members happen to miss their meals. No special recreation and entertainment activities should be organized for the visiting leading cadres at all levels.

-- It is forbidden to present guests with gifts, including samples and local produce. Leading cadres at all levels and their entourage are not allowed to ask for or receive gifts or request the localities and departments they inspect or visit to buy commodities in short supply or local produce at a preferential price.

-- It is necessary to submit reports based on fact. It is essential to report on local work to the leading comrade at the higher level on the basis of fact, pointing out achievements and shortcomings, as well as problems. It is not permitted to exaggerate or play things down. Still less should one provide false information or figures. In arranging the itinerary and units to be inspected, it is necessary to respect the views of the touring leading comrades at the higher level. Deception and pre-arrangements to visit show places are strictly forbidden.

-- It is necessary to improve media coverage. Except for principal party and state leaders, journalist units at the central level should not dispatch reporters to accompany any central leading comrade on his or her inspection tour, unless the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee or the State Council agree with this action. When necessary to report the activities of any central leading comrade in various localities on a national basis, XINHUA will prepare the necessary news report.

The General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council call on party committees and governments at all levels to resolutely implement the above-mentioned regulations. They point out: Efforts must be made by secretaries general or directors of various general offices (offices) to coordinate relevant units in earnestly implementing these regulations, conducting checks and providing necessary supervision. Leading cadres at all levels must set high standards for themselves, strictly abide by the regulations, and criticize and ban any practice running counter to these regulations. All personnel reponsible for receiving guests must dare to adhere to the principle, act in accordance with the regulations, strive to carry out their work well and join their efforts to make contributions to bringing about a fundamental change for the better in party style and social conduct.

STATE COUNCIL ISSUES CIRCULAR ON GRAIN QUOTA

[Text] Beijing, 30 Jan (XINHUA) -- On 17 January, the State Council issued a circular on the amount of grain to be purchased under the 1986 contract.

The circular says: In order to encourage peasants to grow and sell grain, the state will properly reduce the amount of grain purchased under the 1986 contract so as to increase the proportion of grain purchased by markets at negotiated prices. The following principles will be observed in reducing the state grain purchase quota in 1986: In areas with a developed commodity economy and numerous avenues for developing diversified undertakings, it is necessary to stabilize the quota of grain to be purchased by contract and ensure the fulfillment of grain production and grain purchasing quotas by supplementing grain production with industry; in areas with the necessary potential for developing grain production and few avenues for developing diversified undertakings, including new commodity grain-producing areas and some old commodity grain-producing areas, it is necessary to reduce the quotas of grain to be purchased by markets according to negotiated prices, thereby enabling peasants to increase their incomes with their surpluses; in areas with less arable land that produce a considerable amount of grain for markets, the quotas of grain to be purchased under contract will not be reduced; in a few impoverished areas, grain purchasing contracts should be reduced or completely exempted, and the method of allowing the markets to purchase grain should be relied on heavily.

The circular says that the variety of grain purchased under contract should still be based on the State Council's 1985 regulations; this includes rice, wheat, corn, and soybeans in Heilongjiang, Jilin, Liaoning, and Nei Monggol. As for other grain varities, if it is necessary for supply at government prices in a locality, the various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities under the central government should make arrangements for purchasing contracts according to demand. Peasant households and agricultural production units signing purchase contracts will be eligible to buy chemical fertilizers at government prices and eligible for preferential loans. Various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities under the central government should set aside a quantity of chemical fertilizers to be sold at preferential prices from that allotted by the state and from their own chemical fertilizer resources. Imported chemical fertilizers outside the state plan and the amount of increased output produced by big chemical fertilizer plants at home should also be used to help grain-exporting areas.

The circular points out that in order to balance the state's grain purchase and consumption, in addition to concluding purchasing contracts for 1986, various areas should deliver to the state a portion of the grain purchased at negotiated prices. The state will arrange for the use of this portion under the unified plan. The banks should ensure funds for purchasing grain. Only rice, wheat, corn, and soybeans to be shipped out of a locality will be sold at government prices. Negotiated prices may fluctuate according to market demand and, in general, will not be lower than the unified purchase price. Grain departments at all levels should strengthen procedures in order to prevent individuals from making money from the price differences through fraud or irregularities. Offenders must be severely dealt with according to disciplinary measures and law.

The circular stresses: Reduction of the quota of grain to be purchased according to contract is aimed at increasing market purchases at negotiated prices. This will enable grain-growing peasants to increase their income from their surpluses and enhance their enthusiasm about increasing grain production. People's governments at all levels must strengthen their leadership over grain production work, make the reduction of the quotas of grain purchases by contract an important part of the rural work this spring, do their work well, and correctly handle the relationship between the state and the peasants. Before the start of spring farming, contracts of reduced grain purchasing quotas should be concluded with peasant households and grain production units; this will serve as guidance for production and achievement of a good grain harvest this year.

IMPORT TAXATION REGULATIONS EXPLAINED

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Question: What are the regulations concerning taxation on goods imported by enterprises funded by Overseas Chinese, Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan compatriots?

Answer: Enterprises on the mainland funded by the above-mentioned people are exempted from tariff, industrial, and commercial consolidation taxes while importing the following materials:

1. Machinery equipment, components and other material goods defined by contract as capital investment of investors "other material goods" means those materials needed by enterprises to expand factories and to install and reinforce machinery. The same applies below);

2. Machinery equipment, components, and other material goods imported with funds which are within the enterprise's total capital;

3. Machinery equipment, components, and other material goods imported by enterprises with additional capital with the approval of organs responsible for investigation and approval, whose supply cannot be guaranteed from Chinese sources.

4. Raw and semi-finished materials, necessary accessories, components, parts and packaging materials imported by enterprises for the production of export goods.

The above-mentioned tax-free imported materials should also be taxed according to regulations, if they are permitted to be to be resold in China or used in the production of goods to be sold in China.

5. Stationary and nonproductive daily necessities and vehicles do not fall into the tax-free category, and tariff, industrial, and commercial consolidation taxes should be defined. However, the equipment necessary for production management such as closed circuit TV sets, computers, and communications apparatus can be exempted from import tax as productive equipment according to regulations.

While importing the above-mentioned goods, enterprises should fill in an "import goods declaration form" for customs. If the imported goods belong to a category restricted by the government, enterprises should submit import licenses to customs for examination. Only after examination and inspection by customs can they be imported.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONE PATTERNS REVIEWED

["Weekend Forum" column by Wang Zhuo: "Have a Clearer Understanding of the Special Economic Zone From Shenzhen's Experience"]

[Text] The Shenzhen Special Economic Zone (shortened as Shenzhen SEZ) is something new. Its development has been so rapid, its changes have been so great, and its progress has been so quick that our understanding is apt to lag behind objective practices. Therefore, we should continue to learn from Shenzhen and to deepen our understanding of Shenzhen at various levels. The first thing is to understand the SEZ's economic pattern from the point of view of the relations between domestic and foreign trade.

Should the SEZ economic pattern be outward-oriented or open-style? Some scholars at home researching the SEZ economic pattern have been issuing propaganda about the SEZ's outward-oriented economic pattern for several years. What is an outward-oriented economic pattern? So far, there has not been a unified and clear explanation of this pattern. But, one thing which is clear is that what is called an outward-oriented pattern refers mainly to the relationship between exports and imports of commodities, including the relationship between exports and domestic sales. If the economy in the SEZ can only be regarded as having an outward-oriented pattern when its commodities are exported and cannot be sold at home then, it is in fact impossible for such an outward-oriented economy to exist in any country in the world, let alone in China. A commodity exchange is always a two-way process and exports are carried out for the purpose of imports. In a modern society, there can no longer be such a foolish landlord who exports his commodities, earns U.S. dollars from the exports and then locks the U.S. dollars in his safe and never spends them.

If an SEZ exports 60 percent of its commodities and thus attains its major goal of selling its commodities mainly abroad, can such an SEZ be regarded as one with an outward-oriented economy? To answer this question, we should first ask where the other 40 percent of the commodities should go. Can it be regarded as having an externally-oriented economic pattern only when these commodities may only be sold in the narrow market of the SEZ, which only has a population of several hundred thousand people? However, Shenzhen is a special economic zone established by a big country and has many exceptional economic advantages. Running Shenzhen as an export processing area is obviously an erroneous policy. The practice in the past few years has proven that Shenzhen is not an export processing area but is comprehensive multi-functional special economic zone. Therefore, we cannot regard the Shenzhen SEZ as one with an outward-oriented economic pattern.

Of course, we all hope that our SEZs can put their commodities on the international market. This is a correct desire. However, if we fail to give play to the advantage of the hinterland's support to the SEZs and if we stress that the SEZs' commodities for exports are not allowed to sell at home, then we are simply tying the hand of our SEZs. By so doing, our SEZs will become bases for marketing goods abroad rather than port cities for the development of export and import trade.

I do not agree to the idea of the "outward-oriented pattern," and uphold the idea of the "open-style pattern." This is precisely aimed at giving all-round play to Shenzhen SEZ's special advantages. Our SEZs should be open to both the outside world and the areas at home. In regard to funds, they should implement the principle of drawing in funds from abroad and raising funds through cooperation at home and thus combine those two advantages and those two forces. Externally, they should export more commodities and import more technology, equipment and necessary means of production and consumption; and internally, they should transfer more new technology, equipment, and commodities to other areas at home. They should also utilize the personnel, technology, and commodities of the areas at home. Combining the two advantages and forces of introduction from abroad and cooperation with other areas at home will facilitate introducing technology from abroad and developing our import and export trade as well as marketing our commodities abroad.

The second level is to understand the SEZs' pivotal role in light of the relations between two markets. Markets are of prime importance in developing a modern commodity economy. By calling Shenzhen a pivot, we mean that it is a pivot linking the two markets at home and abroad. As a result, the area of the Shenzhen SEZ is not large, but it has access to two big markets with great capacity. Therefore, the Shenzhen SEZ is provided with the best conditions for fully utilizing the advantages of two kinds of funds, resources, and technology.

In order to give play to the Shenzhen SEZ's pivotal role, we should study its market patterns. The first market pattern is the outward-oriented market pattern upheld by some scholars researching the Shenzhen SEZ's economy. It is in fact the market pattern of an export processing area. According to this market pattern, the SEZ commodities can only be sold abroad, but are not allowed to sell at home. This is a self-enclosed market pattern. This market pattern benefits neither the SEZ nor the state. The second market pattern is the market pattern of an open-style economy. This market pattern embodies the radiation function of "two fan-shaped areas," and the pivot that links the two markets at home and abroad. In practicing this market pattern, we regard the market at home as the prop and the market in Hong Kong as a springboard, and focus on directly opening up international trade markets far away. The third market pattern is where the state turns the SEZ into a forward position for our country in developing international trade -- a forward position for both import and export trade and entrepot trade. This market pattern is the best one for implementing the strategic principle of the state setting up the SEZs and the SEZs service the whole country. At the present stage, the Shenzhen SEZ should practice the second market pattern and conscientiously create conditions and strive to achieve a transition to the third market pattern. The precondition for the Shenzhen SEZ to conduct the second market pattern is the state's implementation of rational trade policies for the Shenzhen SEZ. In the main, we should have the following trade policies.

1. The policy on export trade. Should we utilize the Shenzhen SEZ's special advantage in being an area bordering Hong Kong, in particular the advantage of exporting fresh and live commodities, or should we restrict this export advantage? This is an issue concerning macroeconomic results. I propose that we adopt the method of tendering for production costs in export trade and resolutely implement the principle of selecting the finest goods for export. We allow those whose export costs are the lowest to export their goods first. Only by so doing can we effectively implement the principle of export competion and actually manage to award the advanced, spur the backward, and eliminate the inferior through competition.

2. The policy on entrepot trade. We should utilize Shenzhen SEZ's advantage in developing entrepot trade, including cross-broder entrepot trade. In order to do that, we should draw up some new stipulations concerning our policies. From the point of view of development prospects, the relations between the Shenzhen SEZ and Hong Kong ought to become relations between two sister port cities. The two cities should utilize each other's strong points to offset their weak points, develop together, and thus form an international trade center on an even larger scale.

3. Import trade policy. We implement a policy of forbidding, restricting, or encouraging imports, depending on the different nature of those imports. In regard to a commodity whose import is banned, one unified policy should be implemented throughout the country to carry out the ban; the SEZs are no exception. In regard to the commodities for which there is an import restriction, certain preferential policies should be allowed to the SEZs and the import of these commodities should be controlled by quotas to be fixed every year.

4. The policy on the domestic sales of SEZ products. In regard to the durable consumer goods that the SEZs import for their own use and of which the state restricts the import, we should adopt policies of banning or restricting their domestic sales in other areas in light of the different nature of the goods. The commodities produced by the Shenzhen SEZ should not come under the category of commodities whose import is controlled by the state, and their sale in the domestic market should be permitted under the condition of bearing the same tax burden. The domestic market sales proportion of commodities produced by the Shenzhen SEZ using some imported components should be determined by the proportion of production costs in China-produced articles. The state should adopt a policy of encourage the Shenzhen SEZ to transfer the advanced technology introduced from abroad to inland areas.

The third level is to understand the question of why the state allows special policies for the SEZs from the point of view of the relations between the state and the SEZs. Why has the state established the SEZs? The answer is it has established them in order to attain the magnificent goal of modernization. Several decades of experience have already proven that the implementation of the system of closing the country to international intercourse and completing internal cycles in isolation does not facilitate an early attainment of the magnificent goal of the modernization of our country. However, no one is sure how we are to open up and what will be the result of opening up. Therefore, it is first necessary to have an "experimental plot.'' However, tilling the experimental plot is not the end but is a means. It is aimed at carrying out the "production in the field" and solving the problem of how the policy of opening up is to be implemented throughout the country.

Initial success has already been achieved in the "experimental plot" in the Shenzhen SEZ. The Shenzhen SEZ has been set up on a "barren tract of land." However, the experience provided by Shenzhen is by no means the experience of developing modern economy on a "barren tract of land." It is obviously a misunderstanding to regard the Shenzhen SEZ's successful experience as the experience of establishing economic development zones on "barren tracts of land." As this is a method that needs much imput and brings slow return, a poor country should not adopt it, nor will a rich country.

Our conclusion is: SEZs are the outcome of special policies, and special policies are the lifeline for SEZs. My conclusionis: Special policies must be implemented in carrying out the policy of opening up. My conclusion is: The policy of opening up is a set state policy for our country and will never changed. If there is to be any change, it should only be a change to improve it. Our SEZs are windows for our country's policy of opening up, through which foreign friends can have a clear view of our country's opening-up policy. Therefore, the SEZs will not be abolished nor will the special policies be revoked.

GOVERNMENT BODIES OUTLINE STEPS FOR 5-YEAR PLAN

HK281221 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 2, 13 Jan 86 pp 6-7

[Article by a staff correspondent: "The First Step Taken in the Seventh 5-Year Plan -- New Information From Some Ministries and Commissions under the State Council" -- first two paragraphs are LIAOWANG introduction -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] This year is the first year of China's Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development. The 5 years just beginning are extremely crucial to achieving the magnificient goal set by the 12th CPC National Congress for this century. In the new year, reform remains our most important task. Last year great achievements were made in both urban and rural reforms and the requirement "be prudent in fighting the first battle and be sure to win" set at the beginning of last year have thus been fulfilled. The main tasks for this year are to consolidate, digest, and supplement the achievements of reform, to promote what is beneficial and abolish what is harmful, to solve noticeable problems so that reform can produce better results, and to conduct earnest investigations, study, and explorative experiments so as to make preparations for the successful progress of next year's reform. As the new year began, various ministries and commissions under the State Council were busy. With the Seventh 5-Year Plan just starting, they were making arrangements for the work of specific departments and fronts for this year and during the whole plan period in accordance with the state's general outline of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We selectively publish the plans of some ministries and commissions here. Although these plans do not cover all ministries and commissions, we can already sense the coming of spring.

THE OFFICE OF SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES UNDER THE STATE COUNCIL -- Director He Chunlin said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China is confronted with the task of further opening up to the outside world. China's special economic zones (SEZ's) will vigorously march toward the goal of building an export-oriented economy, fulfill their function as "windows for technology, management, knowledge, and our foreign policy," and more fully exploit their pivotal role in opening up to domestic businesses and foreign investors. In 1986 China's opening up to the outside world will be carried out in a selective, orderly, staggered and exploratory way in the SEZ's -- open coastal cities and coastal economic open areas -- hinterland areas. This will promote gradual implementation of the opening-up policy in all areas by drawing upon experience gained in these key regions from coastal to hinterland areas. This will also enable us to closely link the economic development of coastal areas with that of hinterland areas, to make the best use of both domestic and foreign resources and both the domestic and foreign markets, and to promote healthier development in the socialist modernization program.

In the new year, all SEZ's should vigorously advance toward the goal of establishing an export-oriented economy. They should take the import of outward-looking industrial production projects which are technologically advanced and highly capable of earning foreign exchange through exports and promise better economic results as the priority in their construction. Open coastal areas should continue efforts to import foreign advanced technology, to strengthen the technological transformation of existing enterprises, to strive to run Chinese-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises, which have approval for operation, well, and to establish economic and technological development zones in a planned and step-by-step way. Coastal economic open areas should further work out and implement their development plans in line with their own resources and strong points and according to the "trade-industry-agriculture" principle so that more competitive commodities can enter the international market.

THE STATE ECONOMIC COMMISSION -- In an article, Vice Minister Zhang Yanning said: The general economic objective China expects to achieve over the last 5 years of the 1980's, or longer, will serve as the foundation for building a modern socialist economy with Chinese characteristics. During this period, it is necessary to strive for a steady growth of the national economy. The economic work of enterprises should be carried out in line with the goals of improving performance and modernizing operations and management.

The specific plans are as follows: 1) A system under which a director or manager assumes full responsibility will be introduced throughout the country. 2) The fatal weak points of poor product quality and huge material consumption will be overcome and a set of management rules and regulations or a management system will be worked out or set up. 3) A good job will be done in managing market supplies, and a buyers market in which general supply slightly exceeds general demand will be created. 4) Close attention will be paid to the groundwork of enterprises in technical standards, quotas, measurement, statistics, basic rules and regulations, and elementary education. 5) Efforts will be made to modernize management and to apply the achievements of modern science and technology in practice so that enterprises can choose their work targets in the light of their own conditions and achieve the world, national, or regional advanced levels of the same trade by stages.

THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE -- Minister Wang Bingqian said: Financial work in 1986 will focus on striking a balance between revenue and expenditure, carrying out reforms in various fields of endeavor, and attaining better economic results. First, great efforts will be made to boost revenues and reduce expenditures and to do a worthwhile job in enterprise taxation and financial and tax departments should institute and perfect administrative rules and regulations and rigorously enforce tax laws and discipline, and at the same time, continue to control and reduce expenditures and put an end to waste.

In 1986, in our financial spending, we will prominently ensure the needs of key development projects, economic reforms, and investment in intellectual resources and increase necessary expenditure on agriculture. Second, continued efforts will be made to perfect the financial and tax systems. This year we will give a gradual regulatory tax reduction to large and medium enterprises with heavy tasks in technological transformation and production of export goods, have made great contributions to the state, and on which a regulatory tax is levied at a high rate and we will continue to steadily increase the depreciation rate of the fixed assets of enterprises. We will also take further steps in perfecting the industrial and commercial tax system, exploiting the role of taxation as an economic lever to the fullest, and improve and perfect foreign-related tax laws. Third, appropriation of special funds and financial discounts will be practiced and some key enterprises will be supported in carrying out technological transformation and importing foreign technology.

THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS AND TRADE -- Some new policy measures will be taken this year, such as paying keen attention to the establishment of a production system of export goods and energetically increasing the state's ability to earn foreign exchange through exports. The production of major farm and sideline products for export use will be carried out mainly in specially selected producing areas, and production bases for exports will be established. The production of industrial products for export use, including machinery and mining products will be carried on mainly by selected factories (mines) in big cities with a quite sound industrial foundation, particularly in coastal cities and mineral-producing areas, and specialized export factories (mines) will be set up. The designated export production bases and specialized factories (mines) will no longer undertake to turn out products to be sold on the domestic market for the state so that they can concentrate on gradually producing a large batch of marketable good-quality, low-cost, highly-rated brandname goods whose delivery is punctual, thus becoming the mainstay in gaining foreign exchange earnings through exports for the state. In addition, we will also tighten control over foreign trade transportation, impose strict controls on exports to Hong Kong and Macao, and strengthen antismuggling work and foreign exchange control.

THE MINISTRY OF WATER RESOURCES AND ELECTRIC POWER -- At a press conference held a few days ago, Minister Qian Zhengying dealt with the ministry's 10 tasks to be fulfilled in 1986. 1) In power construction, generating units with a capacity of 5 million kilowatts were commissioned in 1985. This figure will be doubled in 1986. 2) The Longyangxia power station, the "cock" of the Huang He ladder-like development project, will begin storing water and its first generating units will begin generating electricity. 3) Every effort will be made to ensure three or four generating units of the Gezhouba project can generate electricity. 4) The projects diverting water from the Bi Liu He to Dalian and from the Huang He to Qingdao will be completed and the project designs for the project diverting water from the south to the north are to be examined and passed. 5) The construction of the Yangzhouyong Hu Reservoir in Xizang, China's highest reservoir in above-sea-level terms, will be started. 6) Continued efforts will be made to make electricity universally available in the rural areas of a county or several counties. 7) A big step will be made in encouraging local people to set up power stations by using their own funds. The total power capacity is expected to top 10 million kilowatts. 8) People engaged in water resources and electric power work are to be urged to enhance their cultural and ethical standards. 9) Trade management will be strengthened and programs for water resources development, power development, and water resources and waterpower science and technology development will be drafted and formulated. 10) ZHONGGUO DIANLI BAO (CHINA ELECTRIC POWER NEWS) will be renamed ZHONGGUO SHUILI DIANLI BAO (CHINA WATER RESOURCES AND ELECTRIC POWER NEWS).

THE MINISTRY OF COAL INDUSTRY -- The central task of China's coal industry in the 5 years ahead is to ensure the demands of the national economy for its development, to increase coal production by 40 million tons a year, and to strive to achieve, at the completion of the Seventh 5-Year plan, a coal output of 200 million tons more than the figure in 1985. At the same time, the focus of the development of the coal industry will be shifted from concentrating on coal output in the past to attaining better economic results, improving coal quality, increasing coal product varieties, and expanding coal export.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the Ministry of Coal Industry will have the long-term target of endeavoring to change the image of China's coal industry. As the first step, the modernization of the coal industry will be significantly advanced and the rate of mechanization of the industry will reach 30 percent. Coal mines will be extensively equipped with advanced gas testing and controlling devices so as to greately improve safety conditions in operating coal pits.

Over the next 5 years, coal development and production will be centered in Shanxi, Nei Monggol, Henan, Hebei, Heilongjiang, Jiangsu, Anhui, and Shandong. At present, as far as coal mining is concerned, the country is roughly divided into three regional belts. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the coal-deficient regional belt composed of the eastern and northeastern regions of the country will step up coal extraction and reduce the influx of coal from other parts of the country. In the Shanxi energy base, the central coal base east to the Huang He will maintain a certain rate of development in coal production and increase the volume of coal shipped out to other parts of the country and the regions west to the Huang He including Shaanxi, Gansu, and Xinjiang will make preparations for the future westward shift of coal development.

THE MINISTRY OF RAILWAYS -- During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, in railway construction efforts will be made to strengthen the technological transformation of existing railway trunk lines to rapidly increase the transport capacity of railways, and build an appropriate number of new railway trunk lines to provide the necessary staying power. The general principle for railway construction is to practice careful calculation and strict budgeting, to economize an investment funds, to improve operation, and to expand the freight volume of railways. In railway construction, we will give priority to intensive development and tapping potential. The priority in railway construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is to strengthen the construction of four major thoroughfares, namely, the route for carrying Shanxi coal to other parts of the country, the main railway line linking the north and the south, the thoroughfare linking coastal port cities and the hinterland areas, and the route linking various major economic regions of the country. Through tapping potential and technological transformation, some of the railways in these four thoroughfares will be turned into electric or multiple-track railways. Meanwhile, we will build a new railway lines linking Houma and Yueshan, Shangqiu and Payang, Baoji and Zhongwei, Xian and Ankang, Nanning and Kunming, and Guangzhou and Zhangzhou. By the end of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the combined length of railways will top 58,000 km and their comprehensive carrying capacity will amount to 1.6 billion passenger-journeys [ren ci 0086 2945]. Their freight volume will reach 1.7 billion tons.

THE MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY, AND FISHERY -- The priority of the ministry's work in 1986 is to persistently conduct sweeping reforms, to continue to readjust the rural production structure, to strengthen service work, and to promote the steady and coordinated development of agriculture.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan period is a crucial one for thoroughly restructuring the rural economy, laying a foundation for achieving a comparatively affluent living standard, and for ensuring that the rural economy will have staying power for its further development. During the period, the rural economy will be developed in an overall, coordinated, sustained, and steady manner.

To achieve this objective, in 1986 continued efforts will be made to readjust the rural production structure. What counts in this endeavor is to maintain the steady growth of grain production and to simultaneously develop the primary, secondary, and tertiary industries, with agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations, and fishery as the main areas. Production of industrial crops will be carried out according to market demand in a planned way, with the stress on improving product quality. In the service sector, importance will be attached to animal husbandry and the aquatic products industry. Township enterprises will be healthily developed in line with local conditions and on the basis of doing things according to one's ability. Existing enterprises will be consolidated, their operations will be re-oriented, and their performance will be improved.

THE STATE EDUCATION COMMISSION -- The year 1986 is a year for implementing the decision of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the educational system in an overall manner. In the new year, a solid job will be done in organizing the "construction" of a 9-year compulsory education program. In elementary education, a new teaching order with teaching as the dominant factor will be established. The overall reform of primary school curricula will be strengthened. In secondary and primary school education, about 3 years will be spent in carrying our experiments for reforming ideological and moral courses in primary schools and political courses in middle schools. Continued efforts will be made to readjust work in relation to the teaching of courses in mathematics, physics, chemistry, and English.

In higher education, further readjustments will be carried out in education, curriculum, and administration and the offering of disciplines. A further step will be taken in experiments in the assessment of titles of professional posts and the implementation of a job assignment system according to titles of professional posts in institutions of higher education. A good job will be done in experimentally reforming the enrollment of students and job assignment for the graduates from institutions of higher education. Education work among postgraduates and conducted in teaching liberal arts in universities.

Energetic efforts will be made to develop vocational and technical education and adult education as well. Moreover, pedagogical education will be vigorously developed and the training of active teachers will be increased.

THE CHINA TRAVEL AND TOURISM BUREAU -- Director Han Kehua said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the bureau will concentrate on the following four construction tasks: 1) Human, material, and financial resources will be concentrated on building tourism-related projects in key tourist cities and increasing their overall abilities to handle tourists or visitors. Necessary construction projects will also be carried out in second-category tourist spots and routes so as to enhance their abilities to receive tourists or visitors. 2) Training for personnel engaged in the tourist industry will be strengthened. From now on we should start drawing up a 5-year plan and an annual plan, take effective measures, and speed up training for personnel engaged in the tourist industry so as to meet the demands of the industry's development. 3) Publicity work in tourism should be better conducted and in particular, realistic methods should be used in carrying out such work abroad. 4) Travel agencies and hotels should constantly increase their overall abilities to handle tourists or visitors, offer better service, and enhance their abilities to compete internationally.

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES ILLEGAL LAND SALES

[Commentator's article: "Strictly Forbid Buying and Selling Land"]

[Text] This paper has received a number of letters of late which reveal the phenomena of buying and selling land in rural areas, a practice which should arouse the grave attention of departments concerned of all localities.

From the situations described in the letters, the methods of buying and selling land are various in some places, some buying land then selling it, some buying land and building houses on it before reselling it, others buying land for the purpose of running enterprises, still others buying land to build houses for rent; and there are organs which have acted as go-betweens for individuals purchasing land, making a profit. In short, land under public ownership has been dealt with as a privately owned commodity. The land sold used to be family plots or hill slopes, courtyards, or farmland under contracted responsibility. The methods of buying and selling land can be secret or out in the open. The some localities, it is even carried out completely in the ways of the old society, with the two parties involved signing a contract, the presence of the go-between, witnesses, and the persons who drafted the contract; and initialing ceremony, and the buyer holding a banquet when the bargain is finally made.

Particularly grave is the fact that in the buying and selling of land, some leading organs and leading cadres at county and township levels are involved. Some are buyers of land, some become go-betweens, and other draft the contracts. And that their dignified names should have gone down on those contracts! The fact that some cadres have taken the lead in buying and selling land has made the masses indignant, and they accuse those cadres, asking them what has happened to party discipline and the law of the state. When these people take the lead, others who engage in buying and selling land will have nothing to be afraid of, doing business with an ease of mind. So we can see how pernicious the influences of the practice are.

The phenomenon of buying and selling land has caused some adverse consequences in some localities. They have lost control over land administration, and precious farmland has gradually shrunk in area, which has had an effect on agricultural production. Some individuals have taken advantage in order to line their own pockets while injuring the state, the collective, and themselves in the end, causing a violation of law.

According to the stipulations of China's Constitution, the land in the rural areas, whether it is family plots, family hillslopes, courtyards or farmland under contracted responsibility, all belongs to the collective. Individuals have only the right to use it, but do not own it. The person who uses the land is forbidden to sell it, to sell it in a disguised form, to hire it out, or to transfer its use to others; neither is he allowed to build houses or to dig graves on the land under contracted responsibility, nor to injure the farmland by digging up the soil on it to make bricks or tiles. In the case of land belonging to a collective and occupied by the state for construction purposes, they must comply strictly with procedures for land requisition based on legal stipulations, and the collective should not sell its land without sanction. Relevant land decrees have made explicitly specific stipulations regarding this.

Buying and selling land without sanction is conducted in violation of the law. Departments concerned of all localities must seriously implement the relevant stipulations in the Constitution, and resolutely put a stop to the practice, in order to protect socialist collective ownership of the laboring people from being violated and to safeguard the dignity of the law.

TRADE-INDUSTRY-AGRICULTURE POLICY RECAPPED

HK270457 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAC in Chinese 13 Jan 86 p 2

[Report by special correspondent Wang Yanqing: "Implementing the Trade-Industry-Agriculture Policy Is An Inevitable Trend in China's Coastal Areas"]

[Text] In an interview with this correspondent a few days ago, Bian Jiang, a responsible person in the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery, stressed that China's coastal areas, suburbs of open cities, special economic zones, and border areas should give priority to the development of products which can earn foreign exchange funds through their export in the order of trade, industry, and agriculture and with international markets in mind.

Bian Jiang said that China's coastal rural areas have a comparatively solid material foundation. Particularly with the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world, their status and leading role in the country's agricultural production has become more noticeable. The 1984 output value of the Chang Jiang and Zhu Jiang Deltas, the Xiamen-Zhangzhou-Quanzhou triangle area in southern Fujian, and the Jiaodong Peninsula constituted 12.5 percent of the country's total agricultural output value. The area of these four regions comprises only 1.2 percent of the nation's total and their urban and rural population accounts for 6.8 percent of the country's total population.

He said that judging from world economic trends and the laws governing China's economic development, implementing the trade-industry-agriculture policy in the country's coastal areas is an inevitable trend. Recently the state has pointed out that priority should be given to the export of fresh and live commodities, processed foods, and light and textile products for a certain period in future. This means agricultural industries in the coastal areas (including township enterprises) should be wholly responsible for the task of earning foreign exchange through the export of fresh and live products, and should undertake a considerable portion of the task of earning foreign exchange funds by means of exporting processed foods and light and textile commodities.

However, Bian Jiang went on to say that because of difficulties in implementing the "trade-industry-agriculture" policy at present, leaders in some places have not paid as much attention to agriculture as they have done to industry, commerce, and foreign trade. This state of affairs should be changed as quickly as possible.

He stressed that the specific step for implementing the trade-industry-agriculture policy is to gradually build outward-oriented agricultural industries of different types and at different levels in light of different conditions. Relying on their unique conditions of bordering on Hong Kong and Macao, the Shenzhen and Zhuhai Special Economic Zones should have their own agricultural industries, which are mainly outward-oriented. In agricultural investment, stress should be placed on absorbing and using foreign capital; as far as the sale of agricultural products is concerned, priority should be given to international markets. Strenuous efforts should be made to build an agricultural industry equipped with world-advanced science and technology and managerial expertise; to gain more foreign exchange earnings for the state through exports; and to provide experience for achieving agricultural modernization. Agricultural industries in the suburbs of such open coastal port cities as Shanghai, Jianjin, Xiamen, and Qingdao should be both suburban outward-oriented. With the further development of agricultural commodity production, the amount of agricultural products shipped by other parts of the country into big cities will be greater and greater, and agriculture in the suburban areas of these big cities will steadily become more outward-oriented.

Agricultural industries in the open economic zones and zones to be opened later in the Chang Jiang Delta, the Zhu Jiang Delta, the Xiamen-Zhangzhou-Guanzhou triangle area, the Jiaodong Peninsula, and the Liaodong Peninsula should currently be both inward and outward-oriented. Efforts should be made to create conditions for them to move to the track of outward-oriented development.

Bian Jiang pointed out that the Chang Jiang and Zhu Jiang Deltas and the Xiamen-Zhangzhou-Guanzhou triangle area are regions with adquate conditions for garnering foreign exchange earnings through exports. They should pay particular attention to the export of fresh and live commodities, above all else their exports to Hong Kong and Macao, and strive to gradually enter the Japanese, Southeast Asian, and Middle East markets. He said that at present, apart from continuing to improve the quality of fresh and live commodities in the Hong Kong and Macao markets and consolidating and expanding existing markets, they should give priority to the production of top quality and high-grade vegetables, beef, fruit, seafood, and flowers and plants whose supplies are deficient in our country.

Finally, Bian Jiang said that one of the priorities in China's production and construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is the enhancement of the country's ability to earn foreign exchange through exports. Earning foreign exchange through the export of coastal areas' farm produce is an important aspect of the country's work to earn foreign exchange through exports. In close cooperation with the departments concerned and local authorities, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery will strengthen macroeconomic guidance and do a particularly good job in working out the development plans for the special economic zones, the suburbs of open cities, and the open areas, so that the leading role of the coastal areas in China's efforts to open up to the outside world can be brought into fuller play.

DEVELOPMENT OF HORIZONTAL ECONOMIC TIES URGED

[Article by Lu Xiansheng: "Establishing Ties With 'Distant Relatives' and Neighbors - An Issue of Horizontal Economic Integration"]

[Text] At an economic and technological coordination meeting in the Zhongyuan area not long ago, mayors and commissioners of 15 cities and prefectures in the region where Shanxi, Hebei, Shandong, and Henan border one another unanimously expressed the view that in future horizontal economic integration, it is necessary to establish ties not only with "distant relatives," but also with close neighbors, and that it is necessary both to break away from regional limitations and to develop regional cooperation. This is very good. They have introduced a problem which merits attention in developing the current horizontal economic relationships.

The socialization of production and the consistent development of commodity economy have helped develop the economic relationships within a country and even in the whole world. In the modern economy, an enterprise or a region cannot be absolutely self-reliant. It cannot help but have relationships with other enterprises or regions. Production in an enterprise or a region is generally carried out with fuel, materials, and equipment from other enterprises or regions, and its products are sold to many parts of the country or even abroad. This situation determines that our horizontal economic integration and cooperation must be based on the natural relationships of the economy under the criterion of obtaining the best economic results. We should try to obtain anything beneficial to developing production and improving economic results, even if it is in the most remote area of the country; anything not needed for the development of production and which does not produce good economic results should not be obtained, even it it is close at hand. This is called establishing ties with "distant relatives."

However, establishing ties with "distant relatives" should not contradict forming relationships with neighbors. If we can find ideal partners nearby for cooperation, why should we not take the initiative in cooperating with them so as to produce good economic results for society? Generally speaking, regions bordering one other are linked by common mountains and rivers and have similar customs and close economic contacts. We should encourage these relationships and cooperate in terms of materials, funds, technology, and talented people for the purpose of bringing favorable conditions into play. The emergence of economically cooperative regions in Shanghai, southwestern China, southern and central Liaoning, the Huai He, the Hai He, Bo Hai, and Zhongyuan, and the formation of various integrated bodies in recent years indicate that neighborly relationships are becoming closer.

In developing horizontal economic relationships, two ideas merit attention: one is "befriending distant regions while ignoring those nearby," that is, paying attention to economic integration and cooperation with other regions to the detriment of economic integration and cooperation in one's own region; the other is indiscriminately asserting that "distant relatives are not as good as neighbors," that is, arranging economic integration in one's own region without seeking partners in other regions. These two tendencies are not good. The correct thing to do is this: Ties should be established with both "distant relatives" and neighbors, in line with international economic relationships and economic results. Here we are required to remove barriers between departments and regions at different levels and to open various provinces, autonomous regions, large and small cities, and the rural areas to each other. In this way, we can prevent the practice of "establishing ties merely with neighbors" or "refusing to make contact even if close to each other," and will enable horizontal economic relationships to develop extensively.

YU GUANGYUAN VIEWS PLACE OF CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

[Article by Yu Guangyuan: "Have a Clear Idea of the Place of Cultural Development in Social Development"]

[Text] I strongly favor forums on strategies for cultural development, and I would like to see more of such forums. We cannot confine ourselves to discussions on social development strategies. The issue of cultural development is also very important, and it is necessary to study strategies for cutural development. First it is necessary to have a clear idea of the place of cultural development in social development.

In order to address this problem, we will begin with the development of modern Chinese history. The May 4th Movement marked the beginning of the spread of socialism in China. Shortly after that, movements aimed at winning China's new democratic revolution and socialist revolution began. Thanks to these movements, we won the nationwide revolution in 1949, finished the socialist transformation of private ownership in 1956, and established our socialist system in the same year. All this was followed by a new phase of socialist contruction. The construction referred to here means the building of the two civilizations. Culture and civilization can be viewed as synonymous. Socialist construction refers to socialist cultural construction; culture referred to here is culture, in its widest sense. From this, we may derive an understanding of the place of culture in socialist development.

Some people suggest that culture has both a wide and a narrow sense. I think that it has at least three senses. The third sense is neither a wide sense nor a narrow sense. It is something "in between." I am suggesting that apart from "education, science, literature, and art," there are other things in people's material and spiritual lives and social relations that can be referred to as cultural activities.

This means that in addition to education, science, literature, and art, there are other cultural activities, such as eating, drinking, dressing, architecture, the use of daily necessities, public health and sanitation, sports, entertainment, and so on. There are also cultural activities in interpersonal relations, in intrafamilial and interfamilial relations. I think it is necessary to discuss the problem of culture in the "in-between sense." This discussion can help us culturally enrich all aspects of social life, enable cultural activities to play a more important role in all aspects of social life, and help us teach all members of our socialist society to improve their cultural quality through social activities. Of course, we will not overlook the importance of education, science, literature, and art.

The purpose of socialist construction is to meet the people's growing material and cultural needs. Naturally, there are many cultural needs. After the people's material needs have been satisfactorily met, their cultural needs will grow. In the economically developed areas along China's coast, people look forward anxiously to cultural development.

Next, we will discuss culture in a narrower sense which, according to the report to the 12th CPC National Congress, "refers to undertakings such as education, science, art and literature, the press and publication, broadcasting and television, public health and physical culture, and libraries and museums, as well as the raising of the level of general knowledge of the people." It can be seen from the above that both the features of a spiritual civilization as well as media are covered. At this point, the problem of defining the essence of a culture enters my mind. A culture is something created by the human race through its labor. However, not all things that have been created can be referred to as culture. A defining characteristic of human culture is perseverance from generation to generation. In modern societies, as a result of the development of information services and various media, those things disseminated by mass media have become another defining characteristic of a culture. The elucidation of the importance of culture in a narrow sense is an important feature of, as well as a starting point for, discussions on cultural development strategies.

At this point, we should devote some effort to discussing the problem of the relationship between social ideologies and cultures. They are different things. Some social ideologies, such as superstitious beliefs, are not products of cultural development. They are products of the development of foolishness and barbarism, which are antithetical to culture. However, modern social ideologies, socialist ideologies in particular, are inseparable from various cultures. Socialist ideologies are cultural products. First, as the crystallization of all human cultures, Marxism is the most important ingredient of a socialist ideology. A socialist ideology is formed by two types of things. The first type encompasses various social viewpoints, including philosophical viewpoints, political viewpoints, economic viewpoints, cultural viewpoints, artistic viewpoints, ethical viewpoints, religious viewpoints, and so on. The other type concerns social ideologies, such as art, ethics, and religion, and are not viewpoints. Together with philosophy, they were referred to by Engels in "Feuerbach" as four social ideologies. Marxist philosophical, political, economic, and cultural viewpoints are all cultural products as well as products of scientific research. They are all socialist ideologies. Socialist art and ethics are not viewpoints. Thus, they differ from the above viewpoints or systems of these viewpoints. However, on the one hand, since they have come into existence and developed with the hope of Marxism (their relationship with a culture was discussed in a preceding paragraph), they are inseparable from culture. On the other hand, there are also cultural elements in art and ethics. Thus, it is logical to regard socialist ideologies as a component of a socialist spiritual civilization or culture. In a socialist spiritual civilization, Marxism is the most important thing. It is the nucleus of a socialist spiritual civilization.

Cultural development is inseparable from, and must be based on, economic development. There has never been a single case of a highly developed culture not based on economic development. We can take the development of China's cultural undertaking as an example. China's economic development gives impetus to, and conditions, its cultural development. This is just one facet of the relationship between an economy and a culture. Another facet of this relationship is the impetus given to economic development by cultural development. As far as education, science, and technology are concerned, an increasing number of people have come to a realization and better understanding of the significance of this impetus. People are increasingly aware that advanced products materially represent an advanced spiritual civilization. However, they rarely study or publicize the impetus given to economic development by other cultural activities, and their understanding of this problem is far from adequate. We should devote further efforts to studying this problem and to propagandize it because of its importance in studying strategies for cultural development.

Both our cultural development and economic development depend on successful reform management. The reform of cultural undertakings is a complicated issue and I will not discuss it here. As for management, my definition is that "management is a social practice which directly yields results." Thus, we should compare "cultural management," which yields "cultural results," to "economic management," which yields "economic results." However, in cultural undertakings, there is also the problem of "economic management." This means that even cultural undertakings without income have the problem of producing cultural results with the minimum amount of labor. Thus, there is such a discipline as "cultural economics," highlighting the intersection of economics and cultural studies. Studies of subjective actions should be focused on the problem of "cultural management," which is inevitably linked to "economic management." "Economic management" in cultural work has special characteristics. One of these special characteristics is that this "economic management" is carried out "culturally." In working out strategies for cultural management, we should give serious thought to these problems.

HU YAOBANG COMMENDS FACTORY FOR SERVICE

[By reporter Zhang Gaopeng]

[Excerpts] Shanghai, 27 Jan (XINHUA) -- Shanghai grinding wheel factory has worked hard to earn foreign exchange for the state by ensuring fulfillment of export tasks, although export profits were lower than those of domestic sales. Comrade Hu Yaobang fully approved of this placement of state interests above everything else, and pointed out: "We must have a policy to encourage such enterprises." Recently, the factory's staff and workers wrote a letter to Comrade Hu Yaobang to report on how they worked hard to increase exports in 1985 and on their future targets.

The factory full accomplished its tasks of exporting emery cloth, sandpaper, and other products in 1985, earning $5.14 million in foreign exchange, or $4,000 per employee, making it one of the top foreign exchange earners of China's lathe and tool industry.

Due to price hikes in cotton cloth and other raw materials in recent years, production costs for emery cloth have greatly increased. In addition, export prices have been limited on the international market. As a result, export profits are considerably lower than those of domestic sales. According to initial estimates when drawing up last year's production plan, the factory would lose more than 2.4 million yuan in revenues as a result of exports. Realizing that exports would affect the factory's revenues and the workers' welfare and bonuses, the notion that making export products was not in the interest of the factory began to spread among some comrades, who suggested that exports be reduced.

The factory's party committee and leaders held a joint meeting to discuss the problem. Yuan Yaozhu, secretary of the factory party committee, said: The state is still considerably short of foreign exchange. We must put the state's interests above everything else and do our share in earning foreign exchange for the state, even if this means that we have to suffer some losses. Xu Rufa, deputy director of the factory, said: We must not cut down on or give up exports just because our factory would earn less profits. We will lose our established international markets if we do so. Other comrades expressed their support for the two leaders.

With the leading body having achieved unified understanding, the factory held a meeting of intermediate-level cadres and one of staff and workers, which decided to launch educational activities in various forms to ensure fulfillment of export tasks despite obviously lower profits. Comrade Hu Yaobang learned about the factory's situation from internal material [nei bu cai liao 0355 6752 2624 2436], and he approved of what the factory has done. He specifically pointed out that we should have a policy to encourage such enterprises.

ZHAO ZIYANG STRESSES QUALITY IN TOURIST INDUSTRY

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jan (XINHUA) -- The tourist industry should be an important component of China's economic construction. We whould regard the development of the tourist industry as an aspect of our national economic development strategy and include it in our national economic development plans. This is what Premier Zhao Ziyang said on the afternoon of 27 January when he received some representatives attending a national conference on tourism.

Zhao Ziyang also pointed out in his speech: In order to develop the tourist industry, we should pay attention not only to "hardware," but also to "software." We have already paid attention to "hardware," such as hotels, airports, and highways. However, we have not yet paid sufficient attention to "software," meaning the quality of tourist service personnel, the management of tourism, and the quality of tourist service. In other words, we have not paid enough attention to such questions as: how good the service personnel should be, how much we should develop the tourist industry, and what results we should expect from tourism in the future. Both the "hardware" and the "software" of our tourist industry are poor, particularly the "software."

Zhao Ziyang said: During the initial stage of the tourist industry, we must pay attention to training personnel and make efforts to build a good work force and foster a fine work style. If the hotels are well built but their management is very poor and fraught with unhealthy practices, it will be very difficult to expect good operation from them. The State Tourism Bureau should make great efforts to study this problem. In the subsequent course of developing the tourist industry, the leading departments at all levels should attach prime importance to improving "software," such as the quality of the work force, including tourist guides, service personnel, and management personnel, and the quality of management and services. First of all, we should resolve to properly run schools for tourist service personnel. If we lay a foundation in this respect and have qualified personnel trained, our tourist industry will grow in a healthy and solid way.

Zhao Ziyang emphasized: The development of the tourist industry has both quantitative and qualitative objectives. First, we should ensure good quality to make China's tourist industry enjoy a good international reputation. The key to good quality of tourism lies in good quality of personnel and in training qualified personnel.

The national conference on tourism, held by the State Council, closed in Beijing on 28 January.

HU QILI, HAO JIANXIU MEET RUSTICATED YOUTH

[By reporters Shao Quan, Huang Zhimin]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 28 Jan (XINHUA) -- Amid rousing welcome and praise by the people gathered in the music hall of the Beijing Zhongshan Park today, members of the Shanxi report group told the people of the capital today how they started their careers and matured in Shanxi. The group, called "Good Children Having Lofty Aspirations in All Parts of the Country," is comprised of 12 young people of Beijing and Tianjin who have gone to work in the rural areas of Shanxi Province.

Hu Qili, Li Peng, Hao Jinxiu, and Zhang Jingfu, as well as leading comrades of the Beijing municipal party committee and the municipal government, had a cordial meeting with the group members and posed for pictures with them. They urged the group members to persist in working in the countryside and mountainous areas and make new contributions to the country's four modernizations drive.

Speaking at the meeting, Hao Jianxiu praised the young people from Beijing and Tianjin for supporting and taking part in socialist construction in all parts of the country and for their spirit of working hard with people in combating all sorts of difficulties. Hao Jianxiu said: It has been a glorious tradition of Chinese young people from big cities to support the construction in the interior and frontier areas of the country. Since the founding of the republic, 1 million young people of the capital have gone to the nation's frontier and interior areas to take part in revolution and socialist construction.

Hao Jianxiu pointed out: It is right for young people with lofty aspirations to support the construction of the interior and frontier areas, and this course should be fully reaffirmed. Today, some people have pointed out that the rustification of young people is a product of the "Great Cultural Revolution," and since the "Great Cultural Revolution" has been thoroughly discredited, the rustification of young people should also be discredited. This is a highly erroneous conception. Rustification of educated youths is a policy that was adopted before the "Great Cultural Revolution," and we will continue to adhere to this course, which we have pursued all along. In future, large-scale construction supporting the rural areas and frontier regions will continue to be a glorious responsibility history has given to young people with lofty aspirations.

Hao Jianxiu urged young people that during the four modernizations, they should have the courage to bring forth new ideas and stand on the forefront of reform, and they should also be good at bringing forth new ideas, always proceeding along the right track, and working hard to become an ethical and educated person with lofty ideas and a high sense of discipline.

Hao Jianxiu also urged all localities and party and government organs at all levels to pay attention to the rusticated youths' growth; earnestly help them deal with the real problems in their work and livelihood; pay attention to heightening their political consciousness and educational level; create a favorable environment for them; help them solve problems so they can become proficient personnel; encourage them to become more capable personnel in the course of socialist material and spiritual construction; and set an example in contribution to the prosperity of the country and the people.

FANG YI ON TRAINING TRADITIONAL PHARMACISTS

[Text] According to our reporter Wang Juiting, Fang Yi, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, said this afternoon at the opening ceremony of (Guangming) Correspondence College of Traditional Chinese Pharmacology: At present the lack of many kinds of traditional Chinese medicines and the inadequate number and poor quality of traditional Chinese pharmacists are striking problems that must be resolved by medical, pharmaceutical, public health, and education circles.

Fang Yi said: The party Central Committee and State Council attach great importance to the development of traditional Chinese medicine and pharmacology. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, considerable progress has been made in this work. The establishment of the correspondence college on traditional Chinese pharmacology is a good action to meet the urgent needs of society and should be supported by all communities.

Fang Yi stressed: The correspondence course in traditional Chinese pharmacology is much more complicated and difficult than correspondence courses in liberal arts. To successfully run this institution of higher learning without walls, it is imperative to ensure the quality of education. While focusing on traditional medicine and pharmacology as its main content, the course should include the study of the distinctive characteristics of medicinal herbs. In running the school, constant efforts should be made to review experience and improve the school's work so as to train traditional pharmacists who can meet the actual requirements.

It has been learned that there are some 320,000 staff members and workers in the traditional Chinese pharmaceutical trade in our country, but traditional pharmacological technicians only account for less than 1 percent of this figure.

HU QIAOMU ATTENDS BEIJING SYMPHONY CONCERT

SK300808 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 19 Jan 86 p 1

[Text] On the evening of 18 January, amid the musical composition of "Dunhuang Dream," full of rough and unrestrained feeling, and the ebullient and majestic Third Symphony (Eroica) of Beethoven, the Beijing Symphony Orchestra presented its first performance since its establishment, opening a new chapter in the orchestra's annals.

Hu Qiaomu and Rong Yiren attended the concert to extend their congratulations on this occasion. Also attending the first performance were Rong Gaotang, Lin Mohan, Zhu Muzhi, Jiao Ruoyu, Jin Jian, Xu Weicheng, Bai Jiefu, and Lu Yu; and full-time music workers and music lovers, a total of more than 1,000 persons.

Prior to the concert, Chen Haosu, vice mayor of Beijing Municipality, delivered a speech in which he stated: Along with the steady upgrading of the cultural and educational standards of the people in the municipality, music will generally infiltrate into the people's daily life day by day. The newly established Beijing Symphony Orchestra should saturate the increasing demands of the masses and enrich their life with colorful and majestic contents in order to increase their lofty temperament and interest. The concert was conducted by Li Delun, honorary head of the municipal orchestra.

DENG LIQUN ATTENDS MASS CONCERT IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jan (XINHUA) -- Deng Liqun, member of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat, Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture, Ding Guangen, minister of railways, and Wang Xun, secretary of the Secretariat of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, viewed the performance of the "Voice of the Locomotive" mass music group this evening in Beijing. They warmly greeted this blooming flower of mass literary and art work.

The "Voice of the Locomotive" mass music group was formed on the basis of the mass singing activities at all the basic-level railway units in Beijing. About 3,500 railway staff members and workers took part in this evening's performance. Most of the songs were of their won composition. Some of the songs reflected fervent efforts to promote the socialist material and spiritual civilization in the railway department; ohters depicted railway staff members' and workers' endeavors in promoting the four modernizations; still others showed railway workers' pursuit of ideals; all had a profound mass foundation and were very inspiring.

HU QIAOMU ARTICLE COMMEMORATES HU YUZHI

HK280855 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 23 Jan 86 p 2

[Article by Hu Qiaomu: "Selfless and Fearless, He Served the Country Until Death -- Deeply Mourning Comrade Hu Yuzhi"]

[Excerpts] Comrade Hu Yuzhi was a vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and acting chairman of the China Democratic League.

He was an outstanding revolutionary who courageously struggled all his life for the cause of the people's democracy, national liberation, and social reform, and an important forerunner in China's progressive cultural publication undertakings. His unfortunate death from an illness represents a serious loss to our party, state, and people. We deeply grieve the loss of a loyal communist fighter who dedicated his life to the cause of China's revolution and construction.

After the founding of New China, he started GUANGMING RIBAO, China's first newspaper reflecting the demands of intellectuals. During his term of office as head of the general publications administration, he also set up a complete set of new, socialist publication institutions to publish a large number of revolutionary, progressive books and periodicals, as well as informative reading matter. He made indelible contributions in various ways such as developing people's diplomacy, popularizing Esperanto, and promoting the reform of our country's writing system. Particularly when he presided over the long-standing practical work of the China Democratic League, he faithfully followed the party's principles and policies on united front, was good at cooperating with nonparty comrades and listening to the views and demands of intellectuals, and dared to speak out for the interests of intellectuals. He opened up a new situation for the progress and development of the China Democratic League and worked conscientiously, bending his back to his tasks until his dying day. For many years he was a member and later a vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee. He was bold in advancing suggestions beneficial to the state and the people and contributed greatly to the building of China's legal system and political power.

Comrade Hu Yuzhi was a good example of being never too old to learn and work. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, he was inspired with revolutionary enthusiasm. He wholeheartedly supported the party's line, principles, and policies and the major policy decision of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world. In an article written shortly before his death, he said: In the forthcoming year of 1986, we should carry out two tasks well: One is to persist in reform and to forge ahead, and another is to conscientiously study Marxist theory. Although he was advanced in age, he persisted in studying Marxist theory and concerned himself with state affairs. He paid particular attention to helping young comrades undertake work in "frontline" posts. He taught them by personal example as well as verbal instruction in the hope that they would be able to succeed in the revolutionary cause.

After the start of party rectification, he indicated on numerous occasions that he would sum up his life's career to see what was right and what was wrong and that by going so he would be able to give an account of himself to the party. He never talked about his merits and achievements in history. Shortly before his death, at the request of the Commission for Collecting Party Historical Data, he gave an oral account of historical data totaling more than 60,000 characters. In addition to narrating his personal historical experience, he paid more attention to summing up his shortcomings. He said: "This can be regarded as my personal summation which I hand over to the party in party rectification." What a lofty idea this was! Comrade Hu Yuzhi's life was one of faithfully and ceaselessly struggling for the party's cause; it was a fighting life, a revolutionary life. He was worthy of the glorious title of outstanding CPC member and loyal communist fighter. He was an excellent example of China's intellectuals dedicating themselves to the cause of communism.

SCIENCE ACADEMY OUTLINES RESEARCH TASKS

[Text] Beijing, January 26 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Academy of Sciences will give priority to 32 nationally promoted research projects during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990), Lu Jiaxi, president of the academy, announced at a meeting here today.

In next five years, the academy will set up four pilot projects for bio-engineering, new chemical materials, robots and coal chemical engineering. In information sciences, the academy will focus on microelectronic technology, computer systems, data banks and communications networks, laser and robot research. The aim is to master technologies of producing integrated circuits of one micron designation, computer aided designs and second-generation robots.

In bio-technology, the academy expects to complete the research and experiments on B-type hepatitis vaccine, growth hormone genes of domestic animals, fish cell engineering, and some of the scientific findings will be put into production.

Other scientific research projects will cover non-crystal materials, structural ceramics, fluoride plastics, and new technology for coal and oil extraction, offshore petroleum projects and renewable energy development.

President Lu also listed the academy's tasks in basic research, with a view to preparing technological reserves for the country's economic construction in the 1990s. The academy, he said, will complete the construction of the electron-positron collider in Bijian, the heavy ion accelerator in Ganzhou, a 2.16-meter-diameter astronomical telescope in Shanghai, and build a number of experimental stations of biology and earth sciences.

ANHUI GOVERNMENT URGES STUDY OF LEADERS' SPEECHES

OW291045 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Excerpts] According to an ANHUI RIBAO report, on 22 January the leading party group of the provincial government called a meeting of all its members and of responsible comrades of leading party groups of all commissions and offices of the provincial government, urging them to study seriously the speeches of Hu Yaobang and other central-level leading comrades made at the recent meeting of cadres of central organs.

Wang Yuzhao, secretary of the provincial government's leading party group and governor of the province, chaired and addressed the meeting. He said: The speeches made by the central-level leading comrades are of far-reaching significance in that they enable us to understand correctly the current situation and the importance of reform, to play a leading role in rectifying party style, and to do a still better job in the last 5 years of the 1980's. We must proceed from reality and make a correct assessment of our work. We realize that our party style is by and large good, that the vast majority of our party members and cadres are good or comparatively good, and that they have done a great deal of fruitful work toward the fulfillment of the party's general task for the new period. However, we still have many shortcomings. There are still instances indicating varying degrees of unhealthy party style. The several manifestations of unhealthy tendencies pointed out by the leading comrades at the central level can also be found here. What is more, these unhealthy tendencies are rather serious in certain units and among some people. We must understand deeply that it is of utmost importance for leading cadres and organs to rectify party style, and that we must take the initiative in improving the style of our leading organs.

Comrade Wang Yuzhao pointed out: To rectify party style, we must, first of all, make a good conscientious effort to study the speeches of the leading comrades at the central level. It is imperative that we concentrate on studying the speeches for a certain period. Through such study, we will have a correct understanding of the current situation and of the importance of reform. We must note that our problems concerning party style, although they do not represent the principal aspect of our situation, are very harmful, indeed. It is imperative to correct them.

Comrade Wang Yuzhao further pointed out: In studying the speeches, we must examine ourselves by comparing what we do with what we must do according to the speeches. We must correct our mistakes while carrying out study. As for the few individuals who really have serious problems, it is imperative to clarify their cases through investigation and take a stern attitude in dealing with them according to the nature of their problems and the severity of their cases. Serious criminal offenders must be punished severely according to law. However, we should refrain from subjecting everyone to investigation and making a terrific din.

Wang Yuzhao added: Throughout the study, we must be bold and resolute. Once a problem is discovered, we must persist in correcting it instead of waiting. The provincial government should pay attention to its weaknesses, and should study and establish rules and regulations to correct the shortcomings and improve the style of its various departments.

Comrade Wang Yuzhao stressed: Study of the speeches of the central-level leading comrades must be linked with the provincial government's actual work. We must see to it that through study of the speeches, our work in all fields is pushed ahead and the quality and efficiency of our work are improved.

Comrades Meng Fulin, Zhang Dawei, Wang Houhong, and (Liao Huaisui), members of the leading party group of the provincial government, also spoke at the meeting. Other speakers at the meeting were responsible comrades of the leading party groups of various commissions and offices of the provincial government.

In his speech, Comrade Meng Fulin hoped that the comrades participating in the meeting would observe the principle that leaders should be the first to foster a good style and observe discipline. The participants unanimously expressed the resolve to take concrete action and set an example for everyone in the province in rectifying party style.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN AT MILITARY DISTRICT MEETING

[Text] "Units stationed in Fujian must carry forward the glorious tradition and take the lead in helping improve the general mood of society," emphasized Comrade Xiang Nan, secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee and first secretary of the party committee of the Fujian Provincial Military District, at the plenary meeting of the military district party committee today.

To implement the instructions of the party Central Committee and the Central Military Commission that military units should lead the van in rectifying party style, to review its work done last year, and to plan and make arrangements for this year's tasks, the Fujian Provincial Military District party committee held its first plenary meeting after streamlining and reorganization from 13 to 15 January.

Comrade Xiang Nan briefed the meeting on the excellent situation of Fujian's economic development and highly praised the units stationed in Fujian and the commanders and fighters of the Fujian Provincial Military District for their contribution to defending the four modernization drive and invigorating Fujian's economy. Comrade Xiang Nan said: Military work cannot be weakened and can only be strengthened under the new situation. Units stationed in Fujian, the Fujian Provincial Military District, and the People's Armed Force Department must remain alert as usual, be prepared at all times, conduct military training well, improve their military quality, and defend the four modernizations campaign. Attention must be focused on developing Fujian's advantageous mountains, seas, and being the home province of many Overseas Chinese. The military must understand well and make full use of mountains and seas, construct the "Eight Bases," and build well the home province of Overseas Chinese. In line with the new situation of opening to the outside and restructuring, the military must take lead in improving the general mood of society. In Danyang, Shishi, Meishan, and Shishan, the military and civilians cooperated well in local construction. Good conditions in these places attracted Overseas Chinese to contribute to further construction of their home towns. Abroad, these Overseas Chinese become our eloguent, convincing apologists.

Zhang Zongde, commander of the provincial military district, pledged at the meeting to build the units well, effectively rectify party style, and make greater contributions to revitalizing Fujian.

During the 3-day meeting, the Fujian Provincial Military District party committee discussed the central agenda item on how to strive for a fundamental turn for the better in party style and eventually formulated five measures for that purpose.

HAN PEIXIN GREETS JIANGSU WRITERS MEETING

[Excerpts] A membership meeting of the Jiangsu Chapter of the Chinese Writers' Association opened this morning in Nanjing. Over 400 writers will be discussing the great task of developing the province's socialist literature at this meeting, which is the first grand gathering held by the chapter since it was founded.

Present at the meeting as guests were members of the Central Advisory Commission Jiang Weiqing and Liu Shunyuan; leading comrades of our province Han Peixin, Shen Daren, Sun Han, Sun Jiazheng, Hu Fuming, Chu Jiang, and Yang Yongyi; responsible comrades from mass organizations in our province; and veteran comrades, including Guan Wenwei and Bao Houchang.

Han Peixin, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, greeted the gathering in an address on behalf of the committee. He expressed the hope that party committees and governments at all levels would further improve the style of leadership over the work of literature and create more favorable social and political environments for writers to ensure that their wisdom and talent will be brought into full play. He said: On the question of literary creation, it is not only necessary to pay attention to the social benefits of their works and emphasize the importance of their sense of responsibility to society. Our writers must go deep into the real life and step up their efforts to study so that they will continue to increase their theoretical knowledge and improve their literary proficiency and turn out works that are worthy of being called the great works of literature of our times.

On behalf of the Chinese Writers' Association, Tang Dacheng, secretary of the association's leading party group, also delivered a message of greetings at the meeting.

WAN SHAOFEN ATTENDS JIANGXI RURAL WORK MEETING

OW291135 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Text] According to a report by our reporters Qian Rui and Zeng Ai, a provincial rural work meeting opened yesterday in Nanchang. The main purpose of the meeting is to relay and put into practice the guidelines of the central rural work conference, to study Document No 1 of this year of the CPC Central Committee and Document No 1 issued by its General Office, to analyze and study the new situation and problems encountered in the province's rural reform and economic development, and to discuss and plan the rural work for 1986.

This afternoon's session was attended by Wan Shaofen and Xu Qin, secretary and deputy secretary respectively of the provincial CPC Committee; Pei Dean, Wang Baotian, and Lu Xiuzhen, members of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee; Zhao Zengyi and Wang Shixian, chairman and vice chairman respectively of the provincial Advisory Commission; and Sun Xiye, vice governor. The representatives to the meeting and responsible comrades of provincial departments concerned, numbering more than 500 in total, listened to a report entitled "Carry Out Intensive Rural Reform and Promote the Sustained, Steady, and Coordinated Development of the Rural Economy," delivered by Xu Qin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee.

Vice Governor Sun Xiye also addressed this afternoon's session.

RUI XINGWEN ADDRESSES SHANGHAI RURAL WORK FORUM

OW241209 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, addressed a municipal conference on rural work on 22 January. He urged cadres to acquire new knowledge and ideas and gain a correct understanding of the new situation in reform and the new changes taking place in the industrial structure in Shanghai's suburban areas. He urged them to exert efforts to promote the development of grain and fodder crops, two weak links. He also called on them to implement the policy of using the profits of industry to subsidize agriculture in order to ensure a sustained, steady, and balanced economic development in the suburbs.

Speaking of the trend of development in the suburban area, Rui Xingwen said: As a result of reform, crop cultivation and aquaculture have grown in scale and become more scientific and efficient. This has led to changes in the setup of labor force and the means of production, with more land and livestock concentrated in the hands of large or joint households, the embryonic form of Chinese-style family plantations. This development opens up new prospects for large-scale agriculture, with more stress on specialization, commercialization, and modernization, in Shanghai's countryside. He also pointed out: The suburban areas should achieve self-sufficiency in food grain supply and should provide urban residents with adequate supply of nonstaple foodstuffs. Efforts should be made to further promote commodity circulation and step up the second-stage reform in the rural areas.

Rui Xingwen urged all industries and trades to support the economic and cultural construction in the suburban areas. He said that the scientific-technological front should raise the level of support to agriculture, as should the cultural, educational, public health, and industrial fronts.

ZHEJIANG'S WANG FANG ADDRESSES STUDY MEETING

OW250549 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Excerpt] According to a ZHEJIANG RIBAO report, the provincial Advisory Commission held an enlarged meeting of its Standing Committee in Hangzhou from 9 through 22 January. The meeting's participants earnestly studied the party Central Committee's relevant instructions, discussed questions concerning intensifying the building of spiritual civilization and ideological and political work and improving party style, and mapped out a work plan for the provincial Advisory Commission in 1986.

Tie Ying, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, presided. Wang Fang, secretary of the provincial party committee, called on the meeting participants and spoke to them.

In his speech, Wang Fang first gave a positive evaluation of the work of the commission over the past year, and urged the commission's veteran comrades to do a good job in study and investigation in order to continue to offer good advice to the provincial party committee. He also wished them good health and a long life.

Comrade Wang Fang then made a clear exposition on the current situation, this year's reforms, and party style based on reality in Zhejiang. He said: Correctly understanding and analyzing the situation is the ideological foundation for persistant reform in accordance with the party Central Committee's line and policies. Reform must be carried out over the entire period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Reform should continue to be top priority in economic work this year. To fundamentally improve party style is the common aspiration of all party members. All Communist Party members, party cadres in particular, should unify their thought and action on the basis of the party Constitution. Only by doing so, can a fundamental improvement in party style be achieved.

GUANGXI CIRCULAR ON EXAMPLES IN CORRECTING STYLE

HK290849 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The regional CPC Committee recently issued a circular, demanding that organs at the regional level set an example in correcting party style.

The circular points out: Organs at the regional level must play a specific, organizational, and pivotal role in all aspects of work in the region. Whether the organizational work is good or bad and whether the pivot works well or not, has an extremely important bearing on whether all aspects of work in our region can be done well or not and on the bringing about of an upswing in Guangxi's economy as soon as possible. Therefore, to correct party style in the whole region, organs at the regional level must be in the van and set an example for the whole region. It is demanded that party, government, and mass organs in the region and party member leading cadres take the lead and that all levels grasp this work well so as to strive for noticeable improvement of party style in organs at the regional level this year.

The circular demands that the following problems be solved well:

1. It is necessary to seriously study the speeches of leading comrades of the central authorities and to further enhance understanding of the importance and urgency of correcting party style.

2. To correct party style and unhealthy trends, leadership organs and cadres at the regional level must first take the lead. In accordance with the practical situation of organs at the regional level, they must now seriously examine liberalism politically, ultraindividualism ideologically, and bureaucratism in work. Economically, we must lay stress on: the investigation and handling of the problems of illegal dealings in foreign exchange; of lining one's pockets with public funds or other people's money; of indiscriminately issuing loans; of taking advantage of issuing loans to pursue private ends; and of causing serious and large losses to the state; the serious problems of six aspects of organ's work style which are put forward by the circular of the general offices of the central authorities and State Council; and the problems of state cadres occupying land for the purpose of building private houses. It is necessary to commend and encourage the units and individuals who score outstanding achievements in correcting party style and unhealthy trends and to promptly readjust, or dismiss and replace, those leading cadres whose own work style is seriously wrong and who refuse to correct it, or who do not correct unhealthy trends vigorously enough and are really incompetent.

3. It is essential to seriously do well in grasping the thorough investigation and severe handling of large and serious cases. Leading cadres must implement the system of responsibility for correcting work style. In a department or unit where work style is not grasped well, the political responsibility of the leader of this department or unit must first be investigated and affixed. We must seriously investigate and deal with the party members who commit serious mistakes and party disciplinary action must be taken against those who violate the party Constitution. Those who violate the state law must be punished in accordance with the law. Those who get economic advantages must return what they have unlawfully taken. Those who refuse to mend their ways despite repeated admonitions must be dealt with most severely. Those who retaliate against people who report and furnish information must be severely investigated and dealt with once the situation is discovered.

4. It is imperative to draw a clear demarcation line between right and wrong and to seriously implement the party's policies.

5. It is necessary to strengthen leadership and to make good arrangements. The regional CPC Committee's party rectification leadership group is to be responsible for the work of correcting party style and unhealthy trends throughout the region. Organs at the regional level must set up party style correction leadership groups and set up offices in the CPC committees of organs at the regional level to handle routine work. The party groups and CPC committees of all departments and bureaus must organize work groups to grasp party style with the participation by party group secretaries, by organ CPC Committee secretaries, and by discipline inspection group heads. It is essential to really include the correction of party style and unhealthy trends on the agenda.

In conclusion, the circular demands: From now to the end of March, all units must organize party member cadres to study the speeches of leading comrades and the relevant documents of the central authorities for 2 and 1/2 days each week. Leading cadres at and above the departmental level must concentrate a period of time on study and simultaneously study, conduct discussions andinvestigations and make corrections in order to score achievements. It also demands: In accordance with the relevant spirit of the circular and in the light of the practical situation, all prefectural, city, and county CPC committees must make specific arrangements.

HENAN TO LIGHTEN ENTERPRISES' SOCIAL BURDEN

HK290757 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] The provincial people's government recently formulated interim regulations on lightening enterprises' social burden.

The regulations point out: Following the state's introduction of urban facilities maintenance tax, nobody is allowed to apportion any expenditure concerning the maintenance of urban facilities to enterprises. Except for voluntary social labor, body is allowed to apportion any project of urban construction to enterprises. Following the introduction of additional charges on education, governments and departments at all levels are prohibited from levying further educational charges on enterprises. When enterprise workers' children enter a school within the specified time, the school is prohibited from apportioning expenses to enterprises under any pretext. The enterprises should continue to actively run schools. They are prohibited from arbitrarily canceling, merging or reducing the present size of classes. In order to encourage the running of schools, the education department should allocate part of the collected additional charges on education to secondary and primary schools. No unit is allowed to levy administrative charges or to retain other charges on enterprises, nor is a unit allowed to ask enterprises to support it or donate funds or payment in kind without approval. No unit is allowed to arbitrarily levy fines on enterprises under any pretext. Except for the fines stipulated by the law and approved by the State Council and the provincial government, all localities must submit their procedures of imposing additional fines to the people's government at and above county level for approval. On the collection of fines, we must use the fine notice jointly published by the financial departments at prefectural and city levels. For fines concerning the violation of traffic regulations, we must use the fine notice jointly published by the provincial transport and public security departments. Everyone has the right of refusing the payment of a fine which is not supported by a notice. All revenue from fines is to be delivered to the financial departments for handling in accordance with relevant regulations.

Under special circumstances when it is necessary to raise funds among enterprises, we must follow the principle of voluntarism and acting according to one's capability. We must also go through the procedure of submitting the plan to upper levels for approval.

Such funds and materials collected must be handled properly in connection with the plan. Nobody is allowed to embezzle them under any pretext.

Enterprises have the right of refusing the payment of charges and fines that are not apportioned in connection with the regulations. If they encounter deliberately created pressure, difficulties or retaliation because of this, they should promptly report and complain to the party's discipline inspection departments and the government's judicial and auditing departments. These departments should accept their cases and handle them.

The regulations point out: Governments at various levels must strengthen their leadership. They should check those administrative and other charges collected from enterprises. Except for those approved by the State Council and the provincial government, all charges levied by the localities and departments without approval must be banned from being collected. Anyone who continues to arbitrarily levy charges on, or apportion expenses to, enterprises will be held accountable according to the seriousness of the case. In addition, all illegal income will be confiscated. We must take party and government disciplinary measures against those people who pay no attention to law and order but violate policies and abuse power. Also, we must affix their legal responsibilities.

HUBEI'S GUAN GUANGFU ON HONGHU NATURAL RESOURCES

HK310445 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Guan Guangfu, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, conducted an on-the-spot investigation in Honghu. After listening to the report made by a responsible comrade of the county CPC Committee, he said: It is necessary to be determined to exploit and use the natural resources in Honghu. He said: To exploit and use the natural resources, it is essential to take the road of comprehensively raising funds, comprehensive exploitation, comprehensive harnessing, comprehensive management, and comprehensive benefit and to really build Honghu into a base for aquatic products, scientific research, and business. Due to existing long-term contradictions between the adjustment of water conservancy facilities and the breeding of aquatic products and fish and between the management system and exploitation and investment, the use rate of water surface in Honghu has been very low. Income derived from a mu of water surface is less than 22 yuan. In view of this, the Honghu County CPC Committee has put forward a plan for comprehensive harnessing of the rivers and lakes.

Comrade Guan Guangdu expressed satisfaction with this plan. He maintained that this plan is beneficial to both the adjustment and development of aquatic products. It is also advantageous to the guaranteed harvest on several 100,000 mu of low-lying fields in the lake areas irrespective of drought and floods. How do we carry out this plan? Guan Guangfu said: County authorities cannot rely on the upper level. Provincial authorities must not disregard this work, and departments concerned must not shirk their responsibility. It is necessary to mobilize positive factors in all quarters and to take all effective measures. We can set up a Honghu Aquatic Product Exploitation Company Limited, which will have full power to carry out management, exploitation, and operation. We can encourage fishermen to invest in the project and to take part in laboring work. We can encourage people inside and outside our province to invest in this project and we can also introduce foreign capital so that we can resolve the difficulties in the funds for exploiting Honghu. All levels and departments must show concern for and support the development of Honghu. We must be determined to build Honghu into a base for aquatic products, scientific research, and business, so as to promote the development and production of aquatic products in Hubei.

GUIZHOU CIRCULAR ON CENTRAL LEADERS' SPEECHES

HK271019 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] The provincial CPC Committee recently issued a circular, demanding that CPC committees and groups in all areas and units earnestly study the speeches delivered by central leading comrades at the central organ cadres meeting.

The circular pointed out that the important speeches delivered by Hu Yaobang and other central leading comrades at the central organ cadres meeting were important policy decisions and steps taken by the CPC Central Committee for further strengthening of the building of socialist spiritual civilization, and a mobilization order for bringing about a basic turn for the better in party style. Their speeches have not only inspired and encouraged comrades of central organs, but have also greatly inspired our cadres and party members in local organs. The provincial CPC Committee demanded that party and government organs at all levels earnestly study and deeply understand the spirit and essence of the speeches of the central leading comrades.

The circular stressed that provincial and prefectural party and government organs, leading groups in particular, must set an example in studying the speeches. Meanwhile, they must organize cadres and party members to spend some time on study. They must closely combine the study with earnestly studying and propagating the documents of the National Conference of Party Delegates. Party and government organs at county level must also arrange the study in light of their reality. They must have a good understanding of the main points of the study; conscientiously analyze the status quo of party style in connection with the reality in their own areas, departments, and units; examine the main problems in their own areas, departments, and units in comparison with the malpractices referred to by the central leading comrades in their important speeches; and grasp the work in four areas, namely, strengthening ideological education, perfecting the system and enforcing discipline, seriously investigating and dealing with important and major cases, and perfecting inner-party democratic life.

SICHUAN CIRCULAR ON CENTRAL LEADERS' SPEEECHES

HK270550 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 22 Jan 86

The circular reads: The speeches of the central leading comrades aimed at a clear target and raised explicit demands. The shows the determination of the CPC Central Committee to straighten out party style and is of great importance in improving party style and the general social mood.

The circular demanded that all units, in accordance with the spirit of the instruction of the provincial CPC Central Committee, promptly organize party members and cadres, particularly cadres above the section level, to earnestly study the speeches of the central leading comrades and to discuss the speeches in connection with reality after reading them repeatedly. They must combine study with reviewing the work in 1985 and arranging tasks for 1986. In the study, they must particularly discuss the problem: What should provincial organs do since central organs have set an example in straightening out party style? What should every party member or cadre do in this respect? Through study, leading organs and cadres and party members must straighten out their own style first. They must raise efficiency, study hard, enforce discipline, strengthen party spirit, and seriously improve party style so that provincial organs can genuinely set a good example to the whole province in this respect.

SICHUAN MILITARY DISTRICT CORRECTS MALPRACTICES

HK271025 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Text] In actively responding to the call issued by the CPC Central Committee Military Commission on Army and administrative organs above army level taking the lead in correcting malpractices, the CPC Committee of the headquarters of the provincial military district has organized cadres to seriously correct their wrong ideas in connection with reality, and mobilized them to thoroughly expose all malpractices in their own depart-departments.

The CPC Committee of the headquarters of the Sichuan Provincial Military District recently held an enlarged meeting to study relevant documents. In the course of study, they believed that there now exist three ideas disadvantageous to exposing and correcting malpractices. 1) The idea of [words indistinct]. Some people even contend that inviting others to dinner parties or sending them gifts is a requirement in their work. 2) The idea of small-group mentality. Some people believe that so long as they do not pocket money, they can use the money in any way they wish. 3) The idea of not washing one's dirty linen in public and reporting only the good news not the bad.

They started correcting malpractices by grasping people's understanding, deepened their understanding of the perniciousness of malpractices, and educated them to understand that cadres engaging in malpractices would weaken our Army and impair its image in the eyes of the people.

On the basis of deepening their understanding, all cadres of the headquarters of the provincial military district conscientiously examined their own malpractices by using the relevant documents as a mirror. The CPC Committee of the headquarters made the following decision: All sections and officers must thoroughly check all expenditures beyond the plan before the end of January and report them to higher authorities. They must investigate and handle all large sums of money assigned without authorization, to buy specially controlled commodities and lent to local units. No receptions should be given in excess of scale charges, and people should refuse receptions in excess of scale charges. No souvenirs should be issued during conferences.

[Excerpts] The Sichuan Provincial and Chengdu City People's Governments and the Chengdu PLA units held an Army-government forum in the Chengdu Jinniu Hotel in the evening of 25 January. Leaders of the province and city and of the PLA gathered together to greet the Spring Festival.

Present at the function were Yang Rudai, Nie Ronggui, Wu Xinhai, Bai Shangwu, Huang Qichao, Xu Chuan, and Xu Shiqin, responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee; Wan Haifeng, Zhang Taiheng, Shao Neng, Hou Shujin, Feng Yingshan, (Zheng Xing), (Zhang Changshun), Gao Shuchun, and (Kang Huzhen), responsible comrades of the PLA units; Yang Wanxuan, Song Wenbin, Han Zhengfu, (Wang Tangbo), (Luo Min), (Li Maying), and (Li Shaoyan), responsible comrades of the provincial Advisory Commission; He Haoju, Qin Chuanhou, Ji Chunguang, Meng Dongbo, Liu Yunbo, Liu Haiquan, Zhaxi Zeren, Wang Ao, Deng Zili, and Wang Yuanli, responsible comrades of the provincial people's Congress Standing Committee; Gu Jinchi, Liu Chunfu, Luo Tongda, Kang Zhenhuang, Ma Lin, Qiao Zhimin, Ding Changhe, and Guan Xuesi, responsible comrades of the provincial government.

Chengdu Mayor Hu Maozhou presided. Governor Jiang Minkuan and Chengdu Military Region Commander Fu Quanyou made speeches.

YUNNAN LEADER ON RURAL WORK PROBLEMS, TASKS

HK260315 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee convened a provincial rural work meeting on 24 January in order to convey the spirit of the national rural work conference. Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Shusheng spoke at the meeting on 25 January. He conveyed the spirit of the national conference, analyzed the current new situation and problems in rural Yunnan, and proposed the tasks in rural work for this year.

Liu Shusheng spoke on the following matters: 1) on the rural situation; 2) on persevering in reform and carrying it out in depth; 3) on grain; 4) on increasing agricultural investment; 5) on the question of some peasants getting rich ahead of others, and everyone getting rich; 6) on work in poor mountain areas; 7) on strengthening the building of spiritual civilization in the rural areas; 8) on strengthening leadership.

He said: Last year, despite serious natural disasters, output of all industrial crops in Yunnan showed a big increase, although grain production declined due to natural disasters. Forestry, animal husbandry, and fisheries registered relatively fast development. There was also big development of the township enterprises. Average net rural incomes are estimated to have increased by about 50 yuan.

On the question of reform, Liu Shusheng said: Since last year Yunnan, in common with the whole country, has entered a new stage of in-depth development in rural reform, achieving victories beyond expectation. The main hallmarks of this are: Readjustment of the production structure has taken new strides; there has been an initial change in the rural single-product economy; and we have started to enter a new period of developing commodity production to meet market needs.

However, we must also clearly realize that many new situations and problems have emerged in reform. We must solve these in the course of reform. This year we must further perfect the contract system, speed up reforms in the rural circulation field, further readjust the production structure, continually perfect the family farms popularized on state farms, and speed up the pace of reform of the agricultural science and technology setup.

On the grain question, Comrade Liu Shusheng said: Yunnan is a grain-deficient province. We cannot take lightly the question of grain production. As ours is a border province with poor communications, we cannot in the long term rely on the state to ship grain into the province to enable us to live and to readjust the production structure. All levels from top to bottom must, therefore, firmly embrace the idea of grain self-sufficiency, and also unswervingly implement the principle of developing diversified undertakings without any slackening of grain production.

The provincial CPC Committee has decided to reduce the contract grain procurement quota this year and to keep this unchanged for 5 years, and to increase the proportion of grain bought at negotiated prices, so as to increase the income of the grain-growing peasants. In areas where the commodity economy is relatively developed and income from industry and sideline occupations is relatively high, it is essential to stabilize grain production and practice the policy of having industry subsidize agriculture and grain, so that the interests of those engaged in industry and those engaged in agriculture can be regulated. We should continue to implement the favored treatment policies practiced in the past in areas producing marketable grain. Grain-growing areas are allowed to freely sell grain at negotiated prices to grain-deficient areas, so as to increase the peasants' income.

No contract purchases will be instituted in a few poor mountain areas. The peasants there can voluntarily sell their grain at negotiated prices, but they cannot go back to the old road of destroying forests to reclaim land for grain cultivation.

On the question of increasing investment in agriculture and improving the basic material conditions for agriculture, Comrade Liu Shusheng said: To take agriculture as the foundation is the guiding idea and fundamental guideline for China's socialist economic construction. However, in recent years, the province's investment in agriculture has been reduced somewhat, and we have neglected the agricultural contraction that might result. The provincial authorities are resolved to increase investment in agriculture, and all localities should do the same. The investment is mainly to be used in water conservancy construction and in popularizing agricultural science and technology, and so on, so as to improve the conditions for agricultural production and turn science and technology into productive forces, to create the conditions for sustained and steady development of agriculture and for the maintenance of reserve strength.

On the question of helping poor areas to extricate themselves from poverty and get rich, Comrade Liu Shusheng said: At present there are still some areas in Yunnan that are in a state of poverty. In those areas, the food and clothing problem for several million people has still not been solved. The common feature of these areas is poor production and living conditions and a very low level of peasant incomes and grain rations. To help these areas transform their appearance as soon as possible, we must solve the following problems:

1. Further unify understanding, get a clear picture of the guiding ideas, strengthen work in the poor areas, and help the peasants there to extricate themselves from poverty and get rich as soon as possible. This is a strategic issue related to sustained and steady development of rural economy, to nationality solidarity, to social stability, to consolidating the border regions, and to accomplishing doubling in agriculture. The whole party and all levels must work together to solve the problems of these areas, with all departments cooperating closely.

2. In guiding the work, we must act in light of local conditions and seek truth from facts. We must avoid treating all cases in the same way irrespective of the circumstances and acting in generalized ways.

3. We must further relax the economic policies.

4. We must attach importance to building spiritual civilization, and speed up the development of culture, public health, and education.

5. We must tangibly lighten the peasants' burdens.

GANSU LETTER ON STOPPING SPREADING MALPRACTICE

HK241029 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Jan 86

[Text] Recently, (Li Jicheng), a correspondent of this station, wrote a letter, disclosing that the malpractice of some motor vehicle drivers at the Huajialing Road section in exchanging gasoline for eggs has become more and more serious.

The letter says: In the past this unlawful dealing was engaged in at the Huajialing Road section. Now it has spread to the bottom of the big (Zhujia) Shan near the Jingning County seat. At the short section of road at the big (Zhujia) Shan, the number of stalls and places where gasoline is exchanged for eggs is 40 to 50.

The letter says: One of the main reasons for this phenomenon is that some units which have motor vehicles have unlimited gas. The amount of goods transported and distance driven are merely based on drivers' reports. This has encouraged this malpractice which does harm to the state and which lines one's pockets with public funds.

The letter appeals to the units which have motor vehicles to strengthen education for drivers and control over the quantity of fuel. They must strictly enforce the regulations on public fuel, implement the system of personal responsibility, and plug all the loopholes. At the same time, it is hoped that the attention of departments concerned will be drawn to this and that they will take resolute measures to investigate seriously and deal with this unlawful dealing.

YIN KESHENG INSPECTS QINGHAI SPORTS FACILITY

HK210433 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 16 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 10 January, comrades including Yin Kesheng, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Bian Yaowu, vice governor, inspected the Duoba Sports Complex. During the course of inspection, comrades, including Yin Kesheng, watched a women's football game, archery, judo, weight-lifting, cycling, and a women's volleyball game. They also visited the players' dormitory, bathrooms, canteen, and vegetable greenhouse to understand the conditions.

Comrade Yin Kesheng said that after watching the players training he felt that the comrades had been working very hard. However, in order to score good achievements and to credit to our country, it is necessary to carry out strict training and set strict demands on trainees. Leaders must do well in serving the players.

In dealing with logistics work, Comrade Yin Kesheng said that in the management of players' livelihood, it is essential to strengthen catering work and to prepare meals in accordance with nutritional requirements.

SHAANXI SECRETARY ANSWERS PARTY MEMBER'S LETTER

HK160851 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 13 Jan 36

[Text] On New Year's Eve, Bai Jinian, secretary of the Shaanxi Provincial CPC committee replied to (Qin Xiaoping), an ordinary party member at (Liujiazhuo) Village, (Beijintou) township, Baishui County, praising his noble spirit in caring for the party's cause.

Comrade (Qin Xiaoping) has been afflicted with a lingering disease for years. Last year when he heard on the radio that the provincial CPC Committee was going to select and transfer cadres to stay at rural grass-roots units to help improve their work and gain firsthand experiences for guiding overall work, he wrote a letter to provincial CPC Committee Secretary Bai Jinian on 6 November because of the problems which existed several years ago when cadres went to rural grass-roots units.

In the letter he sincerely put forth suggestions and raised proposals. He put forth six suggestions in the letter.

1. It is necessary to assign tasks to cadres going to grass-roots rural units. Those who overfulfill their tasks should be praised and those who fail to fulfill their tasks should be punished. He believes that if the cadres are under no pressure and work flashily, they will not make a good impression on the masses and will treat work for the masses as a burden. He suggested that cadres going to grass-roots rural units should help peasant households develop production.

2. Cadres should not be allowed to hold concurrent posts at various levels. Because if they do so, it will be difficult for them to go to grass-roots rural units; and if they go to rural areas, they will just make rapid visits and give empty talks, which are of no avail.

3. Cadres should not be asked to attend too many meetings. The cadres need not attend every meeting so as to avoid spending time at conference tables and traveling.

4. When staying in rural areas, the cadres should not treat grass-roots cadres as their guides, but must themselves select villages and households to carry out their work. They should not simply follow grass-roots cadres in everything. If so, they will heed only one side and be at a loss.

5. They must spend a lot of their time in remote and poor villages and in households with difficulties so as to help them get rich and to let them genuinely feel the party's care. They must know the truth that a mouthful of food in difficult times is more useful than several hundred jin of food in good time.

6. It is necessary to prevent the tendency of people craving for greatness and success and of proneness to boasting and exaggeration. Those cadres who seek the advanced everywhere and only like working in villages and households which are advanced in building material and spiritual civilizations are incompetent. They will be detested by the masses.

As soon as Bai Jinian received (Qin Xiaoping's) letter, he suggested that the letter be published in SHAANXI TONGXUN and be reprinted and distributed to the comrades of the work teams at provincial, prefectural, and country levels.

On 18 December Bai Jinian personnaly wrote a reply to (Qin Xiaoping) warmly praising his noble spirit in caring for the party's cause and urging all party members and cadres in the province to learn from Comrade (Qin Xioping) and to always bear the party's cause in mind.

SHAANXI REPORTS ACHIEVEMENTS IN BIRTH CONTROL

HK210125 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jan 86 p 3

[Report by provincial Statistics Bureau: "Shaanxi Has Scored Great Achievements in Planned Parenthood"]

[Text] The data of a fertility survey prove that since the founding of the PRC, in our province, the marriage rate has been high and the divorce rate has been low, the marriage relations have been stable, the age of women at marriage has risen, the age of women at giving birth to their first child has also risen, the number of children per woman has been reduced year by year, the infant mortality rate has been lowered, knowledge and measures about contraception have been popularized, and the state's policy to encourage a couple to have only one child has had a wide and very successful response.

This survey was carried out by the State Statistical Bureau in our province with the approval of the State Council. According to the survey, 4,084 married women under the age of 50 were selected and investigated using a questionnaire consisting of over 200 questions concerning their marraige, child-birth, pregnancies, and breast-feeding histories, and understanding and application of contraceptive methods. Quite a few of these questions had never been surveyed in our country before.

Marriage relations are steady and the marriage age of women at child-bearing age has to some extent risen. The survey shows that most of the women in our province marry before 35. Only 0.3 percent of women above the age of 35 have not yet married. Marriage relations are stable and the major reason for separation among married couples is death. At present, the rate of divorce and separation is only 0.3 percent. Over the past 30 years, there has been a substantial reduction in the rate of early marriage in our province and a sharp reduction in the proportion of women who get married before 20. Among the women born from 1936-1945, the rate of early marriage is 79.7 percent; among those born from 1951-1955, it dropped to 47.6 percent; and among those born from 1961-1965, it was only 19.3 percent. Among the five age groups from 25-49, the age at marriage varies inversely from 17.9, through 18.3, 19, 20.3, and 22.3. This fully reflects the fact that the state's education to encourage later marriages has already scored achievements in our province.

The number of children per woman has fallen year by year, and the state's policy to encourage only one child per couple has received wide response. Among the married women surveyed, the average number of children is 2.8. Viewed in age groups, the peak period of childbirth for the women from 45-49 years old was the early 1960's and the average number of children for each of them is 4.94. The peak period of childbirth for the women from 40-44 years old was the late 1960's and the average number of children is 4.3, 13 percent lower than that of the preceding group. The data also shows that the women's age at having their first child has also risen and the phenomena of giving birth to children too early has been substantially reduced. Of the women who reached child-bearing age in the 1950's, 43.8 percent gave birth to their first child before reaching 20 years of age and 67.6 percent did so before 22. However, of the women who reached child-bearing age in the 1980's, only 7.6 percent gave birth to their first child before reaching 20 years of age, and only 23.3 percent did so before 22. Over the past 10 years, the average child-bearing age has to some extent fallen and the period between the wedding and giving birth to the first child has also been shortened. The standardized average age for giving birth to the first child in 1984 was 26.

Knowledge about and measures for contraception have been popularized. Judging by the survey data, contraceptive knowledge has been widely popularized among women. On average, a married woman knows 5.2 kinds of contraceptive methods, and 69 percent of married women (with their spouses still alive) have adopted contraceptive methods.

Planned parenthood is a great strategic policy in our country. We should steadfastly implement it. What we should pay attention to is that there is still a certain proportion of early marriages in our provinces, and that the proportion of women giving birth to more than one child is still fairly big though we have reduced [as published] the age of first marriages and the age of giving birth to the first child. Therefore, an urgent task now is to intensify our work of propaganda and education related to planned parenthood, improving our medical and sanitary facilities, and raise the quality of the services related to planned parenthood.

INDIRECT TAIWAN TRADE WITH PRC INCREASES

[Text] Hong Kong, 28 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The Hong Kong Government recently released statistics by the Hong Kong Chamber of Commerce revealing that Taiwanese goods sold to the mainland via Hong Kong in the first three quarters of last year shows a 200 percent increase over the same period in the previous year. The statistics also indicate that last year the mainland became the main market for re-exported Taiwanese goods.

The statistics also show that that mainland is not only the biggest supplier of goods transhipped by Hong Kong to other parts of the world, but also the biggest buyer of goods re-exported by Hong Kong. In the first three quarters of last year, the total value of Chinese goods re-exported via Hong Kong amounted to 48.97 billion yuan or more, constituting more than half of Hong Kong's total re-export trade. Transshipments by Hong Kong to the mainland included goods from the United States, Japan, Taiwan, South Korea, and the FRG.

XI ZHONGXUN AT 'TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS' PARTY

[By reporter Fan Liqing]

[Excerpt] Beijing, 29 Jan (XINHUA) -- The traditional Chinese New Year is approaching. Many people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait have long looked forward to family reunions with eager expectation at the end of every year. The Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, the Central People's Broadcasting Station, and the Central Television Station particularly invited more than 500 Taiwan Compatriots, relatives of people who are now in Taiwan, as well as people from various circles in the capital to a song and dance get-together at the Beijing Hotel this evening. Xi Zhongxun, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, and Peng Chong, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, joined the Taiwan compatriots in celebrating the festival with jubilation.

On behalf of the Taiwan compatriots on the mainland, in Liyun, president of the All-China federation of Taiwan Compatriots, extended new year greetings to their relatives and fellow townsmen in Taiwan and abroad. In her brief speeech at the party, she said: "We are elated at the tremendous achievements made by the 1 billion people on the mainland of the motherland and at their bright future; likewise, we are also delighted at the contributions made by the 19 million compatriots on Taiwan to the progress and prosperity of the island. I hope from the bottom of my heart that the people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait will advance together in revitalizing China and making the country, including Taiwan, more prosperous and that the Taiwan problem will be solved at an early date according to the concept of 'one country, two systems.'"

JOURNAL INTERVIEWS SHENZHEN'S ZOU ERKANG

HK290623 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 160, 16 Jan 86 pp 10-11

[Report "Zou Erkang, Chief Spokesman of the Shenzhen City Government, Answers Questions From KUANG CHIAO CHING Reporter"]

[Text] After completing an interview with Shenzhen Mayor Li Hao, this reporter interviewed Mr Zou Erkang, responsible person and chief press spokesman of Shenzhen City, on some questions in which overseas readers are interested, including: progress of the new currency for the special economic zones [SEZ] ; the use of the management line (the second line) for special zones; tightening up of credits; the prospects for oil wells in the South China Sea; the excessive scale of capital construction in Shenzhen; and so on.

How to Solve the Problem of the Excessive Scale of Capital Construction in Shenzhen?

Shenzhen has drawn a lesson from its excessive scale of capital construction. With regard to this issue, Zou Erkang said: The working conference of the SEZ brought up this question. As far as Shenzhen was concerned, at that time it was trying its best to develop more areas in order to create a better investment evironment. Proceeding from such a point of view, the 30 square kilometers limit for construction, as stipulated in the original plan, was actually expanded to 48 square kilometers. The investment amount of about 6 billion yuan was larger than originally planned. Before the first half of 1985, because the state had not tightened up the money market, we did not discover the seriousness of the problem. The state supported banks to provide loans to us, so we continued to expand our capital construction. Later, when the state tightened up the money market, the banks continuously reduced their loans to us. We lacked funds for continuing capital construction. At that time, we realized the seriousness of the problem. Now, we have paid attention to correcting these defects. We should ensure the completion of those projects that are absolutely necessary, and projects aimed at expanding production. As for those projects which are not absolutely needed, we will put them off for a while.

Why Is Shenzhen so Slow in Using the SEZ Management line?

With regard to the new situation of the management line in the Shenzhen SEZ, Zou Erkang said: The management line project has been basically completed. Why have we not yet officially started using this 80-kilometer management line valued at more than 100 million yuan? There are two factors which should be taken into consideration. 1) After the completion of the line, we assigned frontier guards and customs officers to work in the departments along the line. They need some practice. They have now been undergoing training for 1 year, and are officially qualified to take charge of the management work. 2) Winding up work of certain projects has not yet been completed, including communications lighting, and so on. What is more important is that we have not yet decided when we will implement the measures aimed at tax exemption and reduction. Zou Erkang believes that after using the "second line," the policy for giving preferential treatment to the SEZ will be maintained and normal economic contacts will not be affected. There is no need for us to worry about all this. So-called economic segregation can be avoided.

With regard to the problem of the SEZ currency, Zou Erkang stressed: Gu Mu raised this issue. It is a complicated matter to issue the SEZ currency. It should be carefully considered. Zou believes that it is not a matter of whether the SEZ should issue their currency. Since the SEZ's export-oriented economic policy is different from that of the interior, a relevant financial and currency system is needed. He revealed that this matter has been discussed with the central departments.

The problem of the SEZ currency should be solved whether in the coastal regions or other special regions. Otherwise, the task of the SEZ cannot be accomplished.

We Are Not Afraid of Speculation in the SEZ Currency

When the SEZ issues currency, people might engage in speculation in the currency. Zou Erkang said: Administrative management means should be strengthened in this regard. However, he believes that if some people are engaged in speculation in SEZ currency it will be beneficial to the Shenzhen government. Speculation will increase people's savings deposits in SEZ currency. People may use SEZ currency in exchange for U.S. or Hong Kong dollars according to the amount of the SEZ currency they possess. Renminbi cannot be converted into SEZ currency. Only foreign exchange can be coverted into SEZ currency.

In a word, the problem of currency is complicated and important. The Shenzhen SEZ has been established for over 5 years. It is obvious that this problem should be solved. One of the following measures can be taken in this respect: 1) The status quo is preserved and the circulation of Hong Kong dollars is expanded; 2) use renminbi to replace Hong Kong dollars to stifle the economy; 3) issue a kind of convertible currency to replace the circulation of Hong Kong dollars and renminbi. There is no other solution except the three measures mentioned above.

On a Foreign Exchange Regulating Center

This reporter also asked about the tentative idea of establishing a foreign exchange regulating center and the current situation regarding this.

Zou Erkang said: This is an expedient measure taken in light of the actual conditions in the SEZ. According to foreign exchange administrative law those units which are connected with foreign exchange should settle their accounts with the Bank of China, and convert their foreign exchange into renminbi. However those units which need foreign exchange cannot buy foreign exchange from the Bank of China. Therefore those units which do or do not have foreign exchange have found themselves equally beset with difficulties. Exchanging foreign exchange among individuals is against the foreign exchange administrative law. So a method has been devised to deal with the situation -- the establishment of a foreign exchange regulating center. This center only handles the affairs of state-operated enterprises. It is responsible for solving the problem of surplus and lack of foreign exchange in various enterprises.

At present, this center's business is small. Generally speaking, the number of those who want to buy exceeds those who want to sell.

How Many Hong Kong Dollars Are Circulating in Shenzhen?

This reporter asked: How many Hong Kong dollars are circulating in Shenzhen? Zou Erkang revealed that according to the estimation made in 1984 the amount of Hong Kong dollars circulating in Shenzhen did not exceed HK$300 million. This included Hong Kong dollars possessed by shops, hotels and residents, but did not include those held by production and financial units. These units possess fairly large amounts of Hong Kong dollars.

This reporter asked: Why is the Overseas Chinese city [hua qiao cheng 5478 0294 1004] to be established in Shenzhen rather than in other native Overseas Chinese places (such as Siyi, Fujian and other places)?

Zou Erkang answered: We must consider the geographic superiority of Shenzhen. Although Taishan, Kaiping and Fujian are native Overseas Chinese places, they can only attract Overseas Chinese from those areas. However, Shenzhen can attract Overseas Chinese from the whole world.

In the meantime, it is convenient to travel to and from Shenzhen. The establishment of the Overseas Chinese city has attracted the attention of Overseas Chinese all over the world. This is mainly due to the geographic position of Shenzhen, bordering Hong Kong.

This reporter asked: Will Shenzhen enact a basic law similar to that of Hong Kong?

Zou said: We have enacted regulations concerning special economic zones in Guangdong Province. This is a law concerning the SEZ. Other separate laws and regulations have been promulgated. We have officially reported and submitted a company law to the higher authorities. Zou did not think that Shenzhen would enact a basic law similar to that of Hong Kong. If necessary, a law on the PRC's special economic zones will be enacted, which covers the regulations of the four special economic zones.

A few days before the establishment of the electronics group company, Zou Erkang said: The establishment of the company has demonstrated that Shenzhen has entered a new stage in promoting its contacts with foreign companies, and other provinces and cities at home, and developing its export-oriented industry. In the past, the development of the electronics industry in Shenzhen lacked coordination. The central Electronics Industry Ministry established its own factories. Other provinces also had their own factories. Shenzhen had its own factories. Some factories were run by foreign capital. These factories were not organized, and their products were duplicated and some of the products were outdated. Now, an electronics group company has been set up. The central electronics industry is taking a lead in supporting and developing the electronics industry in light of the needs of the international market. In the future, Shenzhen may also provide electronic devices for Hong Kong, and our prices will be lower than those of Japan and the United States. We will also become a supply base for electronic software for Hong Kong. Through Hong Kong, we will be able to open up the international market. Strengthening our links with Hong Kong's electronics industry is an important part of promoting economic relations between Hong Kong and Shenzhen. In the future, our main purpose will not be to develop assembly-only lines. We will devote our main efforts to producing high-quality components, which will be competitive in the international market. China has an abundant labor force. Our wages and management costs are low. If we cooperate with Hong Kong electronics industry, we will be able to compete with Japan and South Korea.

What Are the Prospects for the Oil Wells in the South China Sea?

This reporter asked: We hear that the prospects for the exploitation of the oil wells in the South China Sea are not so good. Is that true?

Zou Erkang revealed: The problem does not lie in the oil itself. The prospects for the oil and gas wells are very good. However, since the price of oil is dropping in the international market, foreign companies, which have submitted tenders, are slowing down the pace of developing the oil wells.

This reporter asked: The state is now tightening up its credits. How does Shenzhen solve this difficult problem:

Zou Erkang: We completely favor the state action to tighten up credits in order to straighten out the economy. As far as Shenzhen is concerned, although the state is tightening up its credits, it gives us special preferential treatment. For example, restrictions on us have been relaxed in some regards. However, the state has demanded that the scale of our capital construction be restricted to the level of the funds we have raised. In a word, a principle has been set. Certain support will be given to the SEZ, but specific figures have not yet been decided. Our demands will not be satisfied completely. Specific decisions will be made by the state at the meetings concerned.

Structural Reform and the Problem of Management

Lastly, this reporter asked: The recent meeting on the SEZ particularly stressed structural reform and the problem of strengthening management. What is the tentative new plan for Shenzhen in this regard?

Zou Erkang answered: The state hopes that Shenzhen will take a lead in reform. A few years ago, we did some work but, later, we failed to firmly grasp the work. The meeting pointed out our defects. In the future, in accordance with the characteristics of developing a export-oriented and commodity economy set by the state, we will vigorously reform our economic management system and various economic policies. It is necessary to further study the plans for reform.

TICKET SCALPERS REPORTED RAMPANT IN SHANGHAI

["Special Feature" by "special" correspondent Yao Hsin-pao: "Rampant Scalping Activities in Shanghai"]

[Text] Scalping has worsened in Shanghai in the past 2 years. The number of scalpers is amazingly large and their methods are amazing tricky. Authoritative statistics show that in 1984, individuals were found scalping steamer tickets on 424 occasions, but in 1985 it rose to 3,318 occasions, accounting for two-thirds of the total number of such cases in the whole country. The reason the "ticket scalping" business has attacted so many people is, after all, its profitability. Generally speaking, a scalper sells a steamer ticket for 200-300 or even 400-500 percent more than its original price. For example, a fifth class Shanghai-Wenzhou ticket is sold originally for 4-5 yuan, but it is resold by a scalper for about 20 yuan. Among the large number of scalpers, there are not only individuals, but also gangs with great pull and also bosses who monopolize scalping in certain areas. There was a scalping boss named Fang Delin who, with his wife, rented a cottage in the suburbs of Shanghai and employed people to work for them. At the peak of his business, he employed more than 60 scalpers and shared the profits with them. In 1985 alone, Fang and his wife earned several thousand yuan. After they were arrested, they confessed to public security workers that they planned to earn more than 5,000 yuan in 1986 and to better this by 1,200 yuan and thus achieve even greater victory.

As for scalping gangs, they are mostly people who come from the same area. The Jiangsu and Zhejiang gangs are most influential among the gangs doing a brisk business at the passanger transport terminal of Shanghai port. They control 88 percent of the scalpers there, most of whom are laborers working on public projects. The Jiangsu, Zejiang, Anshan, and Shanghai gangs are big gangs there. Scalpers have already moved their business from passenger docks to many other places, including ordinary hotels, bus stops, public toilets, and peasant houses in the suburbs. As scalping becomes increasingly rampant, there are so many forged tickets and expired tickets with changed dates that it is difficult to tell a genuine ticket from a forged one. The objective cause for the rampant scalping is the shortage of tickets for all the 22 shipping lines at Shanghai port. However, scalpers can control the sources of tickets by employing large numbers of idle laborers to line up overnight to buy large numbers of tickets and by purchasing the surplus tickets booked by units. As a result, those who travel on business and for whom "time is money," have to accept their bad luck by buying from scalpers at high prices. The relevant departments have paid a lot of attention to serious scalping activities. In the 2 months since last November, over 600 scalpers have been arrested. Heavy economic punishment has been imposed on them. Recently, there has been an obvious reduction in scalping activities.

U.S. VETOES UN DRAFT RESOLUTION AGAINST ISRAEL

[Text] United Nations, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The United States vetoed a draft resolution at a U.N. Security Council meeting this afternoon which strongly deplored provocative Israeli acts against the sanctity of the sanctuary of the Haram al-Sharif in Jerusalem. The draft, sponsored by Congo, Ghana, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago, and United Arab Emirates, also strongly deplored the continued refusal of Israel to comply with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council.

The draft was submitted after some members of the internal affairs committee reportedly attempted to intrude into Jerusalem Mosque earlier this month. The United States cast the only veto. Thailand abstained. The other thirteen members, including China, France and the United Kingdom, voted for the resolution.

This afternoon's meeting was the last of seven meetings held by the Council at the request of Arab countries to consider the recent Israeli acts of desecration against Islamic holy shrines in Jerusalem. The Council first met on this item on January 21. It was stated in the draft that such acts constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

After the vote, Ambassador Muhammad ibn Husayn al-Shaili, permanent representative of United Arab Emirates to the United Nations, condemned the abuse of veto power by the United States. By using this veto, he pointed out, the U.S. is sending yet another signal to Israel that it can do whatever it wishes in the region in total disregard of international law.

ANALYSIS OF U.S., USSR IN JORDAN-PLO TALKS

OW010856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0836 GMT 1 Feb 86

["News Analysis: U.S., USSR Scramble Behind Jordan-PLO Talks" (by Rui Yingjie) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Amman, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Amman has become a small playground for a match between the two superpowers, the U.S. and the Soviet Union, both trying to exert their influences on recent summit talks here between King Husayn of Jordan and PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat.

On January 26, the day the talks began, the Soviet ambassador to Jordan met with 'Arafat. At the ambassador's request, they met again three days later after 'Arafat ended his fourth round of talks with the king. A letter from the Soviet leadership was reportedly delivered to 'Arafat during the meeting. In the five days from January 25 to 29, the Soviet ambassador, again at his request, met separately with the Jordanian speaker of the Senate, the foreign minister and speaker of the Chamber of Deputies.

Before the crucial Amman talks, PLO leaders met in Baghdad where they were briefed by Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Deaprtment who had just concluded a visit to Moscow in early January. The Soviet leadership seems suddenly to have become very enthusiastic in its relations with the PLO recently. According to press reports, it has promised to help mediate relations between the rival groups of the PLO on the condition that the PLO will not take part in any Mideast peace process sponsored by the U.S., or in which the Soviet Union is barred from playing a vital role. It is now clear that the Soviet Union is competing with the U.S. to seize the sponsorship of the Mideast peace process.

When the talks started U.S. Assistant State Secretary Roscoe Suddarth came to Amman and met with King Husayn to discuss how to "revive the Mideast peace process." Informed sources said that he would remain here to follow the developments of the talks "right on the spot". The U.S. of course, will not retreat from the Middle East. U.S. Assistant State Secretary Richard Murphy was sent to Europe at the beginning of the year where he had talks with King Husayn and Israeli Prime Minister Shim'on Peres.

So a new round of one upmanship between the two superpowers has started, and it is a face-to-face confrontation. It was not in a congenial atmosphere that the Jordan-PLO talks were not held in a congenial atmosphere and the tricks played by the two superpowers behind the scenes have exacerbated the tension.

ROUNDUP VIEWS PROSPECTS AT VIENNA TROOP TALKS

OW011650 Beijing XINHUA in English 1034 GMT 1 Feb 86

["Round-up: Are Prospects for Vienna Troop Reduction Talks Better?" (by Li Chunliang) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Vienna, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The 38th round of the Mutual and Balanced Forces Reduction negotiations in central Europe resumed after a winter recess with both sides optimistic about progress after 12 years of deadlock in negotiations.

On the eve of negotiations which resumed yesterday, optimism emerged as a result of the U.S. -Soviet summit meeting in Geneva last November at which U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev promised to "accelerate the work" on arms reduction, and the recent Soviet proposal for complete elimination of nuclear weapons by the end of the century. All this has aroused a new hope for all the peace-loving peoples in the world for disarmament, especially for the people in central Europe where the two big military blocs -- the North Atlantic Treaty Organizaiton (NATO) and the Warsaw Pact -- confront each other.

Though negotiators of the both sides were optimistic at yesterday's session, saying that tangible progress could be made for signing an agreement on reduction of conventional forces in central Europe, they were still far apart on the crucial question of acceptable verification measures. At yesterday's session, NATO presented a 28-page document detailing its latest initiative for an agreement on U.S. and Soviet troop reductions, adopting the same model put forward by the Warsaw Pact last February. Negotiators from both alliances noted it was the first time the two sides at the 19-nation talks were adopting the same basic approach to an agreement.

Commenting on the document, Warsaw Pact spokesman Nikolai Neiland said the head of the Soviet delegation indicated the Soviet proposals of February 14 last year for initial Soviet-U.S. troop cutbacks and for a subsequent "no increase commitment" had been generally well received by the West. He quoted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Mikhaylov as telling delegates, "this is the first time we have seen the outline of a framework" for further reduction talks.

Speaking on behalf of the NATO countries, the head of the Dutch delegation, Ambassador Hein Van de Mortel, said that disarmament negotiations in central Europe have reached a turning point. However, both sides cautioned that a lot of bargaining was still necessary before an initial agreement can be reached on token Soviet and U.S. troop withdrawals and on a mutual freeze on ground force levels.

A Soviet negotiator warned at yesterday's session that people should not pin too much hope on this round of negotiations. He stressed that the Western proposal has apparently gone too far with so many monitoring and verification measures. Therefore, the Warsaw Pact countries cannot accept the proposal.

Negotiators from the West said that in his recent proposal on disarmament, Gorbachev expressed the Soviet readiness to accept "reasonable verification" measures. They believed that Gorbachev's statement augurs well for an agreement. However, Dutch Ambassador Mortel said yesterday that whether Gorbachev's new proposal offers a solution to the pending problems between the East and the West on the reduction of troops in central Europe will depends on the East.

It appears that things will not go as easily as some people predict. But one thing is certain that the problems left over from the past 12 years cannot be solved in a few months. Observers here believed that what progress can be made in this round of negotiations still remains to be seen.

NEW HONG KONG VENTURE INVESTMENT FUND ESTABLISHED

OW311738 Beijing XINHUA in English 1636 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Hong Kong, January 31 (XINHUA) -- A private venture investment fund dedicated to the transfer of high technology to Hong Kong and the Chinese mainland has been established here. The fund, called the Hong Kong Venture Investment Trust (HKVIT), derives its sources from companies and individuals in the United States, Hong Kong, Europe and other areas.

Speaking at a business luncheon here today, Christopher Leong, managing director of the Hong Kong Techno-Ventures (the local manager of the fund), said that the fund plans to invest 22 million U.S. dollars within the next three years and, in tandem, perhaps another 50 million from joint venture partners, co-investors and entrepreneurs, and establish over 20 manufacturing entities in industries new to this region. "The bulk of the investments will be made in Hong Kong and the Chinese mainland in the establishment of manufacturing facilities, research and development capabilities and marketing organizations," he said. "Some investments will be made in technologically advanced countries to facilitate target companies to transfer part of their operations to this region," he added.

Companies which the HKVIT seeks to attract to Hong Kong and the Chinese mainland include manufacturers of electronic and electromechanically based products, assemblies and systems for use in office automation, telecommunications, factory automation, and medical and biotechnology applications.

In partnership with the Hong Kong Techno-Ventures as sponsors and managers of the fund is the Advent International Corporation of the United States. It is one of the largest venture capital networks in the world, with activities spanning 12 countries and funds of over one billion U.S. dollars under management. According to Advent Vice-President Thomas R. Armstrong, Advent's partnership with the Hong Kong Techno-Ventures is, in the long term, aimed at helping Hong Kong develop and expand its position as an attractive, profit-oriented high technology manufacturing and product development center.

PENTAGON PANEL RECOMMENDS MIDGEMAN MISSILE

[Text] Washington, February 2 (XINHUA) -- A special Pentagon advisory panel has concluded that development of the Midgetman missile would make American nuclear forces more capable of surviving a Soviet attack, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today. The panel, made up of scientists and strategic weapons experts, plans to report to the Pentagon that the United States should start full-scale development of the Midgetman, a small mobile intercontinental missile that has been under study since 1983.

The small, single-warhead missile would be deployed on armored launching trucks on military bases in the Western states. The vehicles could be dispersed to scattered sites inside the sprawling bases in an emergency. The United States has generally supported developing the Midgetman, with expenditures for it included in the fiscal 1987 budget. That budget proposal will be sent to Congress next Wednesday. However, critics in Congress and at the Pentagon said the Midgetman would be too costly or would not be an effective deterrent to a Soviet attack. It is estimated that by buying 50 more of the huge MX missiles, with 10 warheads each, the Pentagon could save 20 billion to 30 billion dollars, as against buying 500 single-warhead Midgetman missiles with the same power. The United States has proposed at the arms negotiations in Geneva that the United States and the Soviet Union agree to a ban on deployment of all mobile intercontinental ballistic missiles.

SHUTTLE TRAGEDY DELAYS U.S., FOREIGN PROJECTS

[Text] Beijing, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The explosion of the space shuttle Challenger sparks debate on future space programs both inside and outside the United States. According to reports reaching here today, a NASA official said that the loss of the space shuttle Challenger on January 28 will affect the NASA planned 15 flights this year. An expert of the Federation of American Scientists said that it could delay U.S. manned space flights for at least six months to one year.

Three major space missions with critical timing will likely be seriously postponed. Two are the launches of the Galileo Jupiter exploring craft and the U.S.-European Ulysses solar probe, which will use Jupiter's gravity to put it on course in May. The other is to send the 1.1-billion-U.S.-dollar space telescope -- the most important equipment for scientific research so far -- into space by a shuttle. In addition, ultraviolet (UV) instruments in the Astro UV Observatory will be carried by the shuttle Columbia into orbit on March 6 as the NASA plans to intercept Halley's Commet for European and Soviet scientists.

U.S. Defense Department officials said on January 29 that the loss of the space shuttle Challenger will seriously impact the future Pentagon launches of secret military payloads and experimental packages into the Earth's orbit. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said the disaster would delay some of the "star wars" experiments. Space shuttles have carried out several top-secret military missions including conducting laser reflection experiment and releasing various experimental satellites for defense systems. Pentagon officials said that during the shuttle flight freeze period, the department will arrange for launching military satellites by using other vessels such as the old Titan and Minuteman.

The shuttle disaster touched off a nationwide discussion and some criticisms. But a recent opinion poll based on interviews with more than 500 people still shows a strong support of Americans for the space shuttle program. According to the poll released on January 29, 79 percent supported the program, with 16 percent opposing and 5 percent having no opinion. Seventy-two percent of people interviewed preferred keeping civilians included on shuttle crews, while 22 percent said "no" and 5 percent had no opinion.

People are also talking about the disaster's impact on other countries' space programs. French Government leaders and the French press shared the view that space exploration entails huge losses, but space researches should not be affected as a result. French Research and Technology Minister Hubert Curien said his country should draw conclusions from the incident, but will continue its advance. The "Hermes" plan should not be delayed as a result, he noted.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said in a statement on Wednesday that sacrifices caused by the quest of knowledge will continue and that new knowledge sometimes demands sacrifices of the bravest and the best. It was reported that Britain's first astronaut, Nigel Mood, will fly to Houston on schedule for training in the U.S. shuttle program.

The Federal German press predicted that the shuttle explosion will delay the launch of a Germany-made space lab originally planned for next month. Federal German Research Minister Heinz Riesenhuber indicated that his country will postpone plans for recruiting six new astronauts. However, he added, Federal Germany will continue with the recruitment, and Europe will continue to participate in U.S. plans for launching space stations in the next decade.

The Japan Communications Satellite Company attached great importance to the explosion of Challenger, and called an emergency meeting on Wednesday for a detailed analysis of the incident, as the company is planning to launch a communication satellite aboard a U.S. space shuttle. Indonesia's Post, Tourism and Telecommuications Minister Ahmad Tahir said on Wednesday that the explosion of the U.S. space shuttle Challenger will not change his country's plans to send an Indonesian astronaut into space on another American shuttle craft.

MILITARY OPERATIONS OFF LIBYA CONCLUDED

[Text] Cairo, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. aircraft carrier flight operations off the Libyan coast ended last night but the warships of the U.S. Sixth Fleet will remain in the central Mediterranean region, the MIDDLE EAST NEWS AGENCY quoted American sources as saying today.

During the week-long military exercises, U.S. aircraft from the carriers Coral Sea and Saratoga flew off the Libyan coast in the area within the commercial airline traffic under the control of the flight center of the Tripoli airport, according to earlier press reports. Libya and other Arab countries of the Arab League have condemned it as a military provocation against Libya.

Last Saturday, Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi boarded a Libyan Navy patrol boat and sailed out into the Gulf of Sidra to show his defiance of the U.S. military threat. There have also been public gatherings in Tripoli and other parts of Libya denouncing the U.S. military intimidation.

MOSCOW'S 'DECEPTIVE PRETENSE' ON AFGHANISTAN

[Commentary by Li Wenzheng: "Moscow's 'Relaxation' and Afghan Realities"]

[Text] Last November, after the U.S.-Soviet meeting in Geneva, there was a continual stream of reports that the Soviet Union was apparently prepared to consider some "relaxation" regarding a political settlement of the Afghan problem. At the time, Moscow indeed assumed a variety of postures. However, it is now more than 2 months since that meeting and there has been no sign of the hoped for "relaxation." On the contrary, the essence of this posture has been exposed with ever greater clarity.

Before the U.S.-Soviet summit, the Soviet Union expressed willingness to discuss the question of withdrawing troops from Afghanistan. At the time of the summit, Soviet leaders again leaked the information that they were willing to withdraw troops from Afghanistan and that a political solution could be effected under UN auspices. They also said that an international guarantee and troop withdrawal could proceed simultaneously. This was unprecedented enthusiasm on Moscow's part in talking about a political settlement of the Afghan problem. However, this "relaxed" posture has still not been translated into action, and the matter remains a blank sheet of paper. As Ishaq Gaylani, leader of the Afghan National Islamic Front, pointed out on 28 January, Moscow is just talking about withdrawing troops from Afghanistan without doing anything about it.

In fact, what has accompanied this "relaxation" is actually intensified military activity on the Afghan battlefield. At the beginning of winter, the Soviet Army adopted tactics such as assaults on key points and close-quarter shock attacks in stepping up its attacks on the Afghan guerrillas' effective strength. At the beginning of January, the Soviet Army dispatched a large number of infantry, covered by aircraft, to intrude onto the Salang Highway north of Kabul. The Soviet Army also launched new attacks around Kabul, in the Qandahar region, and the Panjsher Valley. At the same time, the Soviet Army is preparing for its spring offensive. According to foreign reports, there is evidence of a "notable increase" in the number of weapons shipped into Afghanistan in recent weeks. These include grenade launchers, cannon, and other heavy weapons, together with advanced helicopters and ground attack aircraft. Can this series of moves, which intensify the war, be said to mean the Soviet Union is preparing to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan? Where is the "relaxation?" The facts prove that while talking about a desire for a political solution, Moscow actually wants to settle the problem by force.

A few days ago, the Karmal regime's foreign minister announced that even if a method of reaching a peaceful settlement were found, several thousand Soviet military advisers would remain in Afghanistan. This shows beyond any doubt the cards of "relaxation": The Soviet Union wants to hang on in Afghanistan for a long time.

It should be noted that recently there have been more changes in the pitch of the Soviet tune on the Afghan problem. Moscow has again loudly played the old refrain of "guarantee first, withdrawal afterwards." The Soviet leaders reiterated at a session of the Supreme Soviet held not long after the U.S.-Soviet summit that the Soviet Union will not unconditionally withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. After that, the Soviet foreign minister repeated when meeting the Karmal regime's foreign minister that "a political settlement of the Afghan problem can only be brought about with the complete cessation of external armed and other intervention and a guarantee that this will not be repeated."

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Kapitsa's words were even more barefaced: He declared that the Soviet Union would not make the slighest concession on the Afghan issue. It is very clear that the Soviet Army has committed aggression against Afghanistan, and the Afghan people, unwilling to be enslaved, rose in resistance. The Soviet Union has said that it will only consider a political solution when the Afghan people cease resistance. This not only turns the issue upside down, it is actually aimed at quenching the angry flames of the Afghan people's resistance so that the Soviet Union may go on controlling Afghanistan for a long time. How can this be right? If people link all these things together, it is not hard to see that there is absolutely no relaxation in the Soviet stand.

The recent sixth round of indirect talks on the Afghan issue also provided people with facts regarding this aspect. During the talks, the Karmal regime only unofficially came up with a document on a so-called "troop withdrawal scheme," and insisted on holding direct talks with Pakistan before discussing a specific troop withdrawal timetable. The calculation of the Soviet Union and the Karmal regime is that as long as the latter is formally recognized, the countries concerned will have no choice but to undertake their so-called duty of nonintervention. Then, under the precondition of first guaranteeing no intervention, the question of troop withdrawal can be discussed by and by. The matter remains essentially the same despite apparent changes: There is to be no troop withdrawal.

The Soviet leaders had reasons for leaking information about "relaxation" during the U.S.-Soviet summit. The star wars plan and the Afghan problem caught people's attention amid the fierce arguments at the Geneva meeting. Public opinion held that while confronting the United States head-on over the star wars plan, the Soviet Union showed a little optimism over the Afghan problem, one of its aims being to put pressure on the United States and demand that the United States relax somewhat over star wars. It is evident from this that Moscow's "relaxation" was a kind of posture right from the start. However, people have been able to see from developments that this posture is nothing but a deceptive pretense.

PRAVDA DENIES U.S. CHARGES ON PDRY CONFLICT

[Text] Moscow, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The official Soviet newspaper PRAVDA today denounced the U.S. charge that Moscow was directly involved in the civil strife in Democratic Yemen as a "canard," saying the Soviet Union wanted reconciliation among the warring factions. PRAVDA was reacting to a statement by U.S. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb Monday accusing Moscow of siding with the rebels in Democratic Yemen's civil strife that erupted on January 13 in this Red Sea country.

PRAVDA criticized what it called "the fashion" among American officials to look for "Moscow's hand" in conflicts that break out in the Third World. The paper attributed this U.S. attitude to its "need of the propaganda cover for the doctrine of 'new globalism' proclaimed by Washington." "According to that doctrine," the paper continued, "the United States has a right and must interfere in internal affairs of all countries where it has 'vital interests.'" PRAVDA, the leading Soviet newspaper, also accused some of the Western media of trying to 'confuse the issue, to distort the Soviet Union's stand to allege that it backs one of the sides." In fact, it said, Moscow has taken a "clear-cut stand" and "has called for an end to the armed clashes, for reconciliation of the sides, and resolutely declared against any outside interference in the South Yemeni affairs."

BEIJING COMMENTARY REJECTS SRV DIALOGUE PROPOSAL

OW011300 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1400 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Station commentator Ya Ming's commentary: "The True Nature of the Vietnamese Authorities' Proposal To Hold Dialogues"]

[Text] The Vietnamese authorities recently renewed their proposal to hold dialogues to create the impression that they stand ready to peacefully settle the Cambodian issue. The 24 January communique of the so-called conference of the three Indochinese countries' foreign ministers is a typical example.

The communique proposes the holding of the following three dialogues: First, a dialogue between the Phnom Penh puppet administration and the opposing factions, excluding the Pol Pot group, to achieve national conciliation; second, a dialogue between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries to discuss the problem of peace in Southeast Asia; and third, a dialogue between Vietnam and China to improve their bilateral relations. The Hanoi press has noisily claimed that the proposal for these dialogues reflects Vietnam's goodwill. From a formal analysis of these dialogues, however, everyone can see that this is quite untrue.

First of all, let us consider the first dialogue. The Phnom Penh puppet administration, buttressed by Vietnamese bayonets, is entirely illegal. Without Vietnam's support, it could not survive for even a single day. As for the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK], it is a legal administration recognized by the United Nations and by almost all countries in the world. In defiance of this objective fact, the communique proposes a dialogue between the Heng Samrin administration and the opposing factions, excluding the Pol Pot group, aimed at prompting a universal de facto recognition and legalization of this puppet administration and also at undermining the CGDK's solidarity. Such a proposal reveals only the Vietnamese authorities' cunning and deceitful scheme, not their goodwill at all.

Let us now analyze the dialogue between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries on the problem of peace in Southeast Asia as mentioned in the communique. The Vietnamese authorities have dispatched more than 100,000 troops to invade Cambodia and undermine peace in Southeast Asia. To restore and safeguard this peace, Vietnamese troops must be withdrawn from Cambodia immediately and unconditionally. However, the communique completely ignores this fact. Moreover, it states that if an agreement cannot be reached on the issue of checking the so-called foreign forces' interference in Southeast Asia, the Cambodian issue cannot be settled for good. This argument is quite similar to Vietnam's previous argument that the Cambodian issue cannot be settled unless the Chinese threat is eradicated. The Vietnamese authorities' objective is to deliberately trouble the waters in order to create a pretext for them to continue their invasion of Cambodia.

Let us then analyze the dialogue between China and Vietnam mentioned in the communique. As everyone knows, past Sino-Vietnamese relations were very good for a relatively long period. They have worsened and reached their present stage because of the Vietnamese authorities' resentment against China's support for the Cambodian people's just struggle against Vietnamese aggression and because of their continual hostile activities and provocations in Sino-Vietnamese border areas. The Chinese Government has repeatedly expressed its desire to improve relations between the two countries when Vietnam stops its invasion of Cambodia and its resistance against China. However, the Hanoi rulers have no desire to change their stand at all. In this case, the Vietnamese authorities' dialogue with China is worthless, as everyone can see without any further explanation.

From this analysis, one can see that the proposal for dialogues as mentioned in the communique of the conference of the three Indochinese countries' foreign ministers does not mean at all that Vietnam has changed its stand regarding its invasion of Cambodia, or has presented anything new. Vietnam's immediate withdrawal of troops from Cambodia is the only key to a solution to the Cambodian issue, as well as a touchstone to indicate whether or not the Vietnamese authorities have any desire for peace. If they categorically refuse to withdraw troops, such proposed dialogues will be quite meaningless even if they take place.

MILITARY RESPONDS TO VIETNAMESE INTRUSIONS

OW011654 Beijing XINHUA in English 1640 GMT 1 Feb 86

["Frontier Guards Counterattack Viets" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese troops have intruded into Chinese territory in Yunnan Province on 33 occasions since January 1 and fired 40,000 rounds of shells, killing and wounding 65 Chinese civilians and soldiers, according to military sources here today.

In the border area of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region to the east of Yunnan, Vietnamese troops have bombarded 19 villages on many occasions this year, destroying scores of houses and wounding a number of villagers, the same sources said. On January 10, Chinese frontier guards and members of the local militia in Guangxi wiped out Vietnamese troops who intruded into Fangcheng and Napo Counties. On January 28, Chinese frontier guards stationed in the Laoshan area of Yunnan Province on the China-Vietnam border counterattacked and wiped out units of Vietnamese troops entrenched in mountainous areas.

SRV MASSING TROOPS ALONG THAI-CAMBODIAN BORDER

OW021102 Beijing XINHUA in English 1030 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 2 (XINHUA) -- Hanoi has massed an increasing number of troops and weapons along the Kampuchean-Thai border, according to a report to the Supreme Command of the Thai Armed Forces available here today. The report said that the Thai military last week detected the build-up of Vietnamese military strength in the areas that straddle the frontiers of Thailand, Laos and Kampuchea.

It was predicted that the Vietnamese might attack Kampuchean resistance forces along the border in areas opposite Chong Bok of Nam Yune District of Ubon Ratchathani Province in Thailand. A Thai senior security official earlier warned that the Vietnamese might mount a large-scale border offensive early this month. The official attributed the delay of the current dry-season offensive by the Vietnamese to intensified military activities of the resistance in the interior.

The report also disclosed that the Vietnamese troops and transported a large quantity of barbed wire and steel bars from the central area of Kampuchea to the border opposite Ta Phraya District of Prachin Buri Province in eastern Thailand. The construction materials are likely to be used for building barricades along the border to prevent resistance forces from transporting supplies to the interior, the report said.

The supreme command also reported that the Vietnamese were repairing roads winding through Malai and Mark Huen mountains where the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea is still active.

LIAOWANG ON PHILIPPINE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

HK310851 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 pp 27-28

[Special dispatch from Manila by contributing reporter Wang Yongsun: "Presidential Election Campaign in the Philippines Is Intensifying"]

[Text] A presidential election is to be held on 7 February in the Philippines, and an intense and heated presidential election campaign is now unfolding throughout the country. This election will be the most important one held in the Philippines since World War II, and its outcome will have great significance for the development of the situation in the country.

The current Philippine Constitution stipulates a 6-year term for the presidency. President Marcos's current term of office is to expire in June next year and he had declared again and again that the date of the presidential election would not be moved up. However, he suddenly changed his mind and announced in early November last year an early presidential election. In Marcos' words, he wants to gain a renewed mandate from the people through the election with the aim of dispelling doubts at home and abroad about his policies.

The Political and Economic Background of Advancing the Date of the Presidential Election

Since the assassination of former opposition leader Benigno Aquino in August 1983, the Philippines has faced a serious political and economic crisis. Antigovernment political movements have surged forward, opposition forces have risen drastically, and armed anti-government forces are also increasing. The Marcos administration is faced with a serious challenge.

The deterioration of the economy has aggravated the turbulent political situation. In the past 2 years, the Philippines' GNP decreased continuously -- the country suffered a 5.5 percent drop in GNP in 1984 and a 4 percent drop in 1985. Official statistics show that the country's foreign debt amounted to $26 billion and the interest payment totaled $2.2 billion last year, almost equal to half of the country's export revenues. In 1985, apart from a slight growth in agriculture, the performance of the other economic sectors was disappointing, with industry suffering a 10 percent decrease in its output. A large number of plants were closed and unemployment soared. It is reported that current unemployment has reached 15 percent, or around 3 million people. The standard of living is getting poorer and poorer, grievances are spreading, demonstrations and workers' and students' strikes are frequent events. Due to the turbulent political situation, foreign investors have hesitated to start any new projects, and the government's economic restoration program is far from being fulfilled. Under such circumstances, the opposition parties have long been urging Marcos to step down and demanding an early presidential election.

The United States has considerable economic interests in the Philippines and maintains its two largest overseas military bases there: Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay Naval Base. The turbulent political situation in the Philippines will have a direct impact on U.S. global strategic interests. The United States hopes the presidential election will help to stabilize the Philippine situation so that it can retain these important footholds in the Far East. Therefore, the United States has constantly exercised influence on the development of the situation in the Philippines. In October last year, President Reagan sent his special envoy, Paul Laxalt, to the Philippines to hand a signed letter to Marcos, emphasizing that a fair and free election was "an important approach to the relaxation of the tense situation."

Sources concerned pointed out: This letter had an important influence on Marcos' agreement to advance the presidential election. In fact, an early election is not absolutely unfavorable to the ruling party because the political and economic situation may possibly be further aggravated as time goes by.

Unification of the Opposition Factions

The opposition factions in the Philippines, playing a more and more active role after the assassination of Aquino in 1983, have developed into a force not to be ignored in the country's political arena. In the past 2 years, the multitude of parties and organizations have dissolved and regrouped many times, and have now formed into two major factions. The first of these, with the United Nationalist Democratic Organization (Unido) as the core, nominated the organization's Chairman Laurel as its presidential candidate. The second, with the recently founded Laban ng Bayan [People's Struggle] as its core, nominated Mrs Corazon Aquino as its presidential candidate. These two major factions failed to agree on joint nomination of a presidential candidate until just 1 hour before the deadline for the registration of candidates on the night of 11 December last year. Mrs Aquino and Laurel announced they had reached an agreement: Mrs Aquino was to be nominated as the Unido presidential candidate while Laurel was to run as her partner in the election campaign. The two major factions later reached unanimity on a joint minimum program. The unification of the two factions has greatly inspired members of the opposition camp and their supporters.

The present presidential and vice presidential candidates nominated by the opposition are the strongest combination it can provide for the election. This is because Mrs Aquino has a certain degree of appeal among the masses and, furthermore, she is supported by almost all the opposition leaders, while Laurel is a senior politican, backed by a pretty well-organized party with organizations spread all over the country. The unification of these two figures has constituted a serious threat to Marcos and the ruling party.

It is reported that both the highly influential Philippine Catholic Church and the United States played a key role in bringing about the unification of the two major opposition factions. On 8 December last year, Laurel and Mrs Aquino separately announced that their negotiations had broken down and the two factions would separately nominate their own presidential candidates, and negotiations in the following 2 days reaped no results. The two figures did not achieve unification until 11 December, after Philippine Jaime Cardinal Sin and some people representing U.S. interests separately held talks with them.

The Ruling Party Is Making Vigorous Efforts To Turn the Tide

The ruling party, the Kilusang Bagong Lipunan, and the armed forces have always been two major pillars backing the Marcos regime. In the face of the opposition's challenge and the dissident tendencies shown by some people within the party, President Marcos selected former Foreign Minister Arturo Tolentino as his running mate. The latter openly criticized Marcos and his policies on many occasions in the past and is regarded as an opponent within the party. In March last year, he was removed from the post of foreign minister because of differences of opinion between him and Marcos. People believe that Marcos, in selecting Tolentino as his running mate, wanted to mitigate factional conflicts within the ruling party and add some "democratic" decorations by offering a greater choice, so that he can be stronger in the competition with the opposition for votes.

Meanwhile, taking the opportunity of the presidential election campaign, some local leaders belonging to the ruling party are scrambling hard to garner local leading power and funds to run the election campaign.

It is reported that the struggle between these local leaders has led to a crisis, with splits within ruling party organizations in at least 10 provinces; and three governors and some local city and town officials belonging to the ruling party have rebelled against Marcos and crossed over to the opposition's side. The central leadership of the ruling party is taking action to prevent this trend from developing further.

The Army's attitude will play an essential part in the development of the situation as a whole during and after the presidential election. Recently, different factions have emerged within the Army. Marcos has admitted that Armed Forces Chief of Staff Fabian Ver and Deputy Chief of Staff Fidel Ramos are at odds. The development of a reform movement within the Army also indicates that discontent is growing. Not long ago, a group of Filipino military officers undergoing training and on leave in the United States declared they were joining the opposition, an event having great repercussions in the Philippines. Under such circumstances, Marcos reinstated General Ver, who had been connected with the assassination of Aquino, to his former post of Armed Forces chief of staff. As General Ver is a very influential figure in the Army, this decision was regarded as an important act for Marcos in strengthening his control over the Army.

The U.S. Attitude Toward the Philippine Presidential Election

The United States welcomes an early Philippine presidental election but has shown doubts about the possibility of a "fair" election and has been putting pressure on the Philippines. Some high-ranking U.S. officials declared: If the presidential election was found to be unfair, the United States would reduce its aid to the Philippines substantially. Recently, the U.S. Government and Congress have sent a continuous stream of people for so-called observation or, more precisely, supervision of the election in the Philippines.

President Marcos and some ministers recently made repeated statements accusing the United States of intervening in the Philippines' internal affairs by supporting the opposition in the presidential election. Several progovernment Manila newspapers also carried editorials criticizing the role of the United States.

Observers here hold that it is difficult to tell at the moment whether the United States has made up its mind to withhold its support for Marcos and to stand by the side of the opposition. But it is quite clear that the United States, which used to support Marcos, has definitely changed its attitude in the past 2 years.

It Is Hard To Predict the Outcome of the Election

Now that the presidential election is drawing near, the campaign is intensifying daily. As the date for voting approaches, speculation if rife about the outcome of the election. More people hold that although the opposition parties have shown great strength and impetus in the election campaign, it will not be easy for them to compete with the ruling party because of internal contradictions, dispersion of forces, and unsound grass-roots organizations. On the other hand, President Marcos still enjoys many favorable conditions. He has been ruling the country for more than 2 decades, administering both the central and local organs, and, what is more, he controls the Army. He has sufficient funds, manpower, and a complete system of central and grass-roots organizations at his disposal for the election campaign. So he will surely try by every means to ensure the victory of the ruling party in the election.

While the campaign is intensifying, rumors are spreading like wildfire. Recently the government has denied the rumor that the decision on an early presidential election would be annulled. Some people are worried about the possibility of the restoration of martial law or a military coup d'etat. All this reflects people's doubts and misgivings about the changing political situation.

Some people have predicted: The situation in the Philippines will hardly stabilize no matter which side, the candidates of the ruling party or those of the opposition, wins the election. The struggle between different political forces will continue even after the presidential election, and the Army's attitude merits particular attention.

HONG KONG PRELATE NOTES IMPROVED SITUATION

OW011712 Beijing XINHUA in English 1636 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong Catholic Bishop John B. Wu said here today that China's Guangdong Province has made improvements in implementing the policy of freedom of religion.

Speaking at a press conference here, the bishop said that in the province many churches have been renovated and reopened, priests and nuns have returned to serve their proper churches, church property is gradually being handed back.

Bishop Wu had just returned from an 11-day visit to the province at the head of a 7-member delegation. He said the delegation had seen the social and other developments in the province. They exchanged frank and sincere opinions with local officials on the situation of religious freedom in these places, he added.

This is the first official contact and dialogue between the Catholic Hong Kong Diocese and Guangdong Province, the bishop said. "Both parties believe that this is a good start and should develop and continue," he added. "The Hong Kong Catholic Diocese, because of its geographical position and at this historical time, is in a unique position to be a 'bridge' to promote and foster better communications between our country and the world, and between the church in China and the universal church following Christ's example of unity and communion," he noted.

The bishop and the first Catholic delegation from Hong Kong led by him visited Beijing and Shanghai in March last year.

QIAN QICHEN MEETS GROUP FOR NUCLEAR-FREE PACIFIC

OW311600 Beijing XINHUA in English 1434 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Representatives of a group working for a South Pacific nuclear free zone left here today after consulting with Chinese officials. Trying to rid that part of the world of nuclear weapons, a delegation from the South Pacific Forum -- which has 13 member countries and regions -- has been meeting with the five nuclear powers.

After its arrival in Beijing on January 28, the delegation, led by group Chairman David Sadpeir, met with officials, including Vice Foreign Ministers Qian Qichen and Zhu Qizhen. According to one Chinese official, the group explained the South Pacific nuclear-free zone treaty and the three draft protocols to the treaty. "The atmosphere was friendly," the official said. The delegation to China included representatives from Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, the Cook Islands and the Solomon Islands.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE ON SUDANESE DELEGATION'S VISIT

[XINHUA report: "Text of the Press Communique on a Senior Sudanese Delegation's Visit to China"]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Jan (XINHUA) -- The Information Department of the Foreign Ministry today issued a press communique on a senior Sudanese delegation's visit to China. The following is the full text of the communique:

At the invitation of the Chinese Government, a senior Sudanese delegation led by Lieutenant General Muhammad Tawfiq Khalil, member of the Transitional Military Council and chief of staff of the Sudanese Armed Forces, paid an official visit to China from 11-19 January. Members of the delegation included Major General Hamadah 'Abd al-'Azim Hamadah, member of the Transitional Military Council; the minister of trade and supply; the minister of construction and housing; the vice foreign minister; and other senior officials. During the visit, Lieutenant General Tawfiq met with Vice President Ulanhu, Premier Zhao Ziyang, and Chief of General Staff Yang Dezhi, and held talks with Vice Premier Tian Jiyun. Responsible persons of the relevant departments of both sides also held separate talks. All these talks were conducted in a sincere and friendly atmosphere. Lieutenant General Tawfiq and his party visited Beijing, Xiamen, and Guangzhou. During its stay in China, the senior Sudanese delegation was warmly welcomed and graciously received by the Chinese Government and people. This has fully shown the profound and traditional friendship which exists between the two countries.

The two sides state that China and the Sudan hold identical or similar views on a number of major international issues. The Sudanese side has briefed the Chinese side on its internal situation and its internal and foreign policies.

The Chinese side highly appraises the independent, nonaligned, and good-neighborly policy of the Sudanese Government, and the unremitting efforts it has made to uphold the unity of the people of various Arab countries, to support the just struggles of the Palestinian people, southern African people, and the Namibian people, to combat floods and provide disaster relief, and tc defend national unity.

The Sudanese side enthusiastically praises the achievements of the Chinese people in their socialist modernization program. The sides sides feel satisfied with the continuous development of friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries based on the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence. They unanimously hold that the continuous consolidation and development of such relations tally not only with the interests of the peoples of the two countries, but also with the unity and cooperation of the nations and people of the Third World. The two sides are determined to exert concerted efforts to promote their cooperative relations in the political, economic, and cultural fields and others to a new stage. In Beijing, the two sides signed a 1986 trade protocol, an agreement on the establishment of a Sino-Sudanese mixed committee on economic and trade cooperation, a protocol on economic and technical cooperation, and a Sino-Sudanese summary of the talks on cultural and educational cooperation.

During this stay in China, Lieutenant General Tawfiq conveyed to President Li Xiannian a letter from General Al-Dhahab, chairman of the Transitional Military Council. Lieutenant General Tawfiq has invited Vice Premier Tian Jiyun to visit the Sudan, and the latter has happily accepted the invitation. The date of the visit will be decided through diplomatic channels. Lieutenant Tawfiq expressed his heartfelt gratitude for the enthusiastic welcome and cordial hospitality shown to him and other members of the delegation during their stay in China.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE LAUNCH REPORTED

OW022200 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Report by station editor (Liu Changle) on 1 February launch of a telecommunications and broadcasting satellite -- recorded]

[Text] Listeners: Our country launched a telecommunications and broadcasting satellite for practical use at 2036 [1236 GMT] on 1 February. Prior to the satellite launch, this radio station sent four reporters to the launch center in Xichang, Sichuan; the Astronautical Measuring and Control Center in Xian, Shanxi; and a measuring fleet in the Pacific Ocean. The following is an on-the-scene report by reporters (Liu Dedian) and (Yang Tao) and correspondent (Su Kuoshan) from the launch center in Xichang. The report is entitled: "The Moment a New Star Is Rising."

[Begin relay by unidentified reporter] Listeners, we are reporting from the Astronautical Launch Center in Xichang, Sichuan. Today is 1 February; it is now 1930. We are standing on a hillside west of the launch site, about 500 meters from the launch derrick. Though it is completely dark now, the spotlights make the launch site as bright as day. Five of the 11 stories of the platform have been opened, but at this time we cannot see the complete carrier rocket. Several days ago we mounted the platform of the launch derrick and had a close view of the rocket and satellite, already connected and erected there. The rocket is taller than a 10-story building. We tried to estimate its circumference and found that the maximum part is about six or seven armspans around. The cylindrical satellite, covered by red protective tiles [fang hu pian] is attached to the top of the rocket.

Listeners, it is now 2000 sharp. All parts of the platform of the launch derrick are now open. We can see the splendid shape of the milky-white carrier topped by the red satellite, all under the spotlights and ready to lift off. We see that the satellite atop the rocket has been capped with a red protective fairing, and the characters for Long March No 3 [chang zheng San hao] are clearly discernible with binoculars. This is one of the types of the carrier rockets that our country is offering on the international market. [Sound of siren]

Listeners, the final alarm has sounded. Those working on the launch site are now beginning to depart. They are going to the shelter of a mountain cave some 100 meters away. Listeners, all cables and structures used to support the rocket and the satellite have now detached automatically. The rocket will lift off in less than 4 minutes. From now on, the entire launch system will enter a computerized automatic control stage. [noise]

Listeners, it is awfully bright. The noise is so loud that I cannot even hear my own voice. A wave beats upon my face. The rocket has lifted. With a reddish-orange flame at the tail, the rocket flies skyward like a fiery dragon. It goes faster and faster, higher and higher. Now the rocket has made a turn and is flying southeast. Listeners, with the aid of a telescope, we see that the small fireball in the sky hundreds of kilometers away is dividing into two. This shows that the first state of the carrier rocket is separating, and the second stage has been ignited and is functioning. The rocket carrying the satellite is continuing to fly eastward. [end relay]

Listeners, as the satellite was being launched, we watched it on a large television screen at the command post in Beijing. From the screen we also clearly saw Zhao Ziyang and other leading comrades inspecting the operation at the launch center. The following is a recorded conversation with our reporter covering the event in Xichang:

[Begin relay] [Station editor] Hello, are you Comrade (Liu Dedian)?

[(Liu Dedian)] Yes, I am. How are you?

[Station editor] Today, at the command post of the National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission, we saw some pictures of Premier Zhao Ziyang and Comrades Hu Qili and Tian Jiyun watching the actual launch of the satellite. Would you tell us something about them from the scene?

[(Liu Dedian)] Certainly. On the evening of 1 February, leading comrades at the central level, namely Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun, made a special trip from Beijing to the Astronautical Launch Center in Xichang to watch the splendid scene of China's Chang Zheng No 3 carrier rocket sending the telecommunications satellite into orbit. After the satellite was successfully launched, they stood up and shook hands cordially with the commanders, scientists, technicians, and other comrades in the hall of the command and control center at the launch site to extend their greetings. Zhao Ziyang made an important speech in the wake of the successful satellite launch.

[Station editor] Do you have a recording of Premier Zhao's speech?

[(Liu Dedian)] Yes, we have.

[Station editor] Would you please transmit the speech to us?

[(Liu Dedian)] Certainly. Let me transmit it now.

[Begin Zhao Ziyang recording] On behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council, I extend warm congratulations to all comrades of staff and workers, technical experts, as well as commanders and fighters who took part in the research, manufacture, and launching of this satellite. [applause] In the course of your research, manufacture, and launching of the satellite, you have displayed great wisdom, exerted assiduous efforts, and scored prominent achievements. I wish to express heartfelt thanks to you. [applause] I hope you will continue to exert yourselves so as to make even more and greater contributions to the modernization of national defense and to our nation's modernization program as a whole. Thank you. [applause] [end Zhao recording and relay]

Listeners, our reporter (Zhou Yuchun) phoned us from the Astronautical Measuring and Control Center in Xian, Shaanxi, to tell us that Comrade Li Peng was there watching the satellite launch. He also briefed us on the center's work controlling the various experiments.

At the command post in Beijing, we saw Comrade Zhang Aiping personally inspecting and directing the launch operations.

Listeners, according to information provided by the department commanding the launch, this telecommunications and broadcasting satellite for practical use is operating smoothly in the big elliptical orbit before entering its synchronous orbit. All instruments on the satellite are functioning normally, and measuring and control work is proceeding as planned.

Listeners, in the days to come, we will continue to inform you on the operation of this telecommunications and broadcasting satellite, including its entrance into synchronous orbit, positioning [ding dian], and the commencement of its functions. We welcome you to listen to these reports.

Establishes Orbit

OW031026 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0911 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (XINHUA) -- The telecommunications broadcasting satellite launched on 1 February has entered its quasisynchronous orbit on schedule after successfully igniting the satellite engine from the apogee at 1006 [0206 GMT] this morning. Under ground station control, the satellite was finally set at 103 degrees east longitude above the equator.

CPC CIRCULAR ON SELECTION, PROMOTION OF CADRES

[Text] Beijing, 1 Feb (XINHUA) -- On 28 January, the CPC Central Committee issued a circular on selecting and using cadres strictly in accordance with party principles.

The circular says: Earnestly adhering to the principle of making our cadre ranks more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and professionally more competent after the 3d Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, party organizations at all levels have actively restructured the cadre system and selected a large number of middle-aged and young cadres who possess both ability and political integrity, thus expediting the succession of new cadres to the old and cooperation between new and old cadres, strengthening the contingent of cadres and leading groups, and providing organizational guarantees for the normal progress of socialist modernization and various reforms. The selection and use of cadres today, however, are affected by certain problems, most notably that certain leading cadres have disobeyed party principles and violated discipline for organizational and personnel affairs. Some of them have promoted people according to their likes or dislikes, favor or animosity; or they have used people according to the yardstick of whether the people they use will benefit them. They have also selected people based on the feudalistic concept of family and factional relationship. Some have resorted to all means to "take the back door" in hopes that their children, relatives, and friends will be used or selected; some have used positions in exchange for favors or to make deals; some have fought for higher pay scales for cadres of their own departments or units, or for the upgrading of their affiliated units, in disregard of rules and regulations; and some comrades working in the organizational and personnel affairs departments have ignored principles and their duties, and have even abused their authority and sought personal gain. Although these phenomena have affected only a small number of people, they must be firmly combated and guarded against; their bad influence has endangered the building of the cadre contingent, corroded the party's structure, and tarnished the party's prestige. The CPC Central Committee points out in its circular:

1. With regard to using personnel, leading cadres must set an example in obeying party principles and safeguarding discipline for organizational and personnel affairs.

In using people, leading cadres must uphold the principle of using competent personnel who possess both political integrity and ability; and be impartial, honest, open, and aboveboard. Leading cadres at all levels have the obligation and responsibility to recommend competent personnel to the party through normal procedures; but they have no right whatsoever to use their relatives and good friends in violation of policies, regulations, and rules. People who disregard party principles and discipline for organizational and personnel affairs should not be in leading positions.

If a cadre's child, spouse, or other relative really has political integrity and ability and is eligible for selection, he should be recommended by the masses or party organizations, and handled according to regular procedures like other cadres eligible for selection and appointment. The leading cadres themselves must not instruct the organizational and personnel affairs departments, or give them hints, to promote anybody; nor should they establish relations, or "take the back door," through their aides, colleagues, or other family members; much less should they encourage and support their children, spouse, or other relatives to demand "official posts" by using their position or influence. When relatives and children or leading members of a party committee are involved in discussions of promotion and use of cadres, leading members themselves should refrain from the discussion.

Should they have any suggestions regarding the placement of personnel, veteran cadres retired from leading bodies may present their proposals through normal channels, but they should not interfere with the new leading body's normal operation. Leading cadres transferred to other departments must not interfere with the personnel affairs of their former areas and units.

Upon being transferred, a leading cadre should not bring along with him any other cadre working in his original area or unit; nor should he name any other cadre to work for him in his new unit. Should the transfer of a cadre really be necessary, he must submit an application to a higher party committee for approval beforehand. The organizational and personnel affairs departments are authorized to reject any unauthorized transfer of personnel.

2. In selecting and appointing leading cadres, it is necessary to do so in strict accordance with the regulations.

The procedure for selecting leading cadres for party and government organs is to select candidates based on democratic recommendations and to listen extensively to the views of the people. The decision on the selection of cadres should then be reported to authorities at a higher level after oganizing the personnel department in conducting investigations and the party committees in collectively discussing and making the necessary decision. The organization department at the higher level will further study the case and then submit the case to the party committees for further debate, examination, and approval. No case will be studied and approved if it fails to conform with this procedure. When there is an urgent need to appoint cadres under special conditions, cadres may be appointed or asked to work in this capacity only after the case is reported and the reason for doing so stated to and an approval obtained from authorities at the higher level.

In selecting and appointing leading cadres, those enterprises and undertakings where the leadership system is being reformed on an experimental basis should act in accordance with the aforementioned guidelines and the requirements in carrying out the reforms.

3. In selecting and appointing leading cadres, it is essential to follow the mass line.

In selecting and appointing leading cadres at all levels, we should, first of all, survey public opinion among the cadres and masses in the unit where the candidates work, implement democratic recommendations, or ask the authorities at the higher level to send people to the lower-level units to extensively solicit the views of the masses.

In recommending candidates, it is necessary to boldly let the masses nominate and recommend candidates after ample consultations. Generally, the method of casting secret ballots should be adopted. The party organization at the higher level should give guidance in policy and method.

Under normal conditions, we must fully respect the views of the majority of the people. We should avoid listing as candidates those who fail to win popular support in units or areas where they work. Even if the candidates are recommended by the masses, we must also guard against the practice of making the decision by simply counting the number of votes. It is strictly forbidden to make use of democratic recommendations and poll surveys to win votes and to carry out unlawful organizational activities.

4. Prior to making a decision on selection and appointment of cadres, it is necessary to carefully study the requirements regarding ability and political integrity of anyone filling the post.

In examining a cadre, it is essential to study his past and understand his political integrity, ability, diligence and merits in an overall manner. It is necessary to understand his performance during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Attention must be paid to his actual merits in recent years. In studying a cadre's actual merits, we must study what he actually did in his various posts and how he actually carried out his different jobs instead of assessing him from one angle only. We must pay attention to discovering and appointing those cadres who can creatively implement the party's principle and policy, effectively develop a work situation, and serve the people in a down-to-earth manner. Those indulging in empty talk, doing nothing practical, only paying lip service or resorting to deception must never be promoted. In examining cadres, we must enforce a responsibility system. Those who are responsible for examining cadres must adhere to principles and dare to surmount restrictions and oppose obstructions. After examining the cadres, they must write reports based on facts and submit their signed reports to the high authorities.

5. In selecting cadres, it is necessary to hold collective discussions by the party committees. It is forbidden that only one person should make any decision.

The appointment of secretaries, deputy secretaries and Standing Committee secretaries of the party committees at all levels must be made according to the provisions in the party Constitution and through a democratic election held by the plenary session of the party committee at the same level. This appointment is subject to the examination and approval of the party committee at the higher level. On special occasions, cadres may be appointed or asked to work in an acting capacity according to the procedure of investigating, examining and approving appointments. Such action must be reported to the party committee at the higher level for the record. Appointments and dismissals of leading cadres of state organs must be made in strict accordance with the relevant legal procedure.

When the party committees discuss the issue of appointing cadres, the organization and personnel departments must do a good job in preparing necessary reference materials ahead of schedule and must distribute them among the various party committee members. When the party committee holds a discussion at a meeting, a resolution is valid only when more than two-thirds of the committee members are in attendance. The comrade who presides over the meeting must bring democracy into full play. Every committee member must conscientiously express his views in a responsible manner. Finally, a resolution is formulated on the basis of the principle that the minority is subordinate to the majority. On the issue of cadres, it is forbidden for any individual to make a decision by himself. When an individual party committee member disagrees with the collective resolution, he may have reservations or reflect his views to the authorities at the high level, but he has no right to amend or veto the resolution. If an original candidate is rejected in the course of debate, it is necessary to put forward the name of a new candidate according to the stipulated procedure. It is forbidden to make any personnel appointments hastily on the basis of a provisional motion made by any individual committee member.

No one is permitted to disseminate information on discussions in the party committees and the organization and personnel departments on personnel dismissals and appointments. Those who violate discipline in this respect must be dealt with seriously.

6. In selecting cadres, we must select and appoint those comrades according to their merits, comrades who have been tempered by practice.

When cadres are promoted to assume leading posts at the next higher level, they must have been tempered by practice over a certain period and have gained experience in exercising leadership and scored remarkable achievements at the next lower level. In general, cadres must be promoted grade by grade. Those who are promoted more than one grade at a time must be particularly outstanding, or fill a position needing to be filled urgently. College graduates should work at the grass-roots units to receive tempering first. Only those who are really outstanding should be promoted.

As for those who ask for appointments to become "officials," we must resolutely turn them down and also criticize them. We must also criticize those who try to intercede with the authorities for such persons as well as those leaders who make unprincipled accommodations.

Readjustments should be made in time in dealing with those cadres who have been promoted but found incompetent in the course of practice.

It is necessary to regard the exchange of cadres as an important path in promoting and training cadres. In dealing with cadres scheduled for promotion in the course of exchanging cadres, the organization and personnel departments must first send out people to their workplaces and areas to conduct investigations, and then report to the party committees for collective discussions and a decision according to the stipulated procedure. If the original unit disagrees with the promotion, a cadre can only be promoted after he works in the new unit for a certain period and proves that he is really outstanding.

In order to set stricter requirements for leading cadres and to tighten organizational supervision, whenever children of cadres who hold leading posts in the party Central Committee, the National People's Congress, the State Council, the Central Military Commission, the Central Advisory Commission, the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, and the National CPPCC Committee are to be promoted more than one grade at a time to leading positions (including promotions from the position of a deputy at a lower grade to that of a higher grade, or from the position of the chief of an office at a lower grade to that at a higher grade) at or above the county level, all planned promotions must be submitted to the CPC Central Committee's Organization Department for examination. Appointments will be made according to the jurisdiction of cadres with the approval of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat. Whenever children of leading cadres who hold the position of a chief of an office at the provincial or departmental level are to be promoted more than one grade at a time, the planned promotions must be submitted to the CPC Central Committee's Organization Department for examination and approval; where children of leading cadres holding the position of deputy of an office are to be promoted more than one grade at a time, the planned promotions must be submitted to the provincial (departmental) level party committees (party groups) in the area or department where the cadres' children work for examination, and appointments will be made according to cadres' jurisdiction with the approval of the above-mentioned party committees or party groups.

7. Arbitrarily establishing new organs, upgrading an organ, and enlarging the staff in an organ will be strictly prohibited.

All areas and departments must examine and streamline themselves according to the circular of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council on the banning of arbitrarily establishing new organs and enlarging the size of a leading organ. Organs that warrant being abolished must be abolished, and those that do not warrant upgrading must be restored to the original level. All arbitrarily created new positions for leading cadres not approved through procedures provided by regulations will be regarded as null and void. Henceforth, when it is necessary to set up a new organ or or to upgrade an organ, the department in charge of the same category of organizations must submit a special report to a department in charge of the size of organizations for examination, and applications will be approved by the party committee or government at a higher level according to the recommendations of the department in charge of the size of organizations. No individual leading cadres are empowered to approve applications to set up new organs, upgrade organs, and enlarge the staff of organs.

8. Organizational and personnel departments at all levels must earnestly carry out their duties and serve as good advisers and assistants for party committees.

Party committees at all levels should make good use of the suggestions of organizational and personnel departments when holding a discussion to select and promote cadres. Cadres of organizational and personnel departments must abide by party principles and discipline in an exemplary manner and dare to reflect the real situation, to adhere to principle, and to resist violations of party principles and disruptions of discipline in organizational and personnel departments. Persons who violate principle, curry favors from a higher level, abuse power, and engage in malpractices in promoting cadres must be criticized, transferred, and dismissed according to the merit of the case. In order to enable organizational and personnel departments to do their work well and to improve guidance and supervision, the appointments and removals of directors and deputy directors of the organizational departments of all provincial, autonomous, and municipal party committees; of the cadres in departments and commissions of the party Central Committee and state organs; and of the directors and deputy directors of the personnel sections or bureaus of the departments and commissions of the CPC Central Committee and state organs, must be approved by the CPC Central Committee's Organization Department.

The circular calls on party committees at all levels to organize an earnest discussion of this circular after they had received a copy of it, and to constantly teach leading cadres to adhere to the principle of appointing people on their merits and oppose the principle of appointing people by favoritism. Party committees at all levels should work out measures for implementing the circular in light of the reality in their areas and departments. At the same time, they should examine their work on selecting, promoting, and employing cadres, and they must promptly and decisively address problems discovered in the examination.

HU QILI ADDRESSES MEETING OF INTELLECTUALS

OW010146 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1435 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Speech by Hu Qili on 31 January in Beijing at meeting of "middle-aged and young" intellectuals]

Comrades: Today, over 200 middle-aged and young intellectuals in Beijing have gathered happily at this meeting sponsored by the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee to usher in the Year of the Tiger. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, allow me to extend their cordial regards and festive greetings to you, as well as to all of the old, middle-aged, and young intellectuals throughout the country!

You all know that enormous successes attracting worldwide attention have been accomplished on our country's industrial, agricultural, educational, scientific, cultural, and other fronts during the first 5 years of the 1980's, and that our socialist modernization has been proceeding vigorously in all areas in our great socialist motherland. This is an achievement of the united struggle of people of all nationalities, including of course the toil, sweat, and wisdom of the tens of millions of intellectuals, under the leadership of the party and the government. The new and important contributions made by broad masses of intellectuals to our material and spiritual construction during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period were a brilliant chapter in the history of construction of our People's Republic. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, allow me to express my heartfelt thanks and highest respects to all intellectuals fighting on all fronts!

The last 5 years of the 1980's will be an extremely important period. The magnificent blueprint that we have drawn up for economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period dictates that, while we must continue to pay attention to economic construction, we must also successfully accomplish two major projects, namely restructuring the national economy, with the focus on urban economy, and promoting socialist ethics, so as to lay a solid foundation for achieving economic rejuvenation and prosperity during the 1990's. This new assignment has presented new and higher requirements to the nation's intellectuals.

We must combine our lofty communist ideals and our real targets of struggle and work hard to achieve our objectives in a down-to-earth manner. While the current situation is fine and highly favorable to us in pushing our cause forward, we are also confronted with many difficulties and problems. As the most educated people of the working class, our intellectuals should have lofty ideals and ambition, place the interests of the state and people at the forefront, and press forward courageously regardless of difficulties. We should encourage this spirit among intellectuals: For the sake of the success of the cause of the party and the people, and for the sake of the nation's prosperity and the people's happiness, they should give no thought to their personal gains or losses. This virtue of New China's intellectuals and invaluable spiritual strength should be encouraged and carried forward at all times.

We must be good at integrating individual efforts and collective wisdom, work in unity and deal with difficulties in a cooperative manner. Intellectuals' mental work is, more often than not, individual labor. However, following the development of modern science and technology, many problems appearing in the course of our material and spiritual construction cannot be solved by the knowledge, experience, and ability of any one individual, but require collective wisdom and efforts. Some projects can be accomplished only through close coordination and cooperation among various specialized branches of learning. Marx once said that cooperation not only will improve individual productivity, but also will create a productivity arising from collective efforts. While we must fully endorse individual efforts, we must energetically encourage a collectivist spirit. Old, middle-aged, and young intellectuals must learn from each other's strong points to offset each other's weaknesses and improve together. Middle-aged and young intellectuals should respect and learn humbly from their older counterparts, and old intellectuals should enthusiastically foster and cultivate middle-aged and young intellectuals, and encourage and help them to do even better than themselves academically.

We should strive to integrate learning from books and learning through doing actual work, and integrate the learning of professional knowledge and the study of political theories so as to refresh our knowledge and become more proficient. It is a good thing that the broad masses of intellectuals have been diligently studying professional knowledge and paying attention to learning modern science and other knowledge from foreign countries in recent years.

However, all intellectuals with lofty aspirations and goals must also learn from the work accomplished in our socialist modernization and from the broad masses of basic-level cadres, workers and peasants who have practical experience. Each and every intellectual should also earnestly study basic Marxist theories in order to be able to observe things and analyze situations from a correct position and with a scientific approach. Only when they are able to do this can they continue to advance with time.

After several years of work, an increasing number of people in our leading bodies at various levels have become aware of the need to respect knowledge and proficient personnel. This is great progress by our party. But this is not enough. We must learn how to use our proficient personnel rationally and do as much as we can to improve intellectuals' pay and working conditions so that they will have fewer cares at home and can give full scope to their capabilities. I think the meeting today, sponsored by the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee, to strengthen ties among intellectuals on all fronts shows our party's determination to further encourage the good conduct of respecting knowledge and proficient personnel. Party and government organizations at all levels must continue to work in a down-to-earth manner to help intellectuals solve their problems, and to create conditions needed to achieve their goals and give full scope to their wisdom and talents. At the same time, party and government organizations at all levels must care for intellectuals politically and operationally, and help them advance continuously. We hope the organization departments of central and local party organizations not only will serve as homes of party members and cadres, but also as homes of intellectuals. We also hope that the broad masses of intellectuals will do a still better job in shouldering their historical responsibilities and join the people throughout the country in making new contributions to accomplish the Seventh 5-Year Plan and build a Chinese style socialist society!

Session Detailed

[By reporter Li Shangzhi]

[Text] Beijing, 31 Jan (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said: "During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, vast numbers of intellectuals made new and important contributions in promoting the building of the two civilizations, and thus they wrote a brilliant page in the history of construction of our People's Republic. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I give you my heartfelt thanks and highest respects." The audience burst into warm applause.

"We hope that the organization departments at the central level and at all local levels will not only be the homes of party members and of cadres, but will also be the homes of intellectuals. We also hope that the vast numbers of intellectuals will fulfill their responsibility in an even better way, and join people throughout the country in making new contributions to fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan and building socialism with Chinese characteristics." The audience again burst into warm applause.

This was the moving scene at a forum of some Beijing middle-aged and young intellectuals held by the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee in the Great Hall of the People this morning.

Wei Jianxing, director of the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee, presided over the meeting. Soon after the forum began, he said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the broad masses of intellectuals in our country have had a vast world in which to dedicate themselves to the service of their country. Our party is proud to have such a contingent of intellectuals working hard and forging ahead without fear of hardship to make contributions to the country and the people. We have invited you more than 200 middle-aged and young intellectuals to this simple tea party so that you can have a heart-to-heart talk with central leading comrades on how to make our work vigorous in the Year of the Tiger.

Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, said in addition: "This so-called heart-to-heart talk is primarily designed for us to listen to your opinions."

Hu Qiaomu, also a member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, humorously interposed: "It seems that we have a custom of making auspicious remarks around the Chinese New Year. As we are intellectuals, let us break this custom today; never mind whether our remarks are auspicious or not. We hope that you will speak freely, and we do not mind hearing things which are unpleasant." His words aroused the audience. Some of those outstanding middle-aged and young intellectuals present applauded, while others indicated their consent by laughing. Other leading comrades present also smiling nodded their heads to express their approval. They were Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council; Peng Chong and Zhou Gucheng, vice chairmen of the NPC Standing Committee; and Yang Jingren, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee.

"Let me say a few words." "Give me a few minutes." "I would like to present my views ...."

No sooner had the leading comrades finished talking than many middle-aged and young intellectuals vied for the floor. Seeing such an enthusiastic scene, Wang Zhaohua, deputy director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, had to tell them with a smile: "Since many comrades want to speak and our time is limited, please keep your speech simple and direct." In a cordial and vigorous atmosphere, many intellectuals spoke. They were Hu Daofen, an assistant researcher of the Beijing Academy of Agriculture and Forestry; Xiu Ruijuan, a researcher of the Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences; Sheng Chengfa, an ecologist at the Zoological Institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences; Nie Weiping, a famous Weiqi player; Niu Shufang, an outstanding political instructor of the Qinghua University; Luo Zhao, an assistant researcher of the Institute of Religion of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; Li Ling, an actor of the Central Experimental Modern Drama Theatrical Company; Li Mo, a teacher of the Beijing College of Aeronautics; Tang Mancheng, an associate professor of the Beijing College of Dancing; Li Guyi, a singer; Shang Erchang, an assistant researcher at the Acoustics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences; Wang Liping, director of the film studio orchestra; Xia Min, editor of the People's Literature Publishing House; Liu Manhua, deputy principal of the Beijing Municipal Jingshan School; Jiang Kun, a comic dialogue performer; Ren Jianfang, a physician in charge of the Beijing Railway General Hospital; Hai Jintao, an engineer of the mechanical and electrical institute of the Ministry of Machine-Building Industry; and Qi Shouxun, chief engineer of the Beijing coal mining machinery plant of the Ministry of Coal Industry.

They said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the broad masses of intellectuals in our country have had an ease of mind and a vast world in which to dedicate themselves to the service of their country. Now it is indeed a golden age for intellectuals with lofty ideals to contribute to their country and the people. Liu Manhua said: Humans should have some spirit, a spirit of dedication to the cause of the country and the people.

Money cannot buy awareness, and our enthusiasm is not fired by money. Only when we dedicate ourselves with a fervent heart to our nurturing motherland and to the people can we say we have a noble moral character. Hai Jingtao said: China's intellectuals have both knowledge and political consciousness. They know very well that the party, the motherland, and the people attach importance to them and place high hopes on them. Because our country, though big, had a poor foundation to start with, the working and living conditions of some intellectuals still cannot be immediately improved. We should understand the difficulties facing our party and our government. We should have the mentality of "worrying ahead of other people and enjoying the fruits after them," and we should join people throughout the country in working hard under the party leadership to accomplish socialist modernization. Only in this way can we effectively improve the intellectuals' working and living conditions.

At the forum, the central leading comrades accepted on-the-spot demands and suggestions made by some middle-aged and young intellectuals. For instance, Jiang Kun asked the leading comrades to support the practice of satire in comic dialogue. Comrade Xi Zhongxun said that in order to promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations, comic dialogue performers may and should satirize and criticize unhealthy social phenomena. With a smile he said to Jiang Kun: "Let's consider this question settled." Jiang Kun, who looked "somber" as first, was cheered by Xi Zhongxun's words. After listening to the intellectuals' speeches, Zhao Dongwan, minister of labor and personnel, said at the meeting: The party Central Committee and the State Council understand very well the situation of our intellectuals, and they are paying great attention to improving your working and living conditions. In the last few years, the party and the state have done what they can and have made some improvements in intellectuals' livelihood and working conditions. In the days to come, they will continue to adopt concrete measures and policies to further improve your working and living conditions. Your speeches show that you understand the situation and that the broad masses of our intellectuals have a very high awareness.

The participants gave Comrade Hu Qili a big hand, urging him to speak. Hu Qili pointed out that in the first 5 years of the 1980's, all fronts in China made great achievements, attracting worldwide attention. He pointed out that the achievements also contained the sweat and wisdom of China's several tens of millions of hardworking intellectuals. He urged the intellectuals to integrate lofty communist ideals with the objectives of current work and work hard in a down-to-earth way; to combine individual efforts with collective wisdom and cooperate to overcome difficulties; and to absorb knowledge from books as well as from practice, learn vocational knowledge and political theories at the same time, and constantly enhance their knowledge and ability. The forum began at 0900. Many comrades still wanted the floor when it was almost 1300. Comrade Xi Zhongxun said: "From now on, party organizations in all localities and departments should hold such forums, not just once a year but several times a year." Then Comrade Hu Qiaomu said: "Not only is it necessary to hold more meetings; it is also necessary to solve more problems." The audience burst into laughter and applause. The meeting was over, but many intellectuals still surrounded the leading comrades chatting and laughing.

CPC DISCIPLINE COMMISSION ISSUES COMMUNIQUE

OW021050 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0731 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Communique of the Seventh Plenary Session of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee (1 February 1986)]

[Text] Beijing, 2 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Seventh Plenary Session of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee was held in Beijing from 28 January to 1 February.

Attending the session were 111 members of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee. Present at the session as observers were responsible persons of the discipline inspection organs of various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly udner the central government, central state organs, ministries and commissions and the People's Liberation Army. The session was held under the direct leadership of the party Central Committee. The main task of the session is to further implement guidelines laid down by the National Conference of Party Delegates and the conference of cadres of central organs; disseminate important instructions recently given by the central leading comrades on rectifying party style; work out a plan to improve party style for 1986; and mobilize and organize the whole party and the social forces to strive in fundamentally improving party style.

The plenary session conscientiously studied the important speeches made by Comrade Hu Yaobang and Comrade Deng Xiaoping and the important written comments made by Comrade Chen Yun. It further studied the speeches made by central leading comrades at the conference of cadres of central organs. The plenary session regarded these speeches and written comments as its guiding ideology.

Wang Heshou, second secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, presided over the session. Permanent Secretary Han Guang reported to the plenary session on the "Minute of the Report" submitted by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission to the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee on rectifying party style, and relayed the instructions given by the Secretariat. The "Minute of the Report" has been approved by the Secretariat in principle. Analyzing the situation in party style, the minute pointed out: To rectify party style at present is a pressing task for the whole party. This year, we must pay attention to three things: One, we must concentrate our efforts in vigorously fighting unhealthy tendencies; two, we must conduct education on party character; and three, we must strictly improve discipline. While vigorously fighting unhealthy tendencies, there is a need to hit hard at serious economic activities such as profiteering, speculation, fraud, smuggling, corruption, and bribery. Meanwhile, close attention must be paid to struggles in the realm of ideology. Practices of bourgeois liberalism which run counter to the four basic principles must be resolutely opposed, and cases involving a violation of discpline must be investigated and dealt with resolutely.

In order to fulfill this year's tasks, we must adopt effective measures. 1) It is necessary for the whole party to grasp the party style. The principal leading comrades must personally carry out this task. 2) It is essential to vigorously investigate serious cases. 3) It is imperative to strengthen organizational life and conduct criticism and self-criticism throughout the party. 4) It is necessary to strengthen ties with the relevant departmens. 5) Improving the qualities of those working in the discipline inspection organs is essential. The plenary session called on the party committees and discipline inspection organs at all levels to implement these tasks on the basis of the minute and in close connection with the actual situation in one's own locality.

The plenary session also debated the "Several Questions on Enhancing Party Character and Improving Party Members' Ideology and Work Style under the New Situation" (draft) and the "Circular on Strengthening Discipline" (draft).

The plenary session held: Under the leadership of the party Central Committee, a favorable situation prevails in rectifying party style and correcting unhealthy tendencies at present. The party committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership. The discipline inspection departments must keep pace with this situation and help the party committees at all levels firmly grasp this work.

The discipline inspection organs at all levels and all discipline and inspection cadres must play their exemplary role well in rectifying party style. They must enhance revolutionary vigor, improve their work methods, closely coordinate with the relevant departments, and firmly grasp serious cases of unhealthy tendencies and acts in violation of law and discipline, especially those involving leading offices and cadres. We must make full use of negative examples in educating the broad masses of party members and cadres on party character, party style, and party discipline. With the progress in our work, we must promptly understand the new situation and the new problems, strengthen our leadership, and have a good grasp of policy so that we will able to smoothly carry out this work according to the plan of the party Central Committee.

The plenary session noted: Under the leadership of the party Central Committee, we have the determination and confidence to implement our work well in rectifying party style. We will definitely be able to fulfill the task of fundamentally improving party style.

Second Secretary Wang Heshou and Permanent Secretary Han Guang of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission delivered speeches at the closing ceremony of the session.

MILITARY DISCIPLINE COMMISSION HOLDS SESSION

OW021307 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0859 GMT 2 Feb 86

[By reporter Ga Yumin]

[Text] Beijing, 2 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Third Plenary Session of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Central Military Commission, held over a 7-day period, stressed: In order to fundamentally improve the Army's party style, party committees, political organizations, and discipline inspection commissions at all levels in the Army should not just sit down and talk, but should take concrete action to truly solve problems and achieve solid results.

On 31 January, Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, and Yu Qiuli, Yang Dezhi, Zhang Aiping, and ong Xuezhi, deputy secretaries of the commission, attend the session. Comrade Yang Shangkun made a speech.

Yang Shangkun said: The Army should be in the vanguard in bringing about a fundamental improvement in party style. The current task is to make genuine efforts and take concrete action. The period set for studying the documents should not be too long. It is also necessary to make examinations and correct mistakes. Currently efforts should be focused on solving the six serious problems identified in the circular issued by the General Offices of the party Central Committee and the State Council. There are other problems in the Army, and without solving them, we cannot achieve a fundamental improvement in party style. Therefore, when a unit conducts an examination, it should not limit itself to checking against the six serious problems. Leading cadres and organs at all levels should genuinely strive to achieve fruitful results.

Yang Shangkun pointed out: In improving party style and reinforcing discipline, we should not rely on discipline inspection commissions alone. All party members, party branches, and all levels of party committees and commanding, political, and logistics departments should strive to improve party style and reinforce discipline. Discipline inspection commissions at all levels should rely on the appropriate level party committees and should mobilize all party members in improving party style.

The Third Plenary Session of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Military Commission, which began on 27 January, ended on 2 February. The session earnestly studied the important speeches by Comrades Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping on improving party style and Comrade Chen Yun's important written instructions, as well as guidelines of the meetings of cadres of central organs, and studied and formulated measures for realizing the important policy decision made by the party Central Committee and the Military Commission in light of the actual situation in the Army. Zhang Boxiang, deputy secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Military Commision, made a work report at the plenary session, entitled: "Leading Organs and Cadres South Take the Lead in Striving to Realize a Fundamental Improvement in Our Army's Party Style in 1986." The session held: In striving for a fundamental improvement in the Army's party style this year, it is necessary to make vigorous efforts in accordance with the principle calling for "firmness and persistence" and in the spirit of "making less empty talk and doing more solid things," and achieve tangible results in the first quarter, marked success in the first 6 months, and a fundamental improvement in the Army's party style after a year. The session called on party committees at all levels to regard improvement of party style as an important item on the agenda. Principal leading comrades at all levels should personally attend to work at each level. Leading organs and cadres should play an exemplary role in earnestly resolving problems related to unhealthy tendencies. it is necessary to investigate seriously and handle major and grave cases and conspicuous problems that have a strong influence. It is also necessary to increase education in party spirit and heighten party members' awareness. Discipline inspection cadres at all levels should improve work style and methods, raise efficiency, and perform their duty without selfishness and fear.

Guo Linxiang, secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Military Commission, spoke today, reviewing the meeting. He stressed: After the closing of the session, we must conscientiously implement the instructions of the party Central Committee and the Military Commission and carry out our work in a down-to-earth manner. Discipline inspection cadres should study party and Army discipline and state laws, and lose no time in investigating and handling major and grave cases. They should not be irresolute nor dilatory in doing things, but should resist intercession or other resistance, uphold the principle that all are equal before party discipline, and investigate and punish, in accordance with party discipline and state laws, all cases regardless of the level of organizations and cadres involved. While striving relentlessly to tackle major and grave cases and reinforce party, Army, and government discipline, it is also necessary to pay keen attention to building spiritual civilization and carrying out ideological and political work in order to bring about a fundamental improvement in the Army's party style within this year.

PLA GAMES SUSPENDED DUE TO UNHEALTHY TENDENCIES

[Text] Beijing, 31 Jan (XINHUA) -- In order to correct unhealthy tendencies and ensure a sound development of the PLA's physical culture work, the Central Military Commission has decided to suspend the Fifth All-Army Games originally scheduled for this April or May. It is reported that during the preparatory period for the Fifth All-Army Games, some units have committed fraud in recruiting athletes, thus perverting the conduct of the Army and undermining unity both inside and outside of the Army.

During a recent briefing on the preparatory work for the All-Army Games, Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, sternly criticized fraud in recruiting athletes and seriously pointed out the necessity of resolutely correcting the unhealthy tendency. He said: If we fail to correct the unhealthy tendency that we see, it is tantamount to our taking the lead with our eyes closed in promoting unhealthy tendencies.

Then the relations between the Army and the government, between the Army and the people, and within the Army itself will become bad, and the reputation of the Army will be besmirched. He emphasized: We should resolutely suspend the games for the sake of improving the party style. As long as we have clearly explained the situation, the party, the government, the Army, and the people will all support the suspension, and it will not affect the prestige of the Army.

Recently, the All-Army Games leading group held a meeting of the comrades in charge of the preparations for the games from various military regions and major services and arms, conveyed the Military Commission's decision to them, and set demands for resolutely implementing the decision. The comrades attending the meeting unanimously supported the Central Military Commission's decision. They held that the suspension of the All-Army Games shows the Military Commission's determination to correct unhealthy tendencies. They have pledged to do a good job in seriously dealing with problems after the suspension and to respond with deeds to the Military Commissions's call for "the Army to take the lead in improving the party style."

CHEN MUHUA ENCOURAGES PEASANT SAVINGS DEPORTS

OW012200 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 151B GMT 31 Jan 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter He Jiazheng and XINHUA reporter Wang Yingchun]

[Text] Beijing, 31 Jan (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank, said today at a national meeting of presidents of all branches of the Agricultural Bank of China: The Agricultural Bank's key task this year is to actively boost savings deposits and make every effort to make more funds available and improve the bank's services. In extending credit loans in rural areas, it is necessary to ensure that priority requirements are met and that limited capital is put to good use.

Chen Muhua said: Last year the Agricultural Bank made positive efforts to readjust the use of funds. This basically ensured the fulfillment of the needs of funds for agricultural production and for purchase of farm and sideline products. In addition, the Agricultural Bank persisted in controlling its loans to village and town enterprises within the planned limit, thus contributing to strengthening macroeconomic control.

Chen Muhua noted: This year the bank's credit capital will be even more constraining. In using this capital, it is necessary to ensure the fulfillment of priority requirements and use of the limited funds properly. The focus of the Agricultural Bank's work this year is to devote its main efforts to supporting agricultural production and ensure the purchase of farm and sideline products. There should be no hesitation at all in meeting these two needs, and every measure should be taken to ensure their fulfillment. Failure to insure the fulfillment of these two needs will adversely affect the entire national economy. It is necessary to adopt a principle of supporting only deserving village and town enterprises. Emphasis should be placed on supporting the development of small hydroelectric power plants, small collieries, and other small mines, animal-breeding and plant-growing projects, and processing enterprises which make goods for export and products urgently needed on the domestic market. Loans should be reduced for those enterprises characterized by poor economic results, high energy consumption, backward technology, few market possibilities.

Referring to boosting savings deposits, Chen Muhua said: Bank funds come from two sources: the issuance of currency and the absorption of deposits. The issuance of currency is restricted by objective economic conditions. The amount of currency in circulation must be appropriate; otherwise, dire consequences will ensure. Therefore, the only important channel for increasing bank funds is boosting savings deposits. Only when the bank has more savings deposits can it extend more loans.

The currency in circulation in China's rural areas amounts to more than 60 billion yuan, accounting for 70 percent of the nation's total money in circulation. In 1985 peasants' cash on hand was 25 percent more than the preceding year. As can be seen, there is great potential for soliciting savings deposits from the vast countryside. The deposits now obtained by the Agricultural Bank itself cannot meet the fund requirements for extending loans. This state of affairs, which is quite unsuited to the development of the rural commodity economy, should be changed.

Chen Muhua asked the Agricultural Bank to do the following in order to absorb more deposits: It should do more propaganda work to help peasants overcome their fear of "showing affluence" and to help them understand the advantages of savings and their significance in supporting national construction. Active steps should be taken to boost the network of savings centers and promote the establishment of bank service agents so as to make it more convenient for peasants to deposit their money. The varieties of savings deposits should also be increased. For example, certain kinds of raffle savings deposits and savings deposits for purchase of expensive essential items and for housing construction may be introduced so as to arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for saving. In addition, the bank should continue to do well in issuing bank bonds, earnestly improve its services, prolong its business hours, and make it convenient for the masses to open and close accounts.

DU RUNSHENG SPEAKS AT SHANXI PARTY CONFERENCE

HK280147 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Text] In order to better appreciate, understand, and implement the spirit of this year's Central Document No 1, on 27 January the provincial CPC Committee invited Du Runsheng, director of the Rural Policy Research Office of the Central Secretariat, to deliver a report on the situation in China's rural reforms to the participants in the provincial CPC committee work conference and to responsible cadres of the provincial organs. The meeting took place in the Hubin Hall in Taiyuan.

Comrade Du Runsheng said in his report: As a result of 6 years of reforms, agriculture in China has advanced at a fine speed, the peasants' incomes have greatly increased, and we have basically put an end to the need to import agricultural products. He said: This agricultural growth makes up for previous deficiencies [words indistinct]. The reforms have brought into play, in concentrated form, the previous production potentials and the newly-emancipated productive forces. [Passage indistinct]

This year's Central Document No 1 stresses that agriculture is the foundation for the development of the national economy, and highlights the strategic position of agriculture. [Passage indistinct] Comrade Du Runsheng cited vivid facts to show that the orientation of China's reforms is correct. [Passage indistinct] We must pay attention to the question of mobility of the labor force. Comrade Du Runsheng also spoke on the question of guidance for the rural economy.

XIAMEN COURT SENTENCES ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

[Text] Xiamen, 29 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- This afternoon Xiamen City Intermediate People's Court and other grass-roots courts sentenced according to law 14 economic criminals whose cases were serious.

Fourteen culprits involved in nine gross economic criminal cases were sentenced today, including Chen Qifa, former manager of the first business department of the Xiamen International Enterprise Company Limited, who was given a life sentence for accepting graft totaling over 59,400 yuan by taking advantage of the conveniences provided by his position and for snatching by fraud reparations worth 12,500 yuan or more; Chen Jinhuo, former deputy head of the business section of the Xiamen City Import Office and former deputy manager of the business department of the Sanjiang General Trade Development Company, who was sentenced to life imprisonment for successively taking bribes in cash and in kind totaling over 48,000 yuan by taking advantage of the conveniences provided by his position as the person in charge of examining and approving matters relating to imports and business dealings and signing contracts with Hong Kong businessmen and for selling imported cloth remnants outside the island in violation of the regulation that the "sale of cloth remnants is confined to the island," thus evading more than 570,000 yuan in customs duties; and Chen Wenhai, former deputy manager of the Xiamen City Travel and Shopping Center, who was sentenced to 16 years' imprisonment for committing crimes such as smuggling, graft, and corruption. The other economic criminals were separately sentenced to imprisonment for various terms.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN ADDRESSES CADRE MEETING

OW302359 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Speech by Wan Shaofen, secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, at a meeting of cadres of provincial-level organs: "Enhance Understanding, Take Positive Action, and Play an Exemplary Role in Improving Party Style in the Province"]

[Excerpts] Comrades, the Central Secretariat called meetings on the morning of 6 January and the afternoon of 9 January, which were attended by 8,000 cadres of the central organs. Comrade Hu Qili chaired the meetings, during which central leading comrades Hu Yaobang, Tian Jiyun, Wang Zhaoguo, Yang Shangkun, and Zhao Ziyang made important speeches, calling on the central organs to play an exemplary role in improving party style in the entire nation, in order to strive for a fundamental improvement in party style and general social conduct, achieve successes in economic structural reform focused on the urban economy, complete the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and build socialism with Chinese characteristics.

The party Central Committee's important policy decision, which conforms with the aspirations of the party, the Army, and the people has immediately received enthusiastic support from the masses of party members, cadres, and ordinary people. On 13 January, the provincial party committee called an enlarged meeting of the Standing Committee to study the central leading comrades' speeches and, on 16 January, it issued a circular calling on party organizations at all levels in the province to diligently study and resolutely implement the central leading comrades' important speeches.

I would like to take this opportunity to brief you on the situation in Jiangxi, a subject for which you have shown profound concern. Under the guidance of the party's line, principles, and policies and the kind solicitude and specific instructions given by the central leading comrades to Jiangxi, and owing to the common efforts of party members, armymen, and people, including cadres of the provincial-level organs, in the province, the situation in Jiangxi has improved annually, the political situation characterized by stability and unity has been increasingly consolidated and developed, and the economy has grown in a sustained, stable, and balanced manner since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. On the basis of a 13.3 percent increase in 1984, the province again increased the 1985 total industrial and agricultural output value by 19.2 percent, a growth rate slightly higher than the national average for the first time. Of this, the increase in industrial output value was 22.4 percent, ranking 4th in the country and rising from 11th in 1984; the increase in agricultural output value was 13.6 percent, ranking 6th and rising from the 17th in 1984. Despite readjustment in crop distribution, 1985 was another year of bumper grain harvests, with an all-time record in per-unit yield and total output ranking 10th in the country, rising from the 19th in 1984. The output value of village and town enterprises increased by 60.4 percent. Industrial economic efficiency has improved markedly. Production in the coal, cement, steel, and electric power industries and durable consumer goods set records. Light industrial growth rate surpassed that of heavy industry for the first time. The quality of manufactured goods has continually improved.

Financial revenues were the best ever, topping the previous year by 27.9 percent, a figure slightly higher than the national average for the first time. The people's living standards have improved. Peasant's per capita net income increased by 10.7 percent, or 36 yuan. The annual income of state enterprise workers averaged 1,000 yuan, an increase of 16 percent over the previous year. Nearly 160,000 urban residents obtained jobs. Urban and rural markets have thrived, and commodity prices are, in general, relatively stable. Progress has been made in the construction of old revolutionary bases, an issue meriting the attention of all concerned, as well as in science and technology, education, culture, public health, and physical culture.

However, we should soberly note that, although the situation is excellent, there are certain dark aspects, and that, although our party style has begun to improve, quite a few problems still remain. While old problems are being solved, new unhealthy tendencies, some rather serious, have emerged under the new situation. The serious problems identified in the Document No 57 issued by the General Office of the CPC Central Committee, and major manifestations of such unhealthy tendencies are bureaucracy, liberalism, individualism, selfish departmentalism, sectarianism, and pragmatism [shi yong zhu yi], pointed out in Comrade Wang Zhaoguo's speech, also exist in Jiangxi.

Currently, the masses of people are especially critical of the provincial-level organs in the following aspects: Some departments and leading cadres have failed to perform their work honestly or observe principles, have engaged in factionalism and favoritism, abused their position and power in seeking employment or other personal gains for their close relatives and friends, purchased or changed automobiles against the regulations, squandered public funds and indulged in eating, drinking, or sightseeing under all sorts of pretexts, accepted or given gifts, or vied with each other for trips to Hong Kong and foreign countries. Children and spouses of some leading cadres have engaged in business operations and resold goods for profit, in violation of discipline, to line their pockets. Although they are small in number, they have produced harmful influences. Some organizations have indiscriminately hiked prices and collected fees and expenses in violation of government regulations, while others have practiced the undesirable work style of shifting responsibility onto others and putting things off indefinitely. Some are so bureaucratic, irresponsible, and inefficient that people seldom can enter, see smiling faces, and get things done there. Some cadres have assumed a practical attitude toward the party Central Committee's principles and policies and the provincial party committee's decisions, and implement only those suiting their taste. They have even spread discontent and rumors. Some listen to, and spread, malicious rumors against comrades. A very small number of cadres have led a decadent lifestyle and even committed serious crimes, such as embezzlement, bribe-taking, blackmail, speculation, fraud, smuggling, and trading in smuggled goods. All these are detested by the masses of people.

The central authorities have pointed out that the ruling party's work style has a bearing on the survival or demise of the party and the success or failure of the cause of socialism. In building socialist material civilization, we must also pay close attention to building socialist spiritual civilization. We must especially improve our party style by taking firm action to stop unhealthy tendencies and striving to bring about the scheduled improvement. This is the most important and pressing political task confronting party organizations at all levels in the province, primarily, the party organizations of provincial-level organs. This is also a major guarantee for consolidating and developing the excellent situation, gradually deepening reform, fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and winning new victories.

How can unhealthy tendencies be checked? After discussions, the provincial party committee holds that it is necessary to, first, diligently study the central leading comrades' important speeches in order to achieve unity of thought and enhance understanding in the light of reality in Jiangxi. Second, it is necessary to conduct examination and comparison in accordance with the party Central Committee's requirements and the provincial party committee's regulations, and take concrete action to effectively correct mistakes in the course of studying the speeches. Third, it is necessary to step up efforts to investigate and handle violations of law and discipline, in particular, major and grave cases. Fourth, it is necessary to check and enforce the system and discipline. Fifth, it is necessary to intensify the evaluation of cadres' improvement in work style.

The provincial-level organs shoulder a heavy responsibility in carrying out the modernization program and reinvigorating Jiangxi. As the central leading comrades said, the central organs play a pivotal role in the entire nation; so do the provincial-level organs in the whole province. They should be the staff departments, as well as the general commanding and logistics departments, for the provincial party committee and the provincial government. The operation of the provincial-level organs has a vital bearing on the growth or decline of all undertakings in the province. Party members and cadres of provincial-level organs, leading cadres in particular, must respond to the requirements, set by Comrade Yaobang, for raising the efficiency level, studying diligently, strictly observing discipline, and enhancing party spirit, in order to become real models for the people of the whole province.

A certain leading cadre abused powers in recruiting his daughter, son, son-in-law, wife, brother-in-law, and father-in-law as workers, and transferring them to his office in violation of the regulations. Some were sent to other places to pursue so-called advanced study before assuming their posts. He even had the audacity to order public security and other departments to set up an investigation team on a trivial family affair and to harass cadres and ordinary people. He went so far as to dismiss leading cadres of the Public Security Bureau and other departments concerned under the pretext that their investigation was inefficient. This person was also involved in dubious business dealings. His behavior aroused the indignation of the masses of people. Some cadres wrote a joint letter reporting the case to the provincial party committee and the party Central Committee. The case is now under investigation. Cadres who upheld principles and were dismissed by him have been rehabilitated.

A major case of reselling tungsten and gold for profit has been uncovered in Nankang County. The total amount of embezzlement, distribution of illegal profits, taking and giving bribes, and tax evasion reached 360,000 yuan. Forty-six people from 12 units were involved. The investigation has been stepped up. We must ensure that laws are observed, law enforcement is strict, and law breakers are punished. It is necessary to improve legislative work and popularize legal knowledge. Law enforcement cadres should set an especially good example in observing law. Severe punishment must be meted out to people who know and yet violate the law.

All comrades must promote unity in word and with concrete action. Without unity, there is no fighting force, and it will be impossible to realize the splendid plan. In addition to good timing and other favorable factors, we also need harmony among the people. This is a strong desire of the people of the province, who are already tired of factionalism and suffering. Whoever engages in factionalism will forfeit the support of the people. Provincial-level organs failing to achieve unity, especially those leading bodies at odds, should rectify this shortcoming within a set time limit.

Here, I wish to point out that the provincial-level organs should not only achieve unity within the organ itself, but also help lower levels achieve it. Mass disputes and fights with weapons between clans have been frequently reported in Jiangxi's rural areas. A total of 7,000 cases have been reported over the past few years. They were usually caused by feudal, patriarchal forces. They have done a great deal of harm. Departments concerned at various levels must adopt effective measures, assume responsibility at all levels, and pay close attention to firmly stopping such fights. Culprits who have started armed fights between clans should be duly handled. Party members, CYL members, cadres, and militiamen should never take part in armed fights, and they should work for unity and harmony.

Comrades: The eighth provincial party congress discussed and formulated a provincial economic and social development plan up to the year 2000. The second enlarged session of the eighth provincial party committee discussed and approved a preliminary plan for Jiangxi's Seventh 5-Year Plan, which will be submitted to the fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress, to be convened in the second quarter of this year, for examination, approval, promulgation, and implementation. This year is the first of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We should strive to carry out Comrade Yaobang's general guiding principles and instructions on achieving an economic growth rate slightly higher than the national average, and increase the province's industrial and agricultural output value by 10.6 percent, gross product of society by 11 percent, and local financial revenues by (?400 million) yuan over 1985.

As far as the reform is concerned, it is necessary to consolidate, digest, replenish, and perfect the reform measures already in force, in order to solve outstanding problems, retain merits and eliminate defects, and achieve greater reform results. Politically, it is necessary to resolutely safeguard and develop the situation of stability and unity, which has not come easily. This is a common task of party organizations at all levels and large numbers of cadres and people throughout the province; but, primarily, it is a task for the provincial-level organs. Comrades of the provincial-level organs have made active efforts to accomplish previous work assignments. It is hoped that you will do a better job in the next 5 years than in the previous 5 years, and that greater achievements can be scored this year than last.

Comrades: All party member-cadres of the provincial-level organs, first of all party member-cadres at the section or regimental level or higher, should take positive action to respond to the party Central Committee's call, and firmly and steadfastly perform the work in accordance with the central authorities' line, principles, and policies. They should display the spirit of that foolish old man who moved mountains, the spirit of dedication, carry forward the fine tradition of the old revolutionary bases in Jiangxi, and set good examples in noble ideas and sound work style for the people of the whole province. They should lead the people of the province in the struggle, united, firm and with perseverance to win new victories in 1986, prefulfill the goal of doubling the province's industrial and agricultural output value in 2 years, and accomplish the Seventh 5-Year Plan in all fields.

GUANGXI DISPATCHES CADRES TO GRASS-ROOTS UNITS

HK300423 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Under the arrangements made by the regional CPC Committee and people's government, since last September 1985, the region has selected some 36,800 cadres to form work teams and dispatched them to help with the work in grass-roots units. Over the past 4 months, under the leadership of CPC committees at all levels, the work teams have mainly strengthened political and ideological work in grass-roots units, perfected grass-roots organs at all levels, and promoted all work, achieving gratifying results.

In accordance with the decision made by the regional CPC Committee on problems concerning strengthening the building of rural grass-roots organs and organizations, the work teams have helped party and government leaders solve several problems.

1. They have further perfected grass-roots organization.

2. They have solved the problem concerning the remuneration of village cadres, thus unleashing the initiative of grass-roots cadres.

3. They have widely given short-term training to grass-roots cadres so as to deepen their ideological understanding.

4. They have established and perfected the cadre post responsibility system.

As a result, changes for the good have taken place in grass-roots organizations. The percentage of grass-roots organizations which have done well or relatively well in their work, has increased from 20 percent to about 40 percent, whereas the percentage of grass-roots organizations which have not done so well in their work has decreased from 25 percent to 15 percent.

While strengthening the building of grass-roots organizations, the work teams have helped grass-roots units solve some prominent problems. According to statistics, the work teams in all localities have helped local authorities investigate deal with some 34,000 cases, including wanton felling of mountain forests, burglary, illegally seizing state property, gambling, and feudal and superstitious activities. Criminals have been arrested or investigated according to law.

HENAN SECRETARY SPEAKS AT PRO AGANDA WORK FORUM

HK290650 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Excerpts] At the provincial forum on propaganda work, Yang Xizong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out: To study and probe the rules of propaganda and idological work, to heighten understanding about the aim of propaganda work, to make the work conform to the new situation, and to further improve the results of propaganda work are important tasks before us at present.

On the afternoon of 26 January, the 6-day provincial forum on propaganda work concluded in Zhengzhou. Hou Zhiying, member of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and director of the Propaganda Department, presided over the forum and made a summation speech.

The forum held: Following the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the province's situation on the ideological front has seen one of the best and most significant periods since the founding of the state. The same holds for the situation of the province's economics and politics. In addition, the work on the ideological front has been making healthy and remarkable progress. This is the main situation on the province's ideological front.

Under the prerequisite of fully affirming the main situation, we must be sober-minded and realize that there are still many problems concerning the front. The prominent one is that to a certain extent the principle of commodity exchange has intruded into the party's political life. The decaying capitalist thinking of valuing everything in terms of money has spread in ideological and cultural circles. Activities of feudalism and superstition have been revived in some localities. Moreover, many localities and units neglect the building of socialist spiritual civilization and slacken their ideological and political work.

The forum held: The main task of this year's work on the ideological and cultural fronts is to popularize in an in-depth way and comprehensively act in the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates. From the high plane of theory, we must further seek a common understanding about the party's Marxist line, principles, and policies. We should unswervingly take the road of socialism with Chinese characteristics. Proceeding from this main theme, we should closely integrate the province's economic construction, various reforms, and party rectification work. We should conduct investigations on a large scale and carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man who moved the mountains. We should further implement the building of spiritual civilization and ideological and political work, and continue to do well in conducting education on ideals, morality, education and discipline, the present situation, policies, and the four basic principles. We should also strive to fundamentally change the party work style and general mood of society for the better, so as to make new contributions for promoting the province's building of the two civilizations.

The focal points of this year's propaganda work are to continue to grasp well the propaganda on economic reform; the improved party work style and general mood of society; education about the present situation, policies, ideals, morality, education and discipline, and taking social benefits as the sole criterion for judging products for the mind; and the study of theory and cadres' education about Marxist theory.

In the course of forum, Yang Xizong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, listened to the discussion and reports of participating comrades. Comrade Yang Xizong affirmed the achievements made by the propaganda front and praised the work of propaganda cadres. He also proposed requirements and his expectations for further doing well in propaganda work.

Comrade Yang Xizong hoped that the province's propaganda front would develop some specialists, scholars, and outstanding workers.

Comrade Yang Xizong said: We must seriously study the issue of making the building of spiritual civilization and ideological and political work conform to the requirements of the new situation. We must constantly conduct in-depth investigations and probe the new ideological and social problems and how they are viewed by the people in the course of reforms and building. I think it is very important for us to promptly grasp the developing trends. Then we should find ways to solve problems.

BEIJING SECRETARY DISCUSSES SITUATION IN 1985

[Excerpts] On 16 January, the municipal CPC Committee held a forum with the participation of responsible persons of the democratic parties and noted nonparty personages to report on the 1985 economic work, party rectification and correcting unhealthy trends, and to earnestly listen to their opinions on improving the municipality's work. Attending the forum were responsible persons of the municipal CPC Committee, the municipal People's Congress, the municipal government, and the municipal CPPCC Committee, including Li Ximing, Chen Xitong, Jin Jian, Han Boping, Zhang Mingyi, Zhao Pengfei, and Gao Ge. Attending the forum were responsible persons of the democratic parties and noted nonparty personages, including Hou Jingru, Pu Jiexiu, Sun Fuling, Cheng Mingshao, Ding Gongnan, Shen Yifang, Mao Zhifen, Zheng Zhengren, Chen Bingji, and Xia Xiang.

Vice Mayor Han Boping first reported on the municipality's situation in the development of the economic undertakings spurred by reform. He said: The total industrial and agricultural output value and the volume of retail sales of commodities increased by a big margin last year. The revenue hit an all-time high in 1985. Improvements had been made in the supplies of such foodstuffs as meat, eggs, poultry, milk, and vegetables. Despite the price hikes of some commodities, the people's livelihood has notably been improved thanks to the big increases in the real wages of the broad masses of the staff members and workers. He said that last year, the municipal government had made some mistakes. For instance, the prices of vegetables were unreasonably rising for a time when we, without much experience and much consideration, and without full preparations, began to relax control over vegetable prices. The people were not satisfied with the situation.

After that, Jin Jian, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, reported on the municipality's situation in party rectification and the situation in straightening out party style, and the 1986 work arrangements. He said: Since last year when we began to carry out the second-stage party rectification, the municipal CPC Committee has done much work with regard to enhancing party spirit and correcting unhealthy practices with the focus on reform so that the municipality could score more notable achievements in the second-stage party rectification than the first-stage party rectification. At present, the masses have vigorously denounced the unhealthy practice of leading cadres taking advantage of their power to seek private gains, the cases of leading cadres taking advantage of their professional privileges to indulge themselves in bad practices, the unhealthy trend of seeking private gains on the occasion of reform, and the unhealthy practices in the political field. Through the investigations made by the leaders of the municipal CPC Committee, we understand that the main reason for these unhealthy practices was that we had neither sufficient understanding of nor effective measures for firmly preventing them. Recently the central authorities decided to focus on improving the party style in the central organs and the organs of Beijing Municipality, and simultaneously asked Beijing Municipality to realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social order within 6 months to 1 year. This was a great policy decision of the central authorities. In order to realize this requirement this year, we must attend to the following few tasks. We should conscientiously study the speeches of central leading comrades. Leading organs and leading cadres should set an example in consciously correcting the unhealthy practices, ceaselessly checking and handling major and appalling cases, consolidating discipline, perfecting systems, and closing loopholes. The whole party should be mobilized to ensure victory in the general battle of straightening out party style.

Comrades Li Ximing and Chen Xitong made speeches on the issues set forth in the reports and speeches delivered by the participants at the forum. They also exchanged views and opinions with the participants and thanked them for their criticism and suggestions on the work of Beijing Municipality.

BEIJING SECRETARY ON DEVELOPING SPORTS WORK

[Excerpts] The municipal sports work conference ended on 18 January after a 4-day session.

Respectively delivering speeches at the conference were leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government, including Li Ximing, Chen Xitong, Xu Weicheng, Bai Jiefu, Feng Mingwei, and Chen Haosu. Xia Xiang, vice chairman of the municipal CPPCC Committee, also made a speech at the conference. Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, pointed out in his speech: The central authorities have put forward that the capital should lead the whole country in doing the work in all fields. Therefore, the capital should take the lead with regard to sports development. We must strive to achieve the work in this regard. He said: The CPC committees and the governments at all levels should strengthen leadership over sports work, combine sports work with the general goal of building a powerful socialist country, enhance the guidance in and the organization of sports work, and strive to create more outstanding achievements with the existing favorable conditions.

In his speech, Xu Weicheng, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, expounded the issues concerning the position and functions of sports work in the two civilizations, sports reform, and the development of sports in the suburban counties.

HEBEI GRASPS MALPRACTICES IN PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK290751 Shijazhaung Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 13 Jan 86

[Excerpt] In carrying out township-level party rectification, our province has paid attention to education on the current situation and policies, grasped rectification and correction, and scored an initial success.

Our province's township-level party rectification began in early November 1985. Since then, the townships and towns in all localities, in view of the fact that some party members have failed to fully understand and effectively implement the party's existing policies, and that some have even suspected and gone against the policies in words and deeds, have conducted education on the current situation among the broad masses of party members by resorting to such methods as viewing the situation, comparing the present situation with the past, eliminating the misgivings of the people by citing the current situation, analyzing exemplary cases, and using one's own examples to explain a case. Through viewing the current situation and comparing the present situation with the past, the party members have clearly understood that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the lives of the peasants have been improved, that the fundamental reason for such a success is the party's good policies, and that without the good policies of the party, they would not have the good situation as it exists today in the country. This has enabled them to enhance their awareness in implementing the party's principles and policies.

While prominently grasping education on the current situation, the various localities have paid attention to solving the problems which the people have complained about, and have corrected them in the course of party rectification. Judging from the current situation, there are four problems which the rural people have strongly complained about and which have seriously affected the relationship between the party and the masses:

1) Embezzling public funds and misappropriating public property; 2) delaying payment of public funds for a long time; 3) lavish wining and dining; and 4) engaging in gambling, theft, feudal and superstitious practices, fighting, and forcibly occupying residental houses and land. If we fail to solve these problems, the masses will not be satisfied and these problems will also affect the party's prestige among the masses.

TIANJIN'S NI ZHIFU ATTENDS RURAL WORK MEETING

SK290511 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] The 1986 municipal rural work conference held a plenary session at the Tianjin Guesthouse on 28 January. Attending the session were leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government, including Ni Zhifu, Li Ruihuan, Wu Zhen, Tan Shaowen, and Nie Bichu.

The major tasks of the session are to relay, study, and implement the guidelines of the national rural work conference, to sum up and exchange the experiences in the rural reform gained last year, to work out a plan for this year's rural work, and to further consolidate and develop the excellent rural situation.

Liu Jinfeng, vice mayor of Tianjin Municipality, first relayed the guidelines of the national rural work conference at yesterday's session. On behalf of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government, Wu Zhen, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, delivered a report entitled "Persistently Carry Out Reform, Bravely Do Pioneering Work, and Strive to Comprehensively Vitalize the Rural Economy."

Comrade Wu Zhen said: The municipality has made great achievements in rural reform thanks to the implementation of the line, principles, and policies for the rural work stipulated by the central authorities since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. A new situation has emerged over the past few years in which the rural commodity economy was rapidly developed, the peasants' income increased by a big margin, and the municipality has made greater contributions to the state.

He set out 10 notable changes which had taken place through the rural reform.

Comrade Wu Zhen said: The guiding ideology for the 1986 rural work is to unswervingly implement the strategic principle that agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, to adhere to the orientation of ensuring that the rural areas become prosperous and serve the urban areas, to continue carrying out reform, to implement and perfect various policies, to readjust the agricultural, industrial, and trade production setups, to strive to clear circulation channels, and to make efforts to promote a sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the rural economy.

Regarding the tasks and measures for developing the rural commodity economy, Comrade Wu Zhen said: In 1986, the municipality should concentrate the rural work on further upgrading the quality of nonstaple foods, firmly grasping grain production, steadily developing the township- and town-run enterprises, accelerating the construction of the export bases, and rationalizing the rural production setup.

Comrade Wu Zhen finally stressed that the key to consolidating and developing the excellent situation in rural reform and to promoting the vitality of the rural commodity economy is that the CPC committees and the governments at all levels should conscientiously strengthen leadership over the rural work.

Attending yesterday's session were Yan Dakai, member of the Central Advisory Commission; Zhang Huaisan, chairman of the municipal Advisory Commission; and leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee, the municipal People's Congress, and the municipal government.

WEN WEI PO REPORTS DENG VISITING SICHUAN

HK020154 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 2 Feb 86 p 2

[Special dispatch from contributing correspondent Yang Yung-nian: "Deng Xiaoping Returns to Hometown on Eve of Spring Festival"]

[Text] Accompanied by Wang Zhen and others, Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping returned to his hometown in Sichuan on the eve of the Spring Festival. Deng Xiaoping drove to Dazu Baoding Shan to visit the world-famous Dazu stone carvings. He was healthy and walked at a brisk pace. While viewing the carvings, he frequently called with a smile to the comrades accompanying him: "Move faster, move faster."

Sichuan's Dazu stone carvings, gems of China's cultural heritage, were created in the late Tang Dynasty and were popular during the Song Dynasty. During his visit, Deng Xiaoping gasped with admiration every now and then. Deng Xiaoping was also accompanied by Yang Rudai, secretary of the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee; Liao Bokang, secretary of the Chongqing City CPC Committee; and Xiao Yang, mayor of Chongqing City. Liao Bokang gave Deng Xiaoping an account of Chongqing's construction work. They talked casually about domestic trivia in a happy and relaxed manner. The trees of Baoding Shan were luxuriantly green and the flowers were in full bloom in the rain. Deng Xiaoping pointed at the peace blossoms and said cheerfully: "Spring has arrived early in Sichuan." Deng Xiaoping's arrival among the masses on the eve of the traditional festival touched and inspired the people.

PLA TO CONDUCT 'REVIEW' OF PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK311155 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 30 Jan 86 p 5

["Special Dispatch From Beijing": "Units at and Above Divisional Level About To Launch 'Review' of Party Rectification in PLA, With Focus on Investigating and Dealing With Malpractices"]

[Text] The PLA units at and above the divisional level where party rectification has been concluded will launch "a review" of party rectification in the Army this year. While conducting the "reviewing" work, all units are encouraged to define their priorities in solving problems in the light of their own actual conditions. These remarks were made by Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, when he spoke at a forum held recently on the work of party rectification in the Army.

The forum which was held from 15 to 21 January concentrated on studying how to implement the Military Commission's Document No 1 of 1986 and how to make a success of the party rectification in units below the regimental level.

In a speech delivered on 20 January, Yang Shangkun pointed out: Rectification of party work style is indispensable to the carrying out of party rectification in Army units, as it constitutes an important content of party rectification. Over the last few years, although achievements have been made in curbing unhealthy practices, the work as a whole has not been carried out effectively. Some major and important cases have not been promptly handled. While conducting party rectification, some units went in for unhealthy practices and even repeated their errors in this regard which had been corrected.

The Military Commission vice chairman said: It is really necessary for the units at and above the divisional level where party rectification has been concluded to launch "a review" of party rectification. During the "reviewing" work, all units are encouraged to define their priorities in solving problems in the light of their own actual conditions.

In discussing the party rectification in units below the regimental level Yang Shangkun said: In the party rectification in units below the regimental level which is to begin this year, the curbing of unhealthy practices should not be neglected. Leading cadres and organizations, by their own actions, should take the lead and set an example for their subordinates to follow. Those party members who are engaged in malpractices should be sternly dealt with according to the party disciplinary codes which they have violated and those whose cases are grave should be expelled from the party. Those who violated state laws should be brought to justice and sternly dealt with by following legal procedures.

Yang Shangkun said: Document No 1 of 1986 of the Central Military Commission clearly states: Party rectification in units below the regimental level should be carried out earnestly and party rectification should be prevented from proceeding perfunctorily. To make a success of party rectification in these units, first, it is necessary to stress overcoming negative things and correcting unhealthy practices and, second, it is also necessary to energetically carry out the work of party building in the party committees in CYL organizations and grass-roots party branches and to bring into play the role of the party branch as a fighting force and the exemplary vanguard role of party members. Party committees at various levels should conscientiously assume responsibility. The three general departments and the military regions should take the lead in sending officers to grass-roots units. Officers sent to grass-roots units should not only serve as liaison men but also stay at selected grass-roots units to learn the situation there, to study their problems, and to conduct ideological work so that they can help the latter in specific fields to carry out party rectification successfully.

Among those who attended the forum were leading cadres of the offices for party rectification of various large units and representatives of the 14 units where party rectification was being tried experimentally.

AIR FORCE LAUNCHES DRIVE TO CORRECT MALPRACTICES

HK020409 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 2 Feb 86 p 5

["Special Dispatch From Beijing": "Air Force Launches Drive To Correct Malpractices"]

[Text] China's Air Force CPC Committee made a decision recently calling on its Standing Committee, leading organs, and individuals to adopt prompt measures to straighten out the party work style and set an example for the entire Air Force.

1. Conscientiously study the documents of the CPC Central Committee. The Standing Committee of the Air Force CPC Committee should take the lead in the study drive and enhance their consciousness in correcting party work style. According to the tentative plan, the Standing Committee members of the Air Force CPC Committee should use three half-days to study documents during the first quarter of the year. There should be special arrangements for study by the party committees branches and groups of the departments under the leading organs. It is necessary to integrate study with realities in each unit concerned to lay an ideological foundation for party rectification of the Air Force and its leading organs.

2. Do a good job of self-comparison and examination. The Standing Committee of the Air Force CPC Committee should take the lead in examining the unhealthy tendencies that have emerged since 1984 and stress examining problems concerning new leading bodies. Meanwhile, the party committees of the departments under the leading organs should also proceed from practice, seek truth from facts, develop democracy, and be serious in examining problems. The unhealthy tendencies related to the cadres of the leading organs should also be examined.

3. Work out measures for straightening out party work style. In addition to the regulations in force, the CPC Central Committee will formulate some specific rules and regulations which must be strictly implemented. In accordance with the actual circumstances of the Air Force, measures should also be taken to straighten out party style and enhance party spirit.

4. Strengthen leadership over correcting party work style. The Air Force CPC Committee should view correcting unhealthy tendencies of the leading organs as an important matter. Under the leadership of the Air Force CPC Committee, an office for straightening out party work style should be set up with the participation of the departments under the leading organs. This office should have a good grasp of policies. It should take the mass line, but not conduct mass movements. It should carry out criticism and self-criticism, but not practice ultra-leftism. It should neither engage in retaliation nor frame the innocent. It should make a thorough investigation of problems, but not force everyone to make a self-criticism to pass the examination. Those who have committed common mistakes should make a serious self-criticism and resolutely correct their mistakes. Thorough investigations should be conducted in major cases and for people who have committed serious mistakes. In the course of the investigations, facts must be verified and individuals involved must be dealt with sternly according to policies.

5. Properly investigate and handle the major problems. The departments concerned under the leading organs should be responsible for investigating and handling major problems. Other problems involving unhealthy tendencies should also be examined in earnest. Initial results should be achieved by the Spring Festival and remarkable success scored before the second quarter of the year.

6. Correcting party work style should be integrated with Army building. The study and examination concerning correcting party work style should be conducted in earnest and integrated with Army building. Meanwhile, work for 1986 should be arranged and implemented conscientiously in line with the Fifth Plenary Session of the Sixth Air Force CPC Committee so that correcting party work style will promote our work and the success in our work will in turn straighten out party work style.

CHINA DAILY ON INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF PEACE

HK010514 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 1 Feb 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Year of Peace"]

[Text] International Year of Peace activities got under way at conferences in Geneva, Warsaw and Athens in the last two weeks. Initiated by Costa Rica in 1981, the idea won worldwide support and culminated in the proclamation of the International Year of Peace [IYP] by the United Nations last autumn. This indicated that the people the world over are greatly concerned over the international situation and strongly desire to preserve peace.

China ardently loves peace. In the more than 100 years before liberation, this nation suffered untold misery as a result of aggressive wars by the imperialist powers. Though in the almost 40 years since liberation, tremendous progress has been made in all fields, the country still lags behind advanced countries in terms of economic development. It sorely needs a long peaceful world environment in order to devote its efforts and resources to building a prosperous and healthy civilized socialist country.

Thus, China welcomes every move that promotes peace and brings on the prevention of war. China was one of those who made the IYP proposal at the UN in 1984 and will play an active role in all IYP activities this year sponsored by the UN on behalf of peace. And China has shown its support for peace and disarmament by reducing its armed forces by one million and converting a large proportion of military industry to civil production.

At present, the main source of world disturbance and instability, however, is superpower rivalry. The escalation of the arms race, especially nuclear arms, between the two superpowers constitutes the most serious threat to peace. However, it is gratifying to note that while the danger of world war hangs ominously over humanity, the forces striving to preserve peace are also growing. Under these circumstances, both superpowers have made many statements and proposals on disarmament in recent years, especially last year. If they intend to back up their words with deeds, they should do something concrete in this Year of Peace.

Third World countries have mainly shared China's fate in the past. Like China, they are also taking on the arduous task of economic development. A peaceful world environment is indispensable to them, too. That is why they champion world peace. However, not only is peace a prerequisite for economic development; it also depends on the economic development and common prosperity of many nations for its preservation. No peace and stability can be securely built on the basis of continuing poverty and privation in the developing countries. On this account, the North-South dialogue should be conducted more actively and South-South co-operation further strengthened. The old irrational world economic order needs to be reformed to expedite common prosperity for all nations. China is consistently for better and closer economic and trade ties with all countries which mutually benefit both sides.

The International Year of Peace activities will surely further awaken the world's people to the vital role they can play in defending peace and averting war. Their ranks will swell to an even mightier force. And undoubtedly their great cause will prevail.

THREATS AGAINST LIBYA CONDEMNED AT ATHENS MEETING

[Text] Athens, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Delegates to a peace conference here have condemned U.S. threats against Libya and called on it to pull its Sixth Fleet out of Libya's coastal waters. In an opening speech to the "Mediterranean and World Peace Conference" yesterday, Romesh Chandra, president of the World Peace Council, said: "The fact that the U.S. forces may violate the sovereignty of Libya is a threat to the sovereignty of all of us. We call on the United States to leave the area."

Omar al-Hamdi, president of the Arab People's Congress, urged the 90 delegates from 38 countries attending the conference to work out a resolution condemning the United States for its present actions against Libya. While calling for a Mediterranean "free of American military presence," the Arab leader urged that peace efforts in the Mediterranean must not be limited to those in the political field, but should be reinforced with economic cooperation.

The three-day peace conference, held within the framework of the United Nations' International Year of Peace, was also addressed by Vyacheslav Ustinov, U.N. undersecretary for political and security affairs, who stressed the importance of peace in the Mediterranean. He cited at the same time peace initiatives in the Balkans as a "positive example" to follow in promoting a climate of security in the region. Ustinov will declare the official inauguration of the U.N. International Year of Peace next Monday at a ceremony to be at Delphi, site of the sanctuary to Apollo in ancient Greece.

U.S., USSR REPORTEDLY TO EXCHANGE PRISONERS

OW031849 Beijing XINHUA in English 1841 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 3 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union have reportedly reached an agreement on a prisoner exchange. THE NEW YORK TIMES quoted U.S. Government officials as saying that the agreement called for the release of Soviet dissident Anatoliy B. Shcharanskiy and three or four Western intelligence operatives held by the Soviet Union in exchange for the releases of an equal number of East bloc [word indistinct] a 37-year-old Jewish, was sentenced to 13 years in prison and labor camps for treason, espionage and "anti-Soviet agitation" in 1978. [sentence as received]

Reports said U.S. President Ronald Reagan raised the issue of Shcharanskiy and other dissidents with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev at the Geneva summit last November. Since then Moscow has begun to allow the emigration to the West of a handful of Soviet citizens married to foreigners. THE NEW YORK TIMES said the report will be published Monday by the Federal German daily BILD, which cited information obtained from "Moscow Kremlin circles." The exchange, if carried out, was scheduled for February 11 on the Glienicke Bridge which divides West Berlin from the Democratic Republic of Germany. The bridge is the site of several previous exchanges.

UK, FRANCE CONSIDER NUCLEAR ARMS TALKS WITH USSR

OW310751 Beijing XINHUA in English 0648 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] London, January 30 (XINHUA) -- Britain and France will cooperate closely as they consider joining talks with the Soviet Union on reducing nuclear arms, a Foreign Office statement said today. The statement followed a working lunch and two hours of regular bilateral talks between Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and his French counterpart Roland Dumas here today.

"They discussed possible responses to the recent Soviet arms reduction proposals. Both foreign ministers stressed the need to cooperate closely in the discussions, the statement said.

Britain and France are Europe's two nuclear powers and both have said they would consider joining talks on reducing their independent nuclear arsenals. However, their joining in the arms talks would be dependent on an agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States on substantial reduction in the two superpowers' nuclear arsenals.

FRENCH MINISTER REJECTS PART OF SOVIET PROPOSAL

[Text] Moscow, February 1 (XINHUA) -- France has rejected part of the new Soviet disarmament proposal calling for a halt to modernization of British and French nuclear weapons, French Finance Minister Pierre Beregovoy told Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze here Friday.

In their talks, Beregovoy conveyed to Shevardnadze President Francois Mitterrand's reply to the Soviet plan announced by Mikhail Gorbachev on January 15 proposing elimination of all nuclear weapons in the world in three stages by the year 2000. After the meeting, Beregovoy said the reply embodies Paris's well-known position on a global balance of forces. He said he had told the Soviet foreign minister that the French independent nuclear arsenal, which is a deterrent to any attacks on France, needs to be improved, thus rejecting part of the Gorbachev proposal for a non-modernization of British and French nuclear forces. The French minister also said that the Gorbachev plan is "in the right direction." The proposal is important and being studied by France, he said.

U.S. PLEDGES SUPPORT FOR ANGOLA'S SAVIMBI

[Text] Washington, January 30 (XINHUA) -- President Reagan pledged to be "very supportive" in Angolan opposition leader Jonas Savimbi's efforts to topple the Government of Angola. During a meeting today with Savimbi, leader of the Union for Total Independence of Angola (Unita), President Reagan said, "we want to be very helpful to what Dr. Savimbi and his people are trying to do, and what we're trying to arrive at is the best way to do that." Savimbi also met with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger Wednesday. Hoping that "there will be progress," Savimbi presented a list of military hardware to Weinberger, according to press reports here.

Savimbi arrived here Tuesday to seek military aid from the U.S. Government in his fight against the Angolan government. It was reported that the Reagan administration is seeking up to 15 million dollars in aid for Savimbi secretly rather than openly. But, the U.S. Government, which has no diplomatic relations with the southern African country, imposed pressure upon the Angolan Government in a bid to secure the withdrawal of 30,000 Cuban troops from Angola. Both the Angolan and U.S. Governments have had several rounds of negotiations on the Angolan issue but so far no agreement has been achieved. Now the United States has changes its negotiation policy towards the Angolan Government and announced its public support to the Angolan opposition forces despite strong opposition from the international community.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS TO RETURN TO GULF OF SIDRA

OW031909 Beijing XINHUA in English 1901 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 3 (XINHUA) -- According to U.S. Administration officials, the United States is planning to return two aircraft carriers -- the USS Coral Sea and the USS Saratoga -- to the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast, THE WASHINGTON POST reported today. The carriers will be ordered to leave liberty ports in the Mediterranean so they can arrive near the Gulf of Sidra next week, the officials said.

The carriers were in that area last week for one week of flight operations, which Washington called "a war of nerves against Libya" and "a strong message" that the United States will "test Libyan reaction." Tensions off the Libyan coast have increased since the two U.S. aircraft carriers entered the central Mediterranean earlier last month following allegations that Libya was involved in terrorist attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports on December 27. The United States since has declared several times that is would not rule out military action against Libya. The latest decision on returning the two carriers indicates that the United States will retaliate quickly if Libya should take action against U.S. ships or planes in the Gulf of Sidra, the officials said. The United States denies Libya's claim that the entire Gulf of Sidra falls within Libyan waters. Washington only recognizes Libyan territorial limits as extending 12 miles from shore.

STATE DEPARTMENT SAYS MBFR TALKS HOLD PROMISE

[Text] Washington, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The United States today pledged to continue to seek agreement on reductions in and limitations on conventional forces in central Europe. The U.S. State Department said in a statement that members of NATO and the Warsaw Pact resumed today in Vienna their discussions known as the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction Talks (MBFR) which "hold more promise of progress than at any previous time in their 12-year history."

The statement said the NATO proposal accepts the general framework of the February 1985 model proposed by the Soviet Union and its allies for a time-limited first-stage agreement. It also sets aside the longstanding NATO requirement that the sides agree on the size of present troop levels before treaty signature, which the Soviets have long claimed to be the major barrier to agreement. "These important moves are consistent with the Geneva summit declaration of the importance the U.S. attaches to progress in the Vienna negotiations," the statement said. The statement said the United States is prepared to begin reducing 5,000 U.S. and 11,500 Soviet ground troops in the central European reductions area as soon as a first-phase agreement is reached. NATO has proposed a commitment by both alliances not to increase total troop levels in the MBFR reductions area for three years following the initial reductions.

"We hope this will be only the first step in reducing tensions between East and West in Europe, and the world's most heavily armed frontier," the statement said. However, the statement stressed that such reductions and limitations "should only take place on the basis of mutual trust resulting from an effective verification regime." It concluded that if the East can "match us in flexibility and goodwill, then the basis for an agreement is possible."

USSR REITERATES 'POLITICAL SOLUTION' FOR CAMBODIA

[Text] Moscow, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze reiterated here today that the Soviet Union has not changed its stand for a political solution to the Southeast Asian issue. While receiving the "ambassador" of the Hanoi-backed Heng Samrin regime to the Soviet Union, the Foreign Minister said that his country supports the "constructive proposal" put forward at a recent meeting of foreign ministers from Hanoi, Vientiane and Phnom Penh. At the meeting the participants repeated a call for talks with non-communist Southeast Asian countries to find a political solution to the Kampuchea issue.

Observers here noted that the Soviet Union has recently made repeated contacts with Vietnam and the Phnom Penh regime. On January 26, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Mikhail Rapitsa received the ambassadors of the three Indochinese countries. From January 23 to 29, the Soviet Union and Vietnam held "political consultations" in Moscow. During all these contacts, the situation in Southeast Asia was discussed.

PRAVDA BLAMES SPACE SHUTTLE TRAGEDY ON SDI

["PRAVDA Attributes U.S. Shuttle Crash to Star Wars" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, January 31 (XINHUA) -- People should learn from the tragedy of the U.S. space shuttle Challenger that "star wars are inadmissible," the Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA said today. The paper referred to some U.S. newspaper reports, which, it said, suggested that the Strategic Defense Initiative was the "main cause of the catastrophe." "Regrettably, it is not SDI but seven astronauts that have become the main victim in the disaster," PRAVDA wrote.

PRAVDA said that Challenger blew up because of a technical fault and the SDI program could also malfunction. The paper asked if "they ever think that the slightest malfunction in that technology may cause world catastrophe? And who can guarantee that there will be no such malfunction?" The paper also accused the U.S. space agency of recklessly speeding the shuttle launches to increase profits. The previous Challenger launches had faced problems and some of the defects were quite serious, but the U.S. space agency NASA hurried to launch shuttles to attract rich companies to the space program as soon as possible, the paper charged. "Is it sensible for the sake of profits to risk human lives?" the paper demanded.

The Soviet official news agency TASS reported the explosion of the shuttle Challenger on January 28 within 30 minutes of the accident. On the following day, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev sent U.S. President Ronald Reagan a telegram expressing deep sorrow for the death of the seven crewmen. PRAVDA's criticism today indicates that the Soviet Union will continue its campaign against the U.S. star wars program.

S. KOREANS DEMANDING CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION

["Roundup: South Koreans Demand Constitutional Revision" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Pyongyang, January 31 (XINHUA) — The demand for a "revision of Constitution" and "direct election of president" has become the pivot of the anti-"government" movement in South Korea. Yi Min-u, president of the largest opposition New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), has declared several times since the beginning of this year that the 10-million-signature campaign for a revision of the Constitution will be launched from February as scheduled. The authorities would not have enough prisons if they try to arrest all the supporters of the campaign, Yi warned.

In a "state policy speech" on January 16, South Korean "President" Chon Tu-hwan said that any revision of the Constitution should be postponed till after 1988. A representative of the ruling Democratic Justice Party (DJP) even threatened to stop the campaign according to law." All this has provoked strong protests among the opposition forces and college students. In an interview with foreign correspondents Wednesday, renowned South Korean democratic figure Kim Tae-chung rejected the postponement of the revision, saying: "So long as the autocracy exists in this land, there can be no human dignity, justice or political stability." At a rally, Mun Ik-hwan, a well-known church minister and chairman of the National Congress for Democracy and Reunification, denounced the authorities for obstructing the revision and distributed leaflets calling for the overthrow of the autocracy and the formulation of a democratic Constitution. Mun was arrested by police at his house on Wednesday evening.

Students, now still in their winter vacation, have held rallies and demonstrations for a constitutional revision. On January 22, over 500 students of the Seoul National University, at a campus gathering established a council for abolishing the existing Constitution, in response to a call made by several other Seoul universities. On January 28, some 300 students from the Yonsei University, Ehwa Women's University, Hongik College and the Methodist Theological College rallied and demonstrated on the campus of Yonsei and set up a regional council of the national signature campaign. The struggle for revision of the Constitution by opposition parties and students is expected to pose a serious problem for South Korean authorities this year.

KIM TAE-CHUNG UNDER HOUSE ARREST IN SEOUL

OW010910 Beijing XINHUA in English 0827 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Renowned South Korean democratic figure Kim Tae-chung was placed under house arrest again by the Seoul authorities yesterday, according to reports reaching here. Some 100 armed policemen surrounded Kim's house to prevent him from attending protest activities staged in the offices of the opposition National Congress for Democracy and Reunification. Over 50 church ministers, scholars and writers are protesting against a 10-day detention of the Congress' Chairman Mun Ik-hwan.

Kim, one of the co-chairman of the Council for Promotion of Democracy, is an active supporter of a campaign for constitutional reform. It is hoped that over 10 million people will sign a petition in favour of such reform.

Kim has been placed under house arrest several times since he returned from the United States one year ago.

DPRK REJECTS S. KOREAN CROSS-TIES PROPOSAL

OW310852 Beijing XINHUA in English 0845 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Pyongyang, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Korean party paper NODONG SINMUN today rejected as an attempt to "legalize 'two Koreas'" and "perpetuate the division of Korean nation" Seoul's recent proposal for a cross-establishment of diplomatic relations by the United States and Japan, and by China and the Soviet Union with the two parts of Korea respectively.

The paper made the charge in a commentary of the January 28 television speech by Yi Won-kyong, South Korean minister of foreign affairs, in which he said establishment of diplomatic relations by the Soviet Union and China with Seoul and by the United States and Japan with Pyongyang will be systematic measures to ensure peace in the Korean peninsula. The commentary noted that the tense situation in Korea has resulted from the U.S. occupation of the Southern part of Korea, to which nothing can be done by cross-diplomatic relations. The prerequisite for relaxing tensions and creating peace in the peninsula is to hold tripartite talks among the United States and the two parts of Korea, the commentary said.

ZHANG JINGFU MEETS JAPANESE CANON DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Zhang Jingfu met a delegation from the Canon Company of Japan led by its Deputy President Keizo Yamaji here this afternoon. After his arrival here on January 29 Yamaji visited an automatic control office facilities exhibition sponsored by the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, and presided over the opening ceremony of the Beijing office of the Canon Company.

SHANGHAI BOND AGREEMENT SIGNED IN TOKYO

[Text] Tokyo, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Shanghai Municipal Investment and Trust Corporation (SMITC) is to issue bonds totalling 25 billion yen (about 127.6 million U.S. dollars) in Japan under an agreement signed here today. The chairman of the SMITC board, Liu Jingji, and the vice president of the Nomura Securities Corporation, Koichi Mizuguchi, signed the agreement today together with officials from concerned securities corporations and banks. The ten-year bonds are issued at an annual interest rate of 6.6 percent.

According to SMITC sources, the capital raised will be used to develop industries in Shanghai, particularly those that turn out products for export. In his speech at the signing ceremony, Liu said this was the first time his corporation had issued bonds abroad, and it marked just a beginning. He promised that his corporation will try various ways in the future to raise and use foreign capital. Mizuguchi said that Shanghai, the biggest industrial city in China, has formally entered the world finance and capital market by issuing the bonds. He expressed the hope that it would capitalize on the finance and capital market in Japan.

CGDK URGES SOVIETS TO END AID TO VIETNAM

OW010850 Beijing XINHUA in English 0823 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea said today in a commentary that the Soviet Union should end its military and economic aid to Vietnam if it sincerely wants to solve the Kampuchean problem. The commentary said the Kampuchean people would ask the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea to restore relations with the Soviet Union when it suspends aid to Vietnam.

The commentary noted that the Soviet Union has claimed to be working actively on the Kampuchea problem with a view to facilitating the "regional talks" between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the "Indochina" bloc. On January 27, a Soviet diplomat in Singapore further claimed that the Soviet Union was willing to act as a guarantor for any agreements reached by the two blocs. But the facts belie Soviet claims, the commentary said. In recent years the Soviet Union has doubled its military aid, including tanks, guns and other weapons and military supplies to Vietnam so as to support Vietnamese dry-season offensives against Patriotic Armed Forces of Democratic Kampuchea. Evidence shows that the Soviet Union has not yet changed its position on the Kampuchea problem, the commentary said.

ACTIONS OF CAMBODIAN RESISTANCE ANS DISCLOSED

[Text] Bangkok, January 31 (XINHUA) -- An underground armed unit of the Nationalist Sihanoukian Army (ANS) launched its first assault on the Vietnamese troops located in the suburb of Phnom Penh, thus encouraging the resistance forces of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. This news was disclosed to XINHUA by Prince Norodom Rannarit, commander-in-chief of the ANS, here this evening.

The assault took place at 8:00 p.m. on December 6 last year at a stronghold of the Vietnamese Army near the Pepsi Cola factory, 4-5 km. from the center of Phnom Penh. The fighting lasted half an hour. As a result, 16 Vietnamese were killed and many others wounded. As for the ANS, only five were sacrificed and one was wounded. The ANS seized the enemy stronghold at 10:00 p.m. and withdrew by boat along the Tonle Sap River to the coastal village Mokkampoul. The prince said, "this important news is late because the communications between the interior and our headquarters are not convenient. But the military presence of our Army near Phnom Penh has actually shown the progress of the resistance forces."

Another successful attack at the headquarters of the 7709 Unit of the Vietnamese Army occured in the capital of Kompong Cham Province on January 6 this year. Thirty two Vietnamese troops were killed, and a lot of ammunitions and military supplies captured at the cost of four killed and one hurt on the ANS side, the commander-in-chief said. What merits mention was that, Rannarit said, the ANS and the Democratic Kampuchean National Army had set a good example for coordinated fighting against the enemy in the interior. There were two Vietnamese posts situated on the northern and southern shores of a river, 10 km. east of Battambang City. Well coordinated, the ANS unit attacked the northern post at 3:35 a.m. on January 20 and the National Army started its onslaught at the southern post simultaneously. The two Vietnamese posts were destroyed at the same time. The ANS killed 12 Vietnamese and seized one mortar, one rocket launcher and a lot of military equipment. "I am very glad to learn this good news. I expect more smooth and successful military cooperation with the National Army and the Khmer People's National Liberation Army," the commander-in-chief said.

SRV COUNCIL OF STATE RELIEVES OFFICIAL FROM POST

[Text] Hanoi, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese Vice Chairman of the Council of Ministers Tran Phuong was relieved of his post, according to a communique released here today by the Council of State. The communique did not give the reason for Tran's dismissal or name who will replace him, but only said he was removed from his office at a meeting of the Council of State held on January 30.

Tran Phuong, who was also a member of the Central Committee of the Vietnamese Communist Party, assumed vice-chairmanship in April 1982. Before that he had been minister of home trade and often spoken to foreign correspondents in Hanoi explaining the government's economic policies. It was admitted at the Ninth Session of the Central Committee of the Vietnamese Communist Party held last December that "defects" arising from the implementation of the price, wage and currency reforms had produced an unhealthy impact on society and its economy. Some foreign diplomats here attributed Tran's dismissal to setbacks in the economic reform.

THAILAND PROTESTS RECENT SRV 'AGGRESSION'

OW010814 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 1 (XINHUA) -- The government of Thailand yesterday lodged a protest at Vietnam's "recent acts of crimes and aggression" against Thailand, according to the BANGKOK POST here today. The note sent to the United Nations said, on January 23, the Vietnamese occupation troops in Kampuchea fired 100 artillery shells at Thai Marine bases located in three villages of Khlong Yai District of Trat Province in eastern Thailand, killing three Thai Marines and wounding several others. On January 24, three Thai soldiers were killed and another three were hurt when some 30 Vietnamese troops intruded 3.5 kilometres into Thailand and ambushed a Thai patrol unit in Nam Yun District of Ubon Ratchathani Province. The note also denounced Vietnam for its successive violation of Thai sovereignty.

AUSTRIAN MINISTER DISCUSSES CAMBODIA, ICK

[Text] Bangkok, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Austrian Foreign Minister Leopold Gratz said here today that the Kampuchean conflict should be solved in line with the U.N. resolutions calling for total withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea.

Leopold Gratz, current chairman of the International Conference on Kampuchea (ICK), told reporters that the present situation in Kampuchea is a threat to peace. The task of the ICK, he said, is to encourage and help nations in this region and the political forces of the Kampuchean people to find a solution to the Kampuchean problem, "because this country (Kampuchea) needs a peaceful solution of the problem, a withdrawal of foreign troops." He praised the ASEAN countries for making a genuine offer for cooperation of all states in the region in order to find a practical solution to the Kampuchean issue.

The ICK held its first meeting in July 1981 and issued a declaration urging all foreign troops to withdraw from Kampuchea. Vietnam refused to take part in it and rejected the call. Gratz took over the post of chairman of the U.N.-sponsored International Conference on Kampuchea on January 1 this year.

During his four-day visit to Thailand, Gratz held talks with Thai leaders and visited Kampuchean refugee camps. He is scheduled to visit Hanoi early next month after his tour of Thailand and Indonesia.

THAI BORDER RESIDENTS KILLED BY LAO TROOPS

OW030750 Beijing XINHUA in English 0705 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Lao troops intruded into Thailand's northeastern province of Ubon Ratchanthani and fired several rockets on a village on February 1, killing five villagers and wounding five others, the local newspapers quoted the governor of that province as reporting today.

Governor Danai Khetsiri said yesterday that an unknown number of Lao troops crossed the Mekong River border to a village in Khemmaat District at about 10 p.m. and fired rockets at five houses. The raid lasted five minutes before the Lao intruders retreated without confronting Thai border troops. He said that he had ordered all districts along the border in his province to be ready to evacuate civilians if the situation worsens. The border incident came amid reports that Thailand is moving to improve relations with Laos by relaxing restrictions on goods sold to Laos which has a common border of 1,600 kilometers with Thailand.

THAI ARMY COMMANDER ON SRV-PRK TROOP CONFLICTS

[Text] Bangkok, February 1 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking Thai military officer said here this morning that conflicts between the Vietnamese troops and the Heng Samrin regime in Kampuchea would weaken their current dry-season offensive at the Kampuchean-Thai border.

First Army Commander Lt. General Pichit Kunlawanit told the press that such conflicts were coupled with the worsening economic situation both in Kampuchea and Vietnam. It seemed that the occupation forces would not be able to play an active role in the battle field this year, Pichit said. Although the Vietnamese had recently moved more tanks closer to the border, "they would find it hard to launch a major offensive against the resistance forces," he added. However, Pichit said, the Thai border troops would maintain vigilance against possible massive Vietnamese incursion into Thai territory.

THAI SOLDIERS KILLED BY SRV-PLANTED MINES

[Text] Bangkok, February 2 (XINHUA) -- Four Thai soldiers were killed and ten others seriously wounded in the past two days by Soviet-made booby traps (wooden mines) planted by Vietnamese troops near the Kampuchean border, the local newspaper BANGKOK POST reported today, quoting Thai military sources. One Thai soldier was killed and three others were seriously wounded while on patrol on January 31 in Nam Yun District on Ubon Ratchanthani Province in northeastern Thailand close to Siem Reap Province of Kampuchea, the sources said. Three more soldiers were killed and a number of others wounded at almost the same place yesterday, they added.

It was reported that the Soviet Union had delivered 100,000 booby traps to the Vietnamese stationed in Kampuchea and thousands of them were planted along the Thai-Kampuchean border. The newspaper quoted an informed military source as saying yesterday that Thai military intelligence had monitored a message from frontline Vietnamese commanders requesting more booby traps to be placed along the border.

AQUINO OUTLINES PHILIPPINE FOREIGN POLICY PLANS

OW031559 Beijing XINHUA in English 1445 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Opposition presidential aspirant Corazon Aquino said here today that the Philippines will maintain peaceful, fair, and friendly relations with all countries regardless of ideology, if she wins the election on February 7. She made the statement in her fourth major policy speech delivered before the joint Philippine and foreign Chambers of Commerce.

This is the first time Corazon, widow of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino, talked about her foreign policies since she decided to challenge President Ferdinand Marcos in the forthcoming presidential election. She has been busy gathering supports from different parts of the country. Mrs. Aquino said she will make a special effort to revitalize relations with other member states in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), which, she declared, has become "almost moribund" as a result of the controversy between the Philippines ane Malaysia over the sovereignty of Sabah, formerly known as North Borneo. "We shall try to promote more balanced and equitable relations with the United States, Japan, the countries of Western Europe and the Pacific Basin, and all other countries with which we share a common loyalty to the principles of democracy," she said.

Concerning the U.S. military bases in Clark and Subic, the 53-year-old presidential candidate reiterated that "we do not propose to renounce the existing military bases agreement or the treaty of mutual defense with the United States. At the same time, however, I must state with candor that no sovereign nation should consent that a portion of its territory be a perpetual possession of a foreign power." Before the bases agreement expires in 1991, she said, a process of consultation will be undertaken with the United States and neighboring states, but, above all, with the Filipinos, to make sure that any arrangement reached will serve the best interest of "the entire free world," and especially of the Filipinos.

Mrs. Aquino had made separate speeches on her economic, social and political policies since January. She pledged to improve the country's economic situation mainly through the dismantling of monopolies in coconut and sugar and a rapid government withdrawal from private business. She also said that she would work for efficient utilization and equitable sharing of the ownership and benefits of land and would try to solve the insurgency problem by means of dialog. Mrs. Aquino said the her political program is simply aimed at dismantling the Marcos regime and building a "genuine democracy."

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON SINO-GREEK COOPERATION

[Special dispatch by Zhang Qihua: "While Interviewed by a RENMIN RIBAO Reporters' Group, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou Says That the Prospects for Greek-Chinese Friendshp and Cooperation Are Broad"]

[Text] Athens, 21 Jan -- Greek Prime Minister Papandreou granted an interview this afternoon at his residence to a reporters' group led by Luo Erzhuang, director of the International Section of RENMIN RIBAO, and had a friendly conversation with members of the group. While talking about the relations between the two countries, Papandreou pointed out that although Greece and China pursue different social systems in addition to their great geographical and demographic differences and the size of their territories, they have devised methods for mutual contacts and maintained equal and friendly relations.

He added: there is no shadow cast over Greece and China and their relations are good. Both countries are descended from ancient civilizations, and our mutual understanding is established on the basis of such civilization. The prospects for friendship and cooperation between the two countries are broad. We should continue to explore these prospects so that we can further expand our friendly and cooperative relations in the economic, trade, and cultural fields, among others. He hopes that cooperative relations between the two countries will become an example to be followed by others.

During the interview, Prime Minister Papandreou also enthusiastically praised the wisdom of the Chinese leaders and the socialist economic reform now in progress in China. He spoke highly of the efforts of the Chinese Government to raise the living standard of the Chinese people.

Papandreou briefed the reporters' group on the foreign policy and standpoint of Greece. He stated that it is necessary for Greece to pursue a multidirectional foreign policy. What the Greek Government and peole seek is a world free from nuclear threat, a world which has cast off the control of the two blocs, and which can solve the problem of confrontation through the abolition of regional conflicts.

While talking about relations between Greece and the West, he said: As a member of NATO and the EEC, Greece has certain obligations. However, no obligations should be placed above the two principles that guide Greek foreign policy -- national interests and international peace.

While talking about internal policy, the Greek prime minister pointed out that the success of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement in the 1981 general election was a great victory. But the party is facing a more severe challenge. The Greek Government has started to carry out a series of reforms in various system in order to satisfy the actual demands of society. The government maintains that the power of the central authorities should be delegated to local authorities so that balanced development of various regions can be ensured. In recent years, the government has increased the wages of those earning low incomes and provided citizens with medical, educational, and social services. Due to a lack of experience, the Greek Government is still encountering great economic difficulties. He stressed that the government will pursue its programs and policies more effectively in the future.

Chinese Ambassador to Greece Chang Hongsheng was also present at the interview.

That evening, Greek Foreign Minister Papoulas met with the reporters' group at the Foreign Ministry. He made a friendly speech on further developing relations between the two countries.

NETHERLANDS MINISTER ON COOPERATION WITH PRC

OW311715 Beijing XINHUA in English 1647 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] The Hague, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Prospects augured well for Dutch participation in major Chinese energy and transport development projects, said Dutch Minister of Transportation and Waterways Smit-Kroes here yesterday.

Upon her return from a six-day visit to China, Smit-Kroes said at the airport that Chinese authorities had indicated they would like to work together with Dutch firms on domestic harbor, waterways, shipping and land reclamation projects. She said the Netherlands and China had also indicated their intention to cooperate in telecommunications. The minister urged Dutch companies to forge links with China to enhance their long-term chances to participate in China's major projects.

Referring to a Sino-Dutch agreement on the study of ways to boost the capacity of the Chinese port of Nantong, the minister said she expected the Netherlands to be involved in the construction work and management of the port. The minister said Chinese authorities had become more realistic about the possibilities for short-term development projects since her previous visit in 1980.

MITTERRAND ON FRANCO-SOVIET, U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] Paris, January 30 (XINHUA) -- President Francois Mitterrand says that France's independence and the construction of Europe are complementary to each other. Mitterrand writes this is the preface to a collection of his speeches on foreign policy since his election in 1981. Paris-Bonn axis is a necessary condition for the construction of Europe, he stresses.

The book, "Reflections on the Foreign Policy of France", deals with such problems as national independence, balance of forces between the two military blocs in the world, Europe's construction, the right of the people to self-determination and the development of poor countries. On Franco-Soviet relations, he says: "Our interests, more often than people believe, make us closer. Russia, in our history, has always represented, and can still represent, a useful counterweight, either on the European scale or the planetary scale." The Soviet proposal on disarmament "shows that Russia remains the homeland of chess and that Gorbachev is an excellent player", Mitterrand adds.

On the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program, Mitterrand expresses concern that it might "achieve what neither isolationist campaigns in the United States nor Soviet inducements have obtained since the way: the decoupling or the separation of two unequally protected defense systems of the United States and Europe." Mitterrand says France will press ahead with its own strategic nuclear force and may begin production of the neutron bomb.

YAO YILIN REAFFIRMS OPENNESS TO ALL GULF NATIONS

[Text] Beijing, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Yao Yilin said here today China will not change its policy of opening to the outside world despite some problems. He claimed that China has made great achievements by implementing this open policy in the past few years.

Yao made these remarks at a meeting this afternoon with Nabir Fatah, deputy secretary general of the Abu Dhabi's Chamber of Commerce of the United Arab Emirates, and Bashir Sadiq, editor of the Chamber's publication. Yao told the visitors that China has imported advanced technologies and drawn some foreign capital since its adoption of the open policy. Under this policy, he said, China is open to all the Gulf countries, with or without diplomatic ties. He pointed out that developing economic relations and trade between China and the Gulf countries will benefit both sides. Therefore, China has set up a corporation for trade with the Gulf countries. He welcomed entrepreneurs and businessmen from the Gulf countries to invest in China. "We also welcome banks of the Gulf countries, if they wish, to set up representative offices in China," he added.

WU XUEQIAN CELEBRATES PRC-NIGERIA RELATIONS

OW031610 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Nigerian Ambassador to China Adaugu Adekuoye gave a banquet here this evening to mark the 15th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Nigeria and China. Among those present were State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and leading members of government departments concerned.

Both Adekuoye and Wu spoke highly of the growth of friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries in the past 15 years. Adekuoye noted significant progress in bilateral relations, definite and steady progress in economic field in particular. The cooperative projects on the key areas of agriculture, fisheries, aquaculture, medcines and sports will benefit the two peoples, he added.

Wu said the Chinese Government and people attach great importance to friendly cooperation and sincere friendship between the two governments and people. There exist big potentials for bilateral cooperation, Wu said. He expressed the belief that with the concerted efforts, bilateral trade and economic cooperation will be developed to a new level.

[Text] Tehran, January 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to Iran Fan Zuokai left here for home this evening after his term of office expired.

Before his departure, the ambassador met Iranian Majlis (parliament) Speaker Hashemi-Rafsanjani, Prime Minister Hosayn Musavi, Foreign Minister 'Ali Akbar Velayati and other Cabinet members to say goodby to them. Iranian officials expressed their thanks for Fan's contribution to the development of Sino-Iranian relations.

HIGH-LEVEL SOVIET DELEGATION VISITING IRAN

[Text] Tehran, February 2 (XINHUA) -- Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Korniyenko heading a political delegation arrived here today. He is the first high-ranking Soviet official to pay a visit to Iran since 1979 Islamic revolution in Iran.

Talking to Iranian official news agency, IRNA, at airport Korniyenko said that the Soviet leadership believes that expansion of political contacts between Iran and the Soviet Union would be beneficial to both countries. Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister 'Ali Mohammad Besharati who received his Soviet counterpart at the airport said that due to the common border and history of co-existence between Iran and the Soviet Union, Korniyenko has been invited for talks on expansion of ties between the two countries.

It may be recalled that the relations between Iran and the Soviet Union have gone through a rugged path in the past seven years. In November 1979 after the Islamic revolution, Iran unilaterally abolished chapter 5 and 6 of Iran-Soviet friendship treaty signed in 1921 which gave the right to the Soviet Union to deploy its forces into Iranian territory to take necessary military action if any power in Iranian territory poses threat against the Soviet borders. After Soviet troops' invasion upon Afghanistan on Dec. 27 1979, the Iranian Foreign Ministry and state officials repeatedly condemned it.

In November 1980, the Soviet Union was forced to shut down its consulate in Iran's northern city of Rasht under insistence of Tehran which believed Russians in the border city were engaged in activities unfriendly to Iran. In 1982, the Soviet Union restored its weapon supply to Iraq, which angered Iran at war with Iraq. In Feb. 1983, Iran arrested more than one thousand member of pro-Soviet Tudeh Party and then expelled 18 Soviet diplomats accusing them of cooperating with Tudeh Party for hatching plots against the ruling Islamic regime. In May 1985, the Soviet Union recalled its economic experts working in Iran because of Iraqi bombing in the war of cities. Constructions of several Soviet-aid projects, including Isfahan power station, were forced to stop.

But Iran's policy toward the Soviet Union is quite different from its policy towards the United States which Iran regards as its enemy. Trade between Iran and the Soviet Union has increased significantly since Iranian students occupied the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in November 1979, and the United States and its allies imposed an economic sanction against Iran. Immediately after the expelling of 18 Soviet diplomats in May 1983, Iranian Foreign Minister 'Ali Akbar Velayati expressed the hope for a good neighbor relationship with U.S.S.R. In both of 1984 and 1985, Iran sent a deputy foreign minister to visit Moscow. In late last year, Iran helped in securing the release of Soviet diplomats kidnapped in Lebanon.

Observers here expect an improvement of Soviet-Iranian relations from the current visit of Soviet deputy foreign minister.

USSR PROMISES NOT TO SELL MORE ARMS TO IRAQ

OW031908 Beijing XINHUA in English 1856 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Tehran, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Iran's Minister of the Islamic Revolution Guards Corps Mohsen Rafiqdust said here today that the Soviet Union had promised not to supply weapons to Iraq any more.

At a news conference here, the minister said that the Soviet Union didn't meet Iraq's demand for more weapons during Iraqi President Saddam Husayn's visit to Moscow later last year. Rafiqdust said that Iran didn't buy weapons from the Soviet Union. "Iran prefers to producing weapons by itself. If the Soviet Union and other countries intend to sell us weapons, we will buy them," he said. He said that "Iran has missiles. If Iraq attacks our cities, we will launch missiles at Baghdad."

WORLD URGED TO QUESTION PRETORIA'S GOOD FAITH

["Commentary: Lesotho To Deport Another Batch of Refugees(by Li Sizhi)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Lesotho's new government has detained 50 South African refugees and informed them they will be deported, according to reports reaching here. The military government of Major-General Justin Lekhanya, which seized power on January 20, airlifted 57 refugees to Zambia last Saturday. It is reported that Pretoria has listed 87 people it wants expelled as suspected activists of the African National Congress (ANC), which has been fighting to topple the apartheid system in South Africa for more than two decades.

South Africa's blockade of its borders beginning January 1 has forced Lesotho to accede to its demand that it expel the ANC refugees in Lesotho. South Africa, which surrounds Lesotho, lifted its strangling security clamp of its borders on January 25, five days after the coup. As more than 95 percent of Lesotho's imports come from or transit through South Africa the four-week blockade caused commercial chaos in Lesotho, as foodstuffs, essential medicines and other vital supplies ran out. Social services had nearly come to a standstill because of shortages of gasoline.

By flexing its economic muscle, Pretoria succeeded in pressuring Lesotho to buckle to its demand that it expel activists opposed to its apartheid policy. Yet, South African President Pieter Botha told Parliament in Cape Town yesterday: "We have outgrown the outdated system of paternalism, as well as the outdated concept of apartheid." Commenting on Botha's speech, a leading government opponent rightly demanded: "If apartheid is outdated, why are our people detained and killed for fighting against it?" People in the world should likewise ask: If apartheid is outdated, why does the Pretoria regime still pressure its neighbors, such as Lesotho, to drive the so-called ANC supporters out of their countries?

NICARAGUA PROTESTS U.S. SUPPORT FOR CONTRAS

[Text] Managua, January 28 (XINHUA) -- Nicaragua today sent a note to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, protesting the U.S. Government's support for the Nicaraguan anti-government forces.

Shultz met Arturo Cruz and two other visiting leaders of the "Nicaraguan Democratic Forces," one of the major anti-Sandinist forces, in Washington yesterday. He promised the three "full support" for their attempt to overthrow the existing government. After the meeting, Cruz said that the White House will ask the U.S. Congress to agree to provide 130 million U.S. dollars in aid for his forces this year.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto, who signed the note of protest, said that the U.S. move set at defiance the principles of non-interference and abstaining from the use of arms and the threat of force recognized by the U.N Charter and the Organization of American States. The note also called on the U.S. Government to abandon its policy of force and terrorism and to resume dialogues with Nicaragua.

JOINT CIRCULAR PROHIBITS STATE PLEASURE TRIPS

OW031330 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0851 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council issued a joint circular on 1 February calling on party, government and Army departments from central to local levels and all people's organizations to firmly prohibit the use of public money by cadres for pleasure travel.

The joint circular points out: In recent years, some cadres, including some senior ones, have continued to use public money to travel for pleasure in plain or disguised forms despite the fact that the party Central Committee and the State Council have repeatedly warned against such practices. Some cadres took pleasure trips under the pretext of official duties or visit and study purposes. Some comrades who have left or will soon leave their leading posts have used public money to travel for pleasure. Some departments and units, especially a number of societies and associations, have convened meetings in tourist and resort areas without due consideration for actual need. In this way, they have abetted unhealthy tendencies in the party and society, wasted manpower, materials, and money, and projected a very negative image to the masses.

In order to firmly prohibit the use of public money by cadres to travel for pleasure, the General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council have issued the following circular according to instructions from the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council:

1. Leading cadres at various levels, especially senior cadres, must not use public money to travel for pleasure. Leading organs and discipline inspection departments should ask those who violate the rule to seriously conduct a self-examination and handle those violations in a strict manner. The higher units should investigate and affix responsibility for those departments and units that do not take the matter seriously.

2. Taking pleasure trips on the pretext of attending meetings or engaging in other official business must be strictly prohibited. Official trips by cadres should be based on the requirements of their work and must be done according to plans approved by leading organs. During an official trip, they must strictly observe work discipline and financial discipline and must not leave their working areas and use public money to visit tourist and resort areas for pleasure. Those violating this rule will be criticized, and disciplinary action will be meted out against those involved in serious cases. Money spent by cadres in excess of the allowance for official trips shall not be refunded.

Part and government organizations, enterprises and people's and academic organizations should, in principle, not hold meetings in tourist cities or scenic areas. When meetings have to be held in such places, departments and units involved should report their plans to higher organizations for review and approval and obtain concurrence from local people's governments before taking such trips. Besides, those meetings must not be held during the tourist season. Group tours organized by all kinds of meetings for pleasure purposes with public money are prohibited.

3. It is necessary to firmly prohibit pleasure trips with public money on the pretext of visiting for study purposes. Various localities and departments should strictly control visits to and study in different localities.

If such visits are necessary, prior approval by departments concerned of various prefectures (cities) must be obtained if those places are located in different counties; prior approval by departments concerned of various provinces must be obtained if those places are located in different prefectures (cities); and prior approval by provincial, autonomous regional or municipal governments must be obtained if those places are located in different provinces. In addition, they must obtain prior concurrence from the provincial people's government and receiving units where they will visit, when visiting other provinces. Otherwise, no accommodations will be provided. In visiting other localities for study purposes, all units must have a clear-cut purpose, control the number of participants, and strictly set the time, itinerary, and amount of expenditures. Expenditures will not be refunded if the travelers do not act according to the approved plan, take an indirect route or stay longer than necessary for pleasure purposes with public money. Those involved will be handled according to disciplinary stipulations.

Travel to other provinces for various activities by party committee secretaries, governors, chairmen, and mayors of various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities under the direct jurisdiction of the State Council shall be reported to leading comrades of the party Central Committee or the State Council for approval. Directors or ministers of central departments and state organizations should notify the General Office of the CPC Central Committee or the General Office of the State Council beforehand if they want to leave Beijing for other places.

4. Going to different localities for convalescent or rest purposes or visits to relatives by cadres at various levels must strictly follow related stipulations of the state. Cadres at the governor and vice governor (minister and vice minister) level may have their relatives accompany them when they want to travel to other localities for convalescent or rest purposes because of illness, old age, or physical weakness but only one relative's expenditures for train, boat, or air fare and lodgings of the same class will be approved for refund.

Localities, departments, and units must not use public money to organize retired cadres' tour groups or trips for pleasure purposes under certain pretexts. Public funds for retired cadres must not be issued to individuals. The visit to industrial and agricultural projects by retired cadres should be administered strictly in accordance with relevant regulations.

5. Financial departments and financial and accounting personnel should act strictly in accordance with rules and regulations and strive to close the loophole of taking pleasure trips with public money. Expenditures spent in violation of rules must not be refunded regardless of who spent the money or who approved such spending. Leading cadres at various levels should support financial departments and financial and accounting personnel in carrying out their duties. If leading cadres force financial departments to reimburse such expenditures, financial and accounting personnel have the authority to reject the reimbursement and should report the incident to higher departments and discipline inspection departments. The higher responsible departments and discipline inspection departments should investigate the actual situtation and handle those cases in a strict manner. The financial and accounting personnel should act as models in observing financial discipline. Those who violate regulations and act wrongly out of personal considerations in disregard of their responsibility shall be seriously criticized and ordered to correct their mistakes.

The General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council asked party committees and governments at various levels to immediately transmit this circular upon receipt to all units and cadres under their jurisdiction and conscientiously implement the stipulations of this circular. In the event of variations between previous regulations and the stipulations of this circular, all units should act in accordance with this circular.

DISCIPLINE DEMANDED FOR FAVOR-SEEKING CADRES

[XINHUA commentator: "Frustrate Intercessors Wherever They Appear"]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (XINHUA) -- An important task is to eliminate interference in improving party style and in investigating major cases and opposing "intercessions." Fully aware that "intercession" is something disgraceful and unable to withstand the light of day, many intercessors still resort to tricks to try and have former subordinates, colleagues, relatives or friends absolved from mistakes and crimes they have committed. Some play up the slogan "it is everybody's mistake" and blame the collective for the discipline and law violation, doing all they can to absolve the person concerned from his personal responsibility under the pretext that the relevant action has been discussed by the collective and approved by all its members.

Others request, under various excuses, that consideration and concern be given to certain lawbreakers. For those advanced in age, they would use the pretext "they will soon retire; don't make them suffer in their late years." For younger persons, they would use the pretext "they are young and not experienced; don't finish them off in one stroke." For relatives of cadres, the pretext would be "you must take into consideration their relatives, and must be careful not to hurt a certain leader's prestige." Still others would list the merits of the person under investigation, saying he is capable, he has done meritorious service, he has made contributions, his past political performance has been good, he is needed very badly now, and he must be given protection to get through, and so on and so forth.

No matter how convincing the intercessor's remarks may seem, they can never conceal his intent to connive with and shield somebody by bending the law. If intercessors were to prevail, lawbreakers would feel secure in the knowledge that they could depend on strong backing, the sacredness of party discipline and state law would be brutally trampled, and achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party style and general social mood would be nothing but empty talk.

It is the party Central Committee's strategic decision to straighten out party style and investigate importance and major cases. Why have results in this regard been scarce in some places and units? Why is it that some major cases have not been investigated; if investigated, why have they not been dealt with; or, if dealt with, why have they not been handled sternly? In addition to serious bureaucraticism among leaderships, one problem we should reckon with is the existence of some intercessors who interfere with investigations for their own personal gain. Comrades should realize that we communists must intercede only in the interests of party discipline and state law for the country's prosperity and for the people's well-being and happiness. On no account and under no circumstances must we intercede for personal gain, bend the law, and, as bureaucrats of the old society do, try to shield each other. To do so would be to harm the party, the state, and the people.

In the course of rectifying party style, our party and government leaders at all levels must first have to courage to defy intercessors. This alone is not enough. They should subject intercessors to criticism, education, and even disciplinary action, depending on the seriousness of the case. In the case of state functionaries who, taking advantage of their position, accept bribes to pervert justice and knowingly shield somebody else, investigation should be conducted seriously to determine their criminal responsibility. In short, we must frustrate intercessors wherever they appear. In this way, they surely will think twice before doing something reckless.

Of course, while opposing "intercessions," we must scrupulously avoid designating people indiscriminately as "intercessors." If someone just airs opinions or inquiries about a certain case, we should not accuse him outright of "intercession" without any analysis. This would not be the way of encouraging the free airing of views or of readily differing voices.

JIEFANGJUN BAO DEPLORES SHIELDING INTERCESSION

OW040534 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Report on article in JIEFANGJUN BAO on 20 January by (Zhao Zhiming): "Stand Up Against Intercessional Trend"]

[Text] — The article says: Investigations of cases involving some leading cadres or their relatives often cannot continue, or such cases cannot be handled even when they are thoroughly investigated. One of the reasons for this is that some cadres shield one another. Thus, an intercessional trend has prevailed. Those who intercede for others often have high-sounding reasons for doing so. Some of them say: This comrade has made mistakes, but his contribution or meritorious service must also be considered.

In fact, one's contribution or meritorious service and one's involvement in a case are two different things, which must not be confused with each other. Merits are merits, and demerits are demerits; the former cannot atone for the latter. If one were not punished for violating party discipline just because one had done something in the interest of the people, how could it be possible that everyone is equal before discipline?

Some people say: Punishing a leading cadre will affect his prestige. If this is the case, how can he continue to perform his duties after being punished? When one has made mistakes, one should not cover them up, should subject oneself to thorough investigation and severe punishment, and should conscientiously correct those mistakes. Only thus can one win the trust and understanding of the masses. Otherwise, if one's mistakes are covered up, one cannot draw a lesson from one's mistakes or conscientiously correct them; in that case, one may even repeat mistakes again and again. Moreover, one just cannot wrap fire in paper. That being the case, an erring cadre will really lose his prestige and will not be able to perform his duties.

Some people say: Since some cadres are retiring, their past should be considered closed when they make a self-criticism; there is no need for us to part on bad terms. Some cadres are leaving or retiring from a unit. This does not mean that their problems will be settled and that they will no longer remain cadres and party members. Unhealthy tendencies among them and their violations of law and discipline should be seriously and thoroughly dealt with in accordance with party discipline and the law of the state.

In addition, individual mistakes are covered up under the pretext of collective decisions. When members of a party committee collectively discuss and decide a matter, the party committee, of course, should be held collectively responsible for it. However, each member of the party committee should also bear his share of responsibility for the collective decision. The principal leading cadre of the party committee should bear more responsibility in this regard. One fails to adopt a communist attitude if one shirks one's responsibility and shifts it to the collective. Communists also pay attention to human feelings, but such feelings must be reasonable and in the party spirit; they must not practice favoritism, make unprincipled pleading for erring relatives, or shield violators of law and discipline.

The intercessionary trend of pleading for others' mistakes is diametrically opposed to communists' party spirit and is essentially distinct from the communist attitude of uniting and cherishing comrades. The intercessional trend is a corrupt practice held over from the officialdom of the old society. To rectify unhealthy tendencies, party committees and responsible cadres at all levels must resolutely oppose the intercessional trend, no matter where it originates.

OUTWARD DEVELOPMENT URGED FOR SPECIAL ZONES

HK0106Z0 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 1 Feb 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Take Business Overseas -- Special Economic Zones Should Develop an Outward-Oriented Economy"]

[Text] The four special economic zones of Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou, and Xiamen have arisen on Chinese soil. In the short span of 6 years, barren coastlands, small towns, and closed cities have become frontline regions in opening the country to the world. They not only exert a positive impact on the "four modernizations" drive and the reunification of the motherland, but have also become China's important symbols of resolutely implementing the policy of opening up to the world. Practice has irrefutably proved that the central authorities' policy of building special economic zones is absolutely correct.

The 6 years of the special economic zones have been 6 years of laying foundations, 6 years of pioneering, and 6 years of exploring. When a decision was imminent on building special economic zones, RENMIN RIBAO published a commentary entitled "It Is Necessary To Focus Our Attention on the Word 'Special.'" Practice over the past 6 years suggests that special economic zones should develop an outwardoriented economy, regarding industry as the dominant factor and combining industry with trade.

"Why must special economic zones develop an outward-oriented economy? Can they develop an inward-oriented economy?" Our answer is that they cannot develop an inward-oriented economy. China has designated certain regions for building special economic zones because it wants to use successful foreign experiences to explore and create new things and to form a new economic structure so that it can bring into play the concept of the "four windows" (technology, knowledge, management, and foreign policy) and the radiative and pivotal role of special economic zones. This economic structure is closely linked with the international market and will enable us to effectively introduce foreign technology, to assimilate and absorb foreign technology, and to study advanced foreign management. Production under this economic structure is arranged according to the needs of the international market. Apart from merely enjoying special policies, special ecoromic zones should be more capable of increasing foreign exchange earnings through exports than other regions. They should do business abroad and serve as a vanguard in finding paths to the international market, exporting more and increasing foreign exchange earnings. Only by developing an outward-oriented economy can special economic zones have vitality. For an inward-oriented economy, we would not have built special economic zones. Experience over the past 6 years has helped define our main theme. Now we should have unanimity of understanding.

"Why should special economic zones regard industry as the dominant factor?" Regarding industry as the dominant factor does not mean that we should not develop commerce, service trades, tourism, estate business, and the tertiary industry. The latter are necessary for providing an excellent investment environment for special economic zones, but their scales and growth rates should correspond with actual needs, funds available, power supply, and communications capacity.

Viewed from the overall perspective, an advanced, outward-oriented, and competitive industry is the foundation of special economic zones. Only with a consistent flow of industrial products into the international market can special economic zones maintain steady foreign exchange and revenue. Special economic zones should form an industrial structure in such a rational manner that their industries, commerce, tourism, banking, and other trades can develop in coordination and mutually benefit each other.

The formation of an outward-oriented economy which regards industry as the dominant factor and combines industry with trade cannot be accomplished in one move. In a sense, this formation is more arduous and complicated than building special economic zones. As competition in the international market is sharp, it will be very difficult to defeat our opponents by a surprise move if we do not have hard-trained skills, good quality products, a good information network, and a developed sales and maintenance network. Special economic zones should develop medium-sized and small industries by giving prominence to being "precise, small, light, and new." A small boat can be managed easily. A small quantity of goods can be adapted to the changes in the international market and delivered in time. Special economic zones should concentrate their efforts on producing top quality products currently in short supply.

By stressing exports, we do not mean they are not allowed to sell their products on the domestic market. Special economic zones can sell on the domestic market the "foreign goods" they produce so long as the state needs them. In this way, the state does not have to import these goods. This does not contradict the principle that special economic zones must mainly sell their products abroad. It also corresponds with the overall and long-term interests of the state. This matter requires the support of the relevant policy.

An outward-oriented economy and the hinterland economy complement each other. The latter serves as a powerful backing for the former. Special economic zones serve the whole country, and the whole country supports special economic zones. Special economic zones now carry out interunit operations with central industrial departments, scientific research departments, and enterprises in the hinterland. They also conduct operations with foreign countries. In this way they can manufacture products up to international standards and which help increase foreign exchange earnings and expand the economies of special economic zones. In addition, special economic zones can transfer imported technological projects to the hinterland and therefore help develop the economy of the hinterland. The hinterland can have its semi-finished products processed in special economic zones so as to improve the export value of these products, thus increasing foreign exchange earnings for and bringing credit to the state. This is worth developing.

Running special economic zones for 6 years in a socialist country such as ours has enabled us to initially understand such workings, and as a result our cadres have improved their abilities. This is very important. The target is clear, and the road is being opened. Special economic zones should take steadier steps toward new targets set by the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

EMERGENCE OF NEW ENTERPRISE GROUPS HAILED

[Commentator's article: "Welcome, New Enterprise Groups"]

[Text] A number of diverse enterprise groups at various levels have been taking shape. This is a new achievement in establishing lateral ties between enterprises.

It is in preparation for the emergence of a new vertical layout of enterprises which are closely related in our country. This new development in our country's economic life is followed with interest by people everywhere.

The development of horizontal cooperation between various enterprises in forming various kinds of economic combines facilitates rational exploitation of resources, rational use of funds, and rational layout of productive forces. It also improves economic results of enterprises and society. These advantages are understood by many comrades in our economic departments and enterprises. However, we have not yet attached adequate importance to the far-reaching significance of deepening the reform and promoting our economic development in the future.

Invigorating our large and medium-sized enterprises is the key link in our economic structural reform. Our enterprise groups have developed with large and medium-sized enterprises as their backbones. The formation and development of these groups will have an important impact on our whole economic life. Strengthening horizontal relations between enterprises will result in breaking restrictions on areas and departments and will promote the development of a planned commodity economy and a rationalization of the organizational structure of enterprises, thus emancipating social productive forces. The formation of enterprise groups will cause new changes in subordinate relations, ownership composition, planning, financial, and circulation systems, and so on, in our enterprises. As these groups take shape and develop, we will discover the obstacles in our current systems, rules and regulations hindering the formation of combines, and continue to reform them, thus continuously resolving contradictions between productive forces and relations of production, and promoting the development of production.

Our rising enterprise groups are full of vigor, but they also have their defects. Therefore, it is necessary for relevant departments to lend various support and aid. They should step up the formulation of relevant laws, regulations, and policies in order to provide clear stipulations concerning the protection of investment, arbitration of disputes, distribution of interests, sources of materials, and so on. They should give further guidance and make further coordination efforts in order to continue consolidating and improving the form and content of the merger. In short, we should apply economic and legal means more frequently in administering enterprise groups and promoting their development and growth. As long as all relevant departments, areas, and enterprises enthusiastically solve problems, provide services, and open up paths for enterprise groups, an increasingly large number of enterprise groups will certainly take shape more quickly and continue to develop.

COOPERATIVE ECONOMY BASED ON HOUSEHOLDS SEEN

OW030520 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0745 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 2 Feb (XINHUA) -- [XINHUA Commentator: "Regional Cooperative Economy Should Be Based on Household Operation"]

In addition to promoting specialized cooperation, improving and promoting regional cooperative economy has become an important project for thorough-going reform in rural areas to maintain the development of the commodity economy there.

Some comrades maintain that regional cooperative economy should be discussed less often or not at all for the time being, for fear that it would replace the contractual household operation and make the peasants feel uneasy. Such a worry stems mainly from the fact that the mistakes of overcentralized management and egalitarian distribution committed in developing the cooperative economy in rural areas have created a misconception among the peasants about the cooperative system.

We must realize, however, that what the peasants fear is "eating from the same big pot," and not the cooperative system. We will not cause any fear among the peasants if, in the course of improving the regional cooperative economy, we provide the services needed for contractual household operation strictly in accordance with the requirements for developing the commodity economy and if we avoid following the old path.

Will there be any contradiction between improving the cooperative system and maintaining the base of contractual household operation? No. A major achievement in restructuring the cooperative economic system in the nation's rural areas lies in the fact that contractual household operation has become a relatively independent sector and that a double-layer operation system combining centralized collective operations and the decentralized operation among individual rural households has been established in our regional cooperative system. This new form of a Chinese-style socialist cooperative system has enlivened and reinvigorated the rural economy and promoted full-scale rural economic development. Ample facts have proven that improvement of the cooperative system is out of the question without contractual household operations and that contractual household operations can hardly achieve a breakthrough without a centralized regional cooperative economy operation or the development of a specialized cooperative economy.

The reason why we propose to improve the cooperative system is specifically because we want to give fuller play to the vitality and role of contractual household operations. On the one hand, the development of commodity production in the rural areas will certainly give rise to the issue concerning the size of operations, and an appropriate size for operations can be determined through proper cooperation and association, beginning with providing the needed services. On the other hand, in the course of developing commodity production, peasants urgently want the cooperative economy to help them solve production and operational problems they cannot handle individually -- problems such as irrigation, tractor plowing, plant protection, supply and marketing, processing, storage, transportation, technical expertise, information, and so forth. It has now become the peasants' common aspiration to become prosperous and have access to needed services, and improving the cooperative system can satisfy their needs in carrying out their contractual household operations.

While improving and developing the regional cooperative economy on the basis of maintaining contractual household operations, we should permit diverse methods, forms, and scopes for combinations of centralized and decentralized operations, keeping in mind the different social and economic situation in different localities. We should not, in particular, set excessive requirements for areas where collective resources are scarce, production is fairly simple, and output is primarily used for self support, nor should we demand quick results from them. These areas should be allowed to start from the very basics. They may begin from one thing, one project, or one production link. The cooperation may even be carried out on a one-time basis. Only when conditions permit should they gradually develop their cooperation. We must guard against the previous rigid forms of cooperation in all spheres of production, as well as the type of cooperation which means combining everybody's property, organizing collective labor, and "eating from the same big pot." This is because we have suffered quite a lot from those practices.

Developing the cooperative system is a process of economic development, which must not be accomplished by means of political movements. In the course of developing the commodity economy, the peasants should be permitted many opportunities to try, compare, and choose by themselves, and we must give them the time and the right to choose. In accordance with the masses' performance and requirements, our cadres should discover, support, and popularize the forms of cooperation they need.

Following what we have discussed, the improvement and development of regional cooperative economy should follow these three principles: First, contractual household operations should remain unchanged; second, cooperation should be based on voluntary participation and should begin by providing the services the peasants need; and third, the scope of cooperation should be appropriate, and cooperation should not be primarily in the form of public ownership. Of these three principles, the first is the most essential.

ECONOMIC REFORM, DEVELOPMENT ADDRESSED

[Article by Liang Song: "Correctly Handle the Relationship Between Economic Reform and Development"]

[Text] The Seventh 5-Year Plan period is an important one in the comprehensive reform of China's economic structure. To lose no time in pushing ahead with the reform, we should strive to create a good economic environment conducive to reform. This is an important task confronting us. The key to fulfilling this task is to place the reform in the correct realtionship to economic development and to define a rational economic growth rate and a proper scope of capital construction projects so that construction plans, for now and for some time to come, will be conducive to the progress of reform.

The rate of economic development should be properly reduced in order to create a good economic environment for the reform. Economic reform and development are interdependent. On the one hand, changes in the economic structure are restricted by the economic development stage and are dependent on a certain economic growth; on the other hand, economic development presupposes the existence of a certain structure. Without a vigorous new economic structure, it would be impossible to have an internal motivating force for the long-term, stable, sustained, and highly efficient development of the economy, and the rapid evolution of China's economic development stage would probably be delayed. Therefore, giving first priority to reform is precisely aimed at laying a good foundation for the long-term development of the Chinese economy. Moreover, economic reform means adjusting profit distribution and production relations.

To reduce the possible emergence of excessive demand, we should ensure a more ample supply of social commodities by stabilizing the economy. However, because the inertia of the old structure still functions in the early stage of reform and because the micro self-control and macro regulatory mechanisms in the new structure have not taken shape, "overheated" economic development is likely, leading to worsening inflation. Under these circumstances, if we fail to consciously reduce the growth rate and to bring the scope of investment under control, the economy will inenvitably be further strained and destabilized, thus endangering long-term objectives of reform, such as fully invigorating enterprises, activating the role of market mechanism, and increasing indirect macroeconomic control functions. Since the beginning of last year, in light of the new developments in the economic life, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have adopted a series of measures to strengthen macroeconomic control, regulation, and management and have attained tangible results. However, the scope and tempo of construction are still moving forward under their own momentum and the trends of aggregate social demand exceeding aggregate social supply have not been fundamentally reversed. Therefore, we should further eliminate unstable factors in economic development and consolidate, absorb, and develop the reform achievements. At present, it is still necessary to control the growth rate and the total scope of capital construction.

The key to managing the relationship between reform and development and creating a good economic environment is to reduce, as much as possible, friction arising from the transformation of structural and development patterns. In their economic reforms, all socialist states are confronted with the dual task of transforming both structural and development patterns. Generally speaking, only by thoroughly overcoming the inherent defects of the outdated structural pattern, such as practicing soft budgeting and stressing quantitative expansion in investment and consumption, is it possible to transform the outdated development pattern with a high growth rate as a primary objective, development by extension as a principal means, and the heavy industry as a central link. In fact, it is difficult to initiate a reform without slightly adjusting the outdated economic pattern in the initial period. This is because the inertia of the old pattern and the immaturity of the new one will cause the economy to deviate from its existing orbit. They cannot completely bring the economy into line with the requirements of the new pattern. The end result of some reform measures even differ from the original ideas and estimates. The superhigh growth rate at the end of 1984 was precisely caused by the intensified friction of this variability. Judging from the structural aspect, although controls on original financial budgets were tightened, controls on bank credit were relaxed; the investment hunger obviously resulted in blind competition; and the pluralistic investment pattern initially developed still lacked an effective macroeconomic coordinating mechanism. All these are factors of unstable economic movement.

Viewed from the development pattern, the balance between the major branches of the economy has been improved in the past few years but some imbalances between the production structure and the product mix have not been eliminated. Drastic changes in consumption pattern, which is more or less related to premature consumerism, inevitably aggravate market shortages; the excessive development of town and township enterprises and excessive competition of products at a low level have also posed new problems for the transformation. It should be said that there is bound to be friction in the course of transforming the two patterns. The question is how to minimize the friction so that the comprehensive reform in the future can be smoothly conducted in a relaxed environment. In light of our past experience, we should pay particular attention to speeding transformation of the structural pattern by consolidating and absorbing reform achievements so as to properly reduce frequent changes in the development pattern. That is to say, small adjustments or development measures should be adopted to facilitate economic stability. Moreover, in the next 1 or 2 years, we should amplify economic legislation as quickly as possible, institute and perfect measures for economic supervision, and act in coordination with the indirect macroeconomic control system in order to ensure the relative stability of the economic movement.

Rationally determining the investment pattern and orientation is not only an important condition for maintaining a good economic environment and speeding transformation of the structural pattern but also a prerequisite for the continued transformation of the development pattern within a certain limit. To this end, regarding the investment pattern, we should lend prominence to key construction projects and speed the development of such basic industries as energy, transport, telecommunications, and raw and semifinished materials; we should also appropriately increase investment in reconstructing and extending the existing production capacity. In doing so, we do not mean following the beaten track of self-oriented heavy industry but are aiming at providing the strength needed for vigorous economic development in the 1990's. This is not in contradiction with the formation of a new industrial structure. In developing those industries and departments directly related to the people's livelihood, we should give priority to the improvement of economic results and product quality and the adjustment of product mix so that only the best can survive. Only by adhering to the above-mentioned orientation in our economic construction is it possible to flexibly combine the transformation of the two patterns in a dynamic sense.

In the early Seventh 5-Year Plan period, in addition to consciously slowing the economic growth rate, we should pay attention to feedback from and the effect of the reform on construction and the environment. Many reform measures are directly or indirectly related to changes in the economic development mechanism. For example, in the course of continuously invigorating the enterprises, we should further expand the investment function of the enterprises and increase their ability to develop on their own. This makes it necessary to assess their results and to draw a rational demarcation at a certain stage of development. This is even more the case for reforms in the building industry and capital construction management structures. Given the lack of the macroeconomic coordination mechanism and the rigidly binding investment risk system, excessive institution of such practices as the investment contract system in building projects will inevitably encourage a tendency toward investment decentralization; reform of the revenue and banking systems will also indirectly spread to the development field and increase aggregate social demand.

Moveover, some unhealthy practices that crop up in the wake of reform will further add to the task of stabilizing the economy. Naturally, it should be made clear that controlling the growth rate and improving the economic environment are not the objective itself. However, given the characteristics of the current situation, only by relatively stabilizing economic life is it possible to conduct the reform smoothly. Therefore, faced with the two new problems mentioned above, it is necessary to pay attention to the potential danger of aggregate social demand getting out of control as soon as restrictions are lifted. In the course of adopting further measures, in addition to devising proper ways to deal with the situation, we should also make good arrangements for the moves to be taken in the light of the capacity of the national economy to withstand strains at present and for some time to come and, after taking the moves, quickly bring the micro and intermediate [zhong guan 0022 6034] economic development into line with the macroeconomic development plan. Only in this way can we minimize the impact on society, ensure the coordination of various reform measures in a good environment, and attain the best long-term and overall results.

Neither should we overlook the "prospective value" [gi wang zhi 2601 2598 0237] of improving the economic environment, that is, correctly appraising the attainable targets of stabilizing the economy. One view argues that stabilizing the economy is aimed at making aggregate social supply slightly greater than aggregate social demand and placing a buyers' market in the leading position. Needless to say, the role of market mechanism can be brought into full play only in a buyers' market. However, viewed from China's medium-term economic situation, can we regard the formation of a buyers' market as a target in stabilizing the economy? Studies conducted at home and abroad show that market transformation, namely, the transition from a sellers' to a buyers' market, is the "compound function" of various factors, such as the economic structure, development stage, and industrial structure. Recent statistics in our country also show that the current stage of China's economic development and the status of its production structure and product mix are still far from providing the buyers' market with all necessary conditions.

Thus we see that the "prospective value" of stabilizing the economy and improving the environment should not be overestimated. The significance in making clear this point is that: First, it helps us gain a clear understanding of the relationship between the short-term action and the long-term target of economic motion. Under the conditions whereby the market for production factors [yao su 6008 4790] is yet to develop and the shortage of goods and materials cannot be thoroughly remedied in a short time, unduely placing the buyers' market, which constitutes our long-term objective, on the order of the day will consciously or unconsciously lead to a situation characterized by "all-out development." Second, it helps us prevent another tendency, that is, inappropriately adopting various measures to reduce consumption, such as artificial inflation, excessive reliance on imports, and rationing in a disguised form, in the name of creating a buyers' market, because these measures can also create an "unnatural" buyers market.

Third, it helps us obtain a clear picture on how to establish and improve the steps of market mechanism. Given the insufficient conditions for forming a buyers' market, we should speed the adjustment of the market structure, speed the development of the technological market, establish the capital market, and open up the labor market. Moreover, we should reduce the pressure on the consumer goods market by promoting a change from a quantity- to a quality-type product mix so that a systematic coordination of the market system can initially take shape. In short, correctly handling the relationship between reform and development is of great practical significance.

PUBLIC SECURITY OFFICIAL ON NEW ENTRY, EXIT LAWS

OW021405 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0929 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 1 Feb (XINHUA) -- Cao Luhe, director of the Exit-Entry Bureau of the Public Security Ministry, today answered XINHUA reporters' questions on the law governing entry and exit for foreigners and the law governing exit and entry for Chinese citizens.

Question: The laws governing the entry and exit for foreigners and Chinese citizens went into effect on 1 February. Would you please discuss the regulations of the law governing entry and exit for foreigners conducive to opening up to the outside world?

Answer: There are mainly four aspects. First, facilitating entry into the country by foreigners. Article 6 of the law stipulates: To enter the country, foreigners should apply for visas at the Chinese diplomatic missions, consulates, or other diplomatic agencies authorized by the Foreign Ministry. Under special circumstances, foreigners may apply for visas at ports designated by the competent departments of the Chinese Government. As a matter of fact, visa applications have been accepted at a number of major entry ports including Shanghai, Beijing, Tianjin, Xiamen, and Fuzhou since early 1985. The ports handling entry visas are a supplement to the diplomatic agencies of our country. Second, abolishing the exit visa to facilitate the departure from the country by foreigners. We had always required exit visas for foreigners to leave the country. This practice not only caused inconvenience to many foreigners but also ran counter to common international practice. Therefore, we made some changes in drafting the law and now stipulate in Article 22 of the law that "foreigners leave the country by their valid passports or other valid travel documents." Third, relaxing travel restrictions. For a long time, we used the travel pass system for foreigners traveling in China. To meet the requirements of opening up to the outside world, we have changed this practice since 1982 by designating 29 open areas where foreigners may travel without having to apply for travel passes. By the end of 1985, the number of such areas had increased to 107. Effective 1 February of this year, the number of such areas is raised to 244. Thus, foreigners may freely travel to most of our cities, scenic spots, historical sites, and famous tourist spots. This also constitutes a rather extensive relaxation of restrictions. More areas will open in the future. Fourth, granting permanent residence to foreigners investing in China. To give special treatment to foreigners investing in China, Article 14 of the law provides a stipulation on granting long-term or permanent residence for foreigners investing in China or engaging in business cooperation with Chinese enterprises. In the future, special treatment will also be given to these foreigners with regard to entering and leaving China.

The aforementioned measures constitute a relaxation of restrictions. There are, certainly, many articles on strengthening the administration of entry, exit, residence, and travel of foreigners, as well as articles requiring foreigners to abide by Chinese laws, not to endanger China's national security, harm social and public interests, or disrupt social and public order. These regulations are indispensable to a sovereign nation.

Question: Compared with the past, has there been a great relaxation of the regulations governing the entry and exit of Chinese citizens?

Answer: Yes. For a long time, we had stringent restrictions governing the trips of Chinese citizens abroad and regulating their return home, especially their trips abroad. At the concern of central leading comrades, this problem has been basically solved or overcome, and restrictions on citizens going abroad for private business have been lifted to a great extent. Citizens applying for foreign travel at their own expense for the purpose of visiting relatives and friends, settling down in a foreign country, or for study or employment will all be approved. To ensure that the applications by citizens for going abroad are approved in good time, we also stipulate that public security organs must, after accepting applications, make a decision of approval or disapproval within a prescribed amount of time. These measures are already written into the law governing the exit and entry of Chinese citizens. For example, as is pointed out in the general principles, we regard the "guarantee of the legitimate rights and interests of Chinese citizens leaving and entering the Chinese border" as the reason for drafting this law.

The chapter on exit stipulates that except for the five kinds of persons whose applications for leaving the country should not be approved, all citizens applying to leave the country for private business shall be approved. Public security organs shall decide to approve or disapprove the citizen's application to leave the country within a prescribed amount of time and notify the applicant of their decision. How long is this "prescribed amount of time?" On the basis of the work conditions of the public security organs in various localities, we interpret this as of follows: Ordinary applications for leaving the country should not exceed 30 days; not to exceed 60 days in outlying areas with poor transport facilities. As for application for going to Hong Kong and Macao, the time limit for examination and approval is 60 days because time is required to verify the applications. Application for leaving the country for urgent business should be approved as the occasion demands so as not to delay departure. Compared with the past, the above-mentioned time limits for approving departures are greatly abbreviated. However, generally speaking, they are still relatively long. With the improvement in work and efficiency, they will be further shortened in the future.

Question: According to recent press reports, after restrictions on traveling for private business were lifted, a small number of citizens, unable to get visas to foreign nations, illegally entered their country of destination by improper means. This has caused some adverse effects. Can you discuss this situation?

Answer: Certainly. The overwhelming majority of citizens approved for leaving the country can obtain a visa from their country of destination through proper channels and leave the country legally. However, there are indeed a small number of people who leave the country through illegal means. For example, a number of citizens in some counties under Wenzhou Prefecture, Zhejiang, and Fuzhou City, Fujian, left the country illegally because they were unable to get visas from their countries of destination through proper channels. Some left the country using fake foreign passports or visas purchased at high prices; some legally entered a third country and then illegally entered the country of destination from the third country; some fell into the trap of rings outside our country which assisted in smuggling them into another country where they became stranded; some were captured by foreign immigration authorities while crossing the border and were detained or repatriated. Because of illegal entries by these citizens, some countries refuse to grant visas to our citizens with legitimate reasons to visit their countries, thus affecting departures. We have always opposed this situation. Recently we have enhanced education among personnel leaving the country for private business. The press has also carried reports and comments urging them to abide by not only our laws but also the entry and exit laws and regulations of foreign countries and urging that they not press their luck by sneaking into another country illegally.

At the same time, we have strengthened departure inspection to stop those who do not have visas for their country of destination or those who use false passports from leaving. We have intensified investigation of those lawless persons who collaborated with rings operating outside our territory to smuggle people into another country and severely punish them once their offenses are ascertained.

Question: Now, restrictions on going abroad for private business have been relaxed, but restrictions on going to Hong Kong and Macao for private business are still very strict. Why?

Answer: Hong Kong and Macao are two special places, small in area but densely populated; their capacity is limited. For the good of economic prosperity and social stability in Hong Kong and Macao, the State Council decided to introduce a quota for approving applications for going to Hong Kong and Macao for the purpose of settling down there. It has also been decided that this quota will not be raised. Therefore, only the most necessary and urgent cases are approved.

Question: But going there for short-term visits will not increase the population of Hong Kong and Macao. Should the restrictions not be slightly relaxed?

Answer: Yes. As a matter fact, quotas for round-trip visits have been doubled in recent years. However, the situation is still strained because there are too many applicants. We will further relax restrictions and gradually raise the quota in the future. In view of the special circumstances of Hong Kong and Macao, the law governing the exit and entry of Chinese citizens stipulates: "Procedures governing Chinese citizens traveling to the Hong Kong or Macao areas shall be separately provided by the relevant department of the State Council." The procedures are being drafted.

CUSTOMS OFFICE HOLDS POLITICAL WORK CONFERENCE

[Report by Lu Di: "Chinese Customs Service Holds National Ideological and Political Work Conference in Beijing"]

[Text] The national ideological and political work conference of the Chinese customs service opened in Beijing on 15 January. The conference is studying how to enhance ideological and political work in the new situation and to effect a turn for the better in customs service party style.

Speaking to over 200 representatives attending the conference, Dai Jie, director of the General Administration of Customs, said that in the past year, the customs service across the country has followed the instructions of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, resolutely implemented the guiding ideology of "emancipating our minds, boldly carrying out reforms, implementing relaxed policies, managing in a scientific manner, perfecting the legal system, and stressing civility," and made gratifying accomplishments in work. Dai Jie said that many customs have endeavored to implement the principle of "strictly ensuring soundness in work and offering enthusiastic services," energetically and actively served the development of foreign trade, eradicated the style of management with supervision or supervision without service, carried out scientific management, provided greater convenience for travelers, and treated people politely. In investigating smuggling, the customs has concentrated its efforts on major, important cases.

In 1985, the country's customs have investigated and handled a total of over 2,200 smuggling cases involving administrative organs, organizations, enterprises, and institutions. The value of these cases was 610 million yuan, accounting for 89.7 percent of the total case value. As compared with cases in 1984, the number of cases increased by 150 percent, and the case value increased by 830 percent. In accordance with state economic policies and changes in economic development at home and abroad, the customs have revised and implemented customs rules and regulations and the new regulations on customs duties, given tariff preference to the import of technology and equipment for communications and telecommunications, levied regulatory tariffs on 15 kinds of commodities, whose price differences at home and abroad are great, and on some production lines to prevent blind and duplicate imports of such lines, and relatively satisfactorily coordinated with the state in readjusting the economic structure and in exercising macroscopic control over imports and exports.

In view of the recent tendency to belittle ideological and political work, Dai Jie pointed out that customs must make great efforts to strengthen ideological and political work, and earnestly solve problems of party style and work style. He urged the customs to resolutely respond to the call of the Central Committee and strive to improve party style in the customs service within one year. In the past few years, many advanced individuals and collectives have emerged in the customs service. The General Administration of Customs will commend 26 advanced collective and 43 advanced workers.

ZHAO ZIYANG ATTENDS FORUM WITH SPACE SCIENTISTS

OW031301 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0732 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and premier of the State Council; Hu Qili, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and the CPC Central Committee Secretariat; and Tian Jiyun, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and vice premier of the State Council, held a forum this morning at a satellite launching center with scientists, technicians, and experts from the Ministries of Astronautics and Electronics Industry and from the Satellite Launching Center who participated in the research, manufacture, and launching of a telecommunications and broadcasting satellite for practical use. The leaders thanked and congratulated the scientists, technicians, workers, cadres, commanders, and fighters of the PLA who have made contributions to the country.

The scientists and technicians attending the forum included Wang Shiguang, Gong Ganpeng, Ren Xinmin, Bao Keming, Xie Guangxuan, Li Boyong, Chen Shouchun, Qi Faren, Fan Benyao, Zou Guangrui, Chen Daoming, Zou Dexing, Fan Shihe, Wang Zhiren, Long Lehao, Shi Jinmiao, Gong Dequan, Dai Weiyong, Tong Lianjie, Li Rousheng, Zhang Zhengzheng, and Li Lianlin. During the forum, Premier Zhao Ziyang spoke highly of the devotion of the masses of scientists and technicians on the scientific and technical front for national defense to their work. He said: Scientists and technicians of the national defense industry not only have a high technical level but also a high sense of organization and discipline. Their political consciousness is good. In the past years they have made important contributions to national defense modernization and have scored tremendous achievements in developing sophisticated technology.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said: The scientists and technicians on the national defense industrial front are the quintessence of our country's contingent of scientists and technicians. We must strive to develop the potential of this contingent so that it can contribute to the modernization of our country as a whole.

Participating in the forum were Wu Shaozu, political commissar of the Commission in Charge of Science, Technology, and Industry for National Defense; Li Xue, minister of astronautics, and Li Tieying, minister of electronics industry.

PENG ZHEN VISITS UNIVERSITY, DISCUSSES MARXISM

[XINHUA report by Zhou Zuyou: "Peng Zhen Inspects Zhejiang University]

[Text] Hangzhou, 29 Jan (XINHUA) — Peng Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, inspected Zhejiang University on the afternoon of 28 January. He expressed the ardent hope that comrades of Zhejiang University will strive to master Marxism and skillfully use Marxism, a philosophical weapon for transforming the objective world and the subjective world, to guide reforms, teaching, scientific research, and production, and to train more outstanding personnel with both ability and political integrity for building the material and spiritual civilizations.

While he was at Zhejiang University, Comrade Peng Zhen visited an exhibition of scientific research achievements and the optical instrument central experiment base and went up to the roof of the library for a view of the campus. In the scientific research achievements exhibition hall, Comrade Peng Zhen carefully examined the materials, models, and pictures of important achievements such as the generator set with inner water-cooled stator and rotor, which has won the state invention prize, the electrohydraulic ratio technology [dian ye bi li ji shu 7193 3210 3024 0173 2111 2611], computer supplementary geometrical design, and so on. He shook hands with the teachers responsible for these achievements and talked with them.

While talking with the university's responsible members, senior professors, young and middle-aged teachers, and student representatives, Comrade Peng Zhen said that Marxism is a philosophical weapon for transforming the objective world and the subjective world and is the standpoint, viewpoint, and method for us to observe and solve problems. Marxist philosophy, dialectical materialism and historical materialism are the spiritual weapons of the proletariat and the summary of human historical experience over several thousand years in the past. Its emergence was an epoch-making achievement in the history of philosophy. The history of the past century has proven that Marxist philosophical thinking is correct. In the course of reform, Zhejiang University has achieved good results in teaching work, scientific research, production, and ideological and political work. A very important reason for this is that it has upheld the four basic principles, one of which is to uphold Marxism and Mao Zedong Thought.

Peng Zhen said that in carrying out reforms we must use Marxist thinking as our guidance. Some people hold that it is conservative to mention the use of Marxist thinking as guidance and even think that this means opposing reforms. This is basically a kind of misunderstanding. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that our reforms are self-improvement of the socialist system. Without ideological reforms, how can there be reform of the economic structure or reform of the scientific, technological, and educational systems? As part of our country's superstructure, Marxism itself develops with the development of its material basis — the development of our country's economy and the development of our country's science and technology. Marxism-Leninism has always been revolutionary and critical. We always advocate taking the inevitable path of historical development and advocate transforming the subjective world while transforming the objective world.

If the subjective world is not transformed, it will not be in keeping with the development of the objective world. We cannot set one against the other. By making good use of this weapon, work in various aspects can be carried out more smoothly, or at least some mistakes in work can be avoided or reduced. Accompanying Comrade Peng Zhen during his inspection were Wang Fang, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee, and others.

WAN LI, FANG YI VISIT SCIENCE EXHIBIT 3 FEBRUARY

[By XINHUA reporter Zhang Jimin and RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wang Yougong]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (XINHUA) — Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council, and Fang Yi, state councillor, came to the Beijing exhibition hall this evening to visit an exhibition sponsored by the Chinese Academy of Sciences on achievements in solving key scientific and technological problems during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

On this visit, both Wan Li and Fang Yi showed deep concern about how well scientific research results had been put to use. In front of the exhibition room for "research on all-round improvement and rational development of the Huang-Huai-Hai Pingyuan," they inquired with great interest about the current situation of areas designated for demonstrative purposes in Henan's Fengqiu County, Hebei's Nanbi County, and Shandong's Yucheng County.

When they were told that the average grain output per mou in Pandian, a 10,000-mu demonstration area in Fengqiu County, Henan Province, rose to 730 jin in 1985 compared with 371 jin in 1983 before the grain production problem was solved and that the per-capita income in this area also increased from 154 yuan to (?382) yuan, Wan Li said with great delight: The people welcome the "gods of wealth" like you. When visiting the exhibition showing the successful results in exploiting water and soil resources in the Tai Hu area, he pointed out the need in the future for centralized management of the environmental protection work with regard to such big lakes as Tai Hu and Chao Hu. At the end of the visit, Wan Li said that the Chinese Academy of Sciences had made considerable achievements in solving key problems during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, and that it is necessary to review experience and continue to advance in an effort to make still greater achievements.

It is learned that during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the Chinese Academy of Sciences sponsored 27 projects aimed at solving key scientific and technological problems. Of these, 16 were key national scientific and technological projects. The academy organized more than 4,600 scientists and technicians from 85 research institutes to take part in the work. Through 3 years of unremitting efforts, they made nearly 300 research achievements in 10 different fields, including new materials, remote-sensing technology, bioengineering, petrochemicals engineering, microelectronics, and information technology. Exhibits displaying these achievements left a deep impression upon people.

President of the Chinese Academy of Sciences Lu Jiaxi and Vice Presidents Zhou Guangdan, Yan Dongsheng, and Sun Honglie accompanied Wan Li and Fang Yi on this visit.

[Excerpt] Xian, 31 Jan (XINHUA) -- Our country's outstanding athletes Lang Ping, Nie Weiping, Han Jian, Tong Fei, Yan Hong, Cao Yanhua, Yang Xilan, Li Ning, Jiang Jialiang, and Li Lingwei were chosen the best national athletes for 1985.

Central leading comrades Xi Zhongxun and Song Renqiong, respectively, wrote the following inscriptions for them: "Be determined to scale new heights and to score new achievements through hard training," and "Carry forward the best sportsman's spirit and scale new heights in world sports." With the inscriptions, they extended their congratulations to the best athletes and encouraged them to score greater victories.

This evening, some 1 million people in the old city of Xian watched live television coverage of the ceremony announcing the 10 best national athletes for 1985 and the presentation of awards. The choosing of the best athletes was jointly sponsored by 20 journalist units in Beijing. The exhilarated people inside and outside the Shaanxi Provincial Gymnasium shared the joy of the 1985 best national athletes when they, waving bouquets, marched around the arena and met with Shaanxi Governor Li Qingwei and more than 8,000 people of various circles in the gymnasium.

Addressing the ceremony were Yang Weiguang, representative of the 20 journalist units in Beijing and deputy director of the Central Television Station: Yuan Weimin, vice minister in charge of the state Physical Culture and Sports Commission; and San Daren, vice governor of Shaanxi Province.

HAO JIANXIU ATTENDS SPRING FESTIVAL CELEBRATION

OW030333 Beijing International Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] The Spring Festival, a traditional Chinese festival day, falls on 9 February this year. The large-scale Beijing cultural party to greet this festival day opened on 1 February at Beijing's Di Tan Park, formerly a royal park. Some 400 factories and companies provided a variety of festival-day dresses, department store goods, piece goods, toys, and plenty of foodstuffs for those who wanted to buy things for festival consumption. There are also over 140 recreational areas featuring acrobatics, animal taming, a horse show, a puppet show, traditional flower arrangements, stilt walking, and so on. The party will last for 13 days until 13 February.

Hao Jianxiu, member of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat, and Huang Hua, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, toured the Di Tan spring-greeting party together with the first group of the masses.

DENG LIQUN ACCLAIMS HENAN MODERN DRAMA

[By reporter Zhang Yanping]

[Text] Beijing, 31 Jan (XINHUA) -- "The Moon on the Fifteenth," a modern play created and performed by the Henan Kaifeng Drama Group, received a warm welcome from the 5,000 or so cadres of organs under the CPC Central Committee and central state organs when it was staged in Zhongnanhai's Huairen Hall 29-31 January. The play has been widely acclaimed as live material for teaching central organs to improve their party conduct.

Based on the love story of two young commanders on the Yunnan front and two young women in the rear guard, the play eulogizes the noble characters displayed by these two heroic commanders in making selfless sacrifice in the bloody war for the sake of the people's happiness. It lashes the despicable thinking and deeds of certain people in the rear guard for forgetting integrity upon seeing gains or for abusing their authority for personal gains. The playwright's intention is revealed in a line of the play: "It is hoped that the roaring artillery fire on the front will awaken some comrades and that the blood of our fighters can cleanse the people's souls!"

The play won a gold medal in a theatrical festival held in November 1985. All 13 performances staged in Beijing in January were sold out, and they evoked a strong response from the audience. After watching the show, Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said that the play, "The Moon of the Fifteenth," was highly educational and that comrades of central organs should be encouraged to watch it.

SHANXI RIBAO ON IDEOLOGICAL, POLITICAL WORK

HK270035 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 6 Jan 86 p 1

["Special" commentator's article: "New Experience Should Be Created During the New Period -- On Our Province's Ideological and Political Work Since the National Conference of Party Delegates"]

[Text] Since the National Conference of Party Delegates, leading cadres at all levels and comrades engaged in ideological and political work in our province have inherited and carried forward the party's fine tradition of ideological and political work. They have been bold in making explorations and have created considerable experience for ideological and political work during the new period. Conscientiously summing up these experiences and applying them to our work in the future will play a great promotional role in the building of the two civilizations, spiritual civilization in particular.

After reviewing the work done by various localities recently, we have initially summed up 10 experiences. We enumerate them here for your reference.

1. We have used the dialectical materialist viewpoint to constantly educate people on the situation and policy in order to unify their thinking and will, and to arouse their passionate enthusiasm for the four modernizations drive. This is an important item of the ideological and political work. To carry out education in situation and policy, we should focus our attention on the problems with which people are concerned, such as the problems of reform, opening to the outside world, party rectification, commodity prices, wages, and so on. We should present the facts and reason things out. We should tell people the history, the present state of affairs, the party's policy decisions, and the progress which has been made in solving these problems. We should also tell them, strictly according to the facts, the difficulties we have encountered, the problems which still exist, and the achievements we have made. We should reflect things as they really are. We should not sidestep and cover up the facts, so that the masses understand the situation as a whole, and the principal and secondary aspects of the changing situation. We should guide the masses so that they observe the situation in an all-round, dialectical, and historical way, value the present hard-won favorable situation, and strengthen their confidence in making progress. Following the National Conference of Party Delegates, many leading comrades have gone down to schools, factories, mines, and other grass-roots units. They have studied with the masses the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates, and answered their questions. They have exchanged ideas and views with the masses, and solved practical problems. What they have been doing is generally welcomed by the masses. Practice has proved that this is a successful experience for doing ideological and political work during the new period, and should, therefore, be greatly advocated, so that it will become a system in our leadership work.

2. We have organized students to take part in social practice, and urged workers to participate in the reform in their enterprises, so that they understand the overall situation, widen their field of vision, have a sense of being the masters of their own affairs, show concern for and support reform, and become promoters of reform. Recently, the departments concerned and universities and colleges have spent some time on organizing students to go deep into society, the grass-roots units, and the frontline of reform. Through various kinds of activities, such as visits, discussions, investigation, interviewing advanced and model workers, and so on, students have realized the urgency of the reform of the educational system, raised their consciousness of participating in reform, discovered their own deficiencies, and enhanced their sense of responsibility for society. Since they have a clearer and more definite aim of study, they are determined to train themselves as early as possible into qualified personnel suitable for the four modernizations program in accordance with the demands of the party and the requirements of society.

Party organizations, trade unions, and representative assemblies of workers and staff members of many factories and enterprises have paid attention to encouraging workers and staff members to participate in the reform of their enterprises, and put forward rationalization proposals. In so doing, closer ties between cadres and the masses are maintained, and the broad masses of workers and staff members realize that "every man has a share in the responsibility for the success or failure of reform." This has also aroused their enthusiasm in participating in the reform, and promoted the smooth progress of the reform in their own units. Practice has proved that only by placing students, staff members, and workers in the reform can they correctly understand the importance of reform, take part in it as masters of their own affairs, and correctly handle the interests of the state, the collective, and the individual.

3. Let those who have lofty ideals talk about their methods of fostering their ideals, and those who observe discipline well talk about their methods of doing so. We have used typical advanced examples to encourage people to foster the revolutionary spirit of struggling to make progress. A brilliant image of Communist Party members is a banner which has a strong appeal. In the early sixties, the brilliant image of Communist Party members such as Lei Feng, Wang Jie, Jiao Yulu, and others who had ideals, and observed discipline well, stirred people's souls. Their revolutionary values, which nurtured and exerted an edifying influence over people of a whole generation, are still fresh in people's minds. They will never forget all this. Under the present conditions in which party work style and the general mood of society have not yet been completely improved, it is more practical and in accord with the requirements of our times to use typical advanced examples to encourage and enlighten people. The outstanding achievements of advanced and model figures fully demonstrate the traditional virtues sought by the Chinese nation. Using their light to kindle the light of others and using their fire to kindle the flames of others will surely start a prairie fire. Therefore, while giving wide publicity to the advanced and model figures of the whole country, or the whole province, we should also pay close attention to discovering and giving publicity to advanced typical examples of the areas, departments, and units concerned. Of course, our publicity should be based on facts, and no exaggeration is permissible. We should integrate our efforts to give publicity to the advanced deeds of typical examples with the activities of the broad masses of people of learning from heroes and translating their advanced deeds into actions, and encourage new, healthy trends in order to promote a complete improvement in the party work style and the general mood of society.

4. Schools and factories should be run strictly in order to establish a good work style in these units, and to create a good environment for training excellent talented personnel. At present, some social phenomena merit our attention. Some university and college students think that once they enter their universities or colleges, they already have their "iron rice bowls." They are completely satisfied with "60 marks." Therefore, they drift along aimlessly, and just study for diplomas. In factories and mines, some workers and staff members only pay attention to bonuses, but care nothing about their contribution. Good personalities and good deeds are not supported, while evildoers and evil deeds are not criticized. In organs and organizations, work efficiency is generally low, and work progresses very slowly. In some units, people guard themselves against each other, and their relations are cold and detached. In society, some people are jealous of the able and virtuous. "Those who have accomplished something great and enjoy high prestige and command universal respect are basely slandered and attacked." Advanced figures and outstanding talented personnel are isolated, attacked and so on. All these phenomena show that the unhealthy trends inside the party and evil practices in society have become a great stumbling block to our all-round reform, and to the progress of the four modernizations program. Without removing such obstacles, it is impossible to train talented personnel in great numbers. Without removing such obstacles, our reform will not succeed. In some units, discipline is lax, and unhealthy trends are prevalent. Leaders must take responsibility for all these phenomena.

Practice has proven that maintaining strict discipline is decisive in promoting healthy trends, strengthening unity, scoring greater achievements, and training more talented personnel. The key to maintaining strict discipline lies in the healthy trends pursued by leading bodies, and their staunch unity.

5. Proceeding from revolutionary humanitarianism, we should respect people, and show concern for them. We should understand and help them in order to strengthen the coagulative and centripetal force of the collectives. To do the work in this respect well, macroscopically we should adroitly guide action according to circumstances, and microscopically we should work with meticulous care. Their relations should be handled well. We should link well our efforts to discuss principles with our endeavors to deal with concrete matters relating to work.

What we have called macroscopically guiding action according to circumstances means that we should make known to the masses the party's life, guiding principles, and policies exactly as they are, so that they will take into account the general situation and the objectives of the party, advance along the historical orientation,and keep abreast of the trends of development. What we have called microscopically working with meticulous care means that we should proceed from the different conditions of different people and circumstances, follow a down-to-earth style, and do careful and painstaking work bit by bit. Under the present situation of reform, the masses are ideologically active. Leaders should immerse themselves among the masses, and try to find out what they are thinking about, what they desire and demand, and their existing problems and difficulties. They should sincerely help them solve their problems. Only thus will the masses trust their leaders, and will closer relations between the party and the masses be maintained. Only thus will the masses feel the warmth and strength of the collective, and strengthen the coagulative and centripetal force of the collectives.

6. We should persist in the principle of providing proper guidance for the masses. We should move the masses with our sincerity and convince them by reasoning. We should handle contradictions among the people correctly. It is normal for the masses to express this or that view or opinion on certain matters. The correct method we should uphold is the method of providing proper guidance in order to avoid the intensification of contradictions. The ancients said: "Only by widening the source will a river flow far and wide." Here, widening means proper guidance. Providing proper guidance is a basic guiding principle for ideological and political work, and a basic method for correctly handling contradictions among the people. To persist in the principle of providing proper guidance, we should stress the equal footing of the leaders and those who are led. We should say what is in our minds, and dare to express our views in front of people. Only thus can we have heart-to-heart talks with the masses, and exchange views with them. We should move the masses with our sincerity, and convince them with reason. Our units should be full of revolutionary feeling, and comradely affinity. They should also be filled with a human touch, so that people will have deep affection for each other. We should use Marxist and communist ideology and the party's guiding principles and policies to convince and educate people. To persist in the principle of providing proper guidance, we should promptly understand the thinking, feelings, and psychological changes of the masses. We should do all we can to solve these problems in the embryonic stage.

7. We should mobilize various quarters to tackle problems in a systematic way so that ideological and political work will permeate every link and field. Ideological and political work is an important task which affects the situation as a whole. It is also a great and systematic task. On the one hand, we should provide people with ideological education from their early childhood. Ideological and political work should run through all stages of people's lives.

On the other hand, we should realize that this is a matter which should be handled not only by the departments in charge of political and ideological work, but also by trade unions, women's federations, the Communist Youth League, people's militias, judical departments, schools, families, society, and so on. Therefore, CPC committees at all levels should conscientiously correct their mistakes in neglecting ideological and political work. They should assign the work a most important position, study ideolgical trends, throb with the pulse of the masses, and carry out propaganda and education in light of the actual conditions. In the meantime, they should also solve the practical problems of the propaganda departments and ideological and political departments. Various departments, including trade unions, CYL organizations, women's federations, and other mass organizations should make concerted efforts to do their work well. Administrative leaders of the management and vocational (production) departments should overcome the trend of grasping production and business without specific aims. In a word, the whole of society should grasp ideological and political work, so that it will permeate the various links and fields.

8. We should provide systematic education in basic Marxist theory, raise considerably the ideological consciousness of the broad masses of cadres and people, and help them foster a correct outlook on life and the world. In the course of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, we should raise a series of practical and theoretical problems. Due to the fact that some cadres and party members have not mastered basic Marxist theory well, and have failed to understand profoundly that the present policy is a development of Marxism, they waver, or are perplexed over the direction of our advance. They doubt, or even dislike, the existing policy. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary and an urgent need to provide the broad masses of cadres and people with systematic education in basic Marxist theory so that they will raise considerably their political and ideological consciousness, observe the situation, and analyze problems with a correct outlook on life and the world. At present, we have achieved marked results in providing the broad masses of cadres with regular theoretical education, and in conducting political, theoretical, and moral education among the broad masses of young students, with emphasis on improving the teaching of basic Marxist theory. We should not only study the works of Marx and Lenin, but should also study and understand the existing policy, which is a development of Marxism. We should raise our consciousness of implementing the policy, and resolutely keep in line with the CPC Central Committee politically.

9. We should constantly enhance the quality of the party and government cadres, as well as cadres in charge of ideological and political work. We should use our exemplary deeds and effective work to uphold the authority of the ideological and political departments. The prestige of leaders and the authority of the ideological and political departments are not self-asserted. They are established through practice. The real power of ideological and political work lies in the style of actions matching words, in exemplary roles, and in fine character and work style. This is because when the masses judge a cadre, they judge him not only by what he says, but also by what he does. When a cadre wants the masses to do a certain thing, he should personally do it first. When a cadre does not want the masses to do a certain thing, he must absolutely not do it himself. "When those above behave worthily, those below will follow them even if no order is issued. When those above behave unworthily, those below will not follow them even if an order is issued." To uphold the authority of the departments in charge of ideological and political work, the departments concerned should rely on their effective and creative work. Comrades working in ideological and political departments must have self-esteem and self-confidence, and strive to become stronger. They should gradually establish their prestige and authority in their creative work.

10. We should regard social benefit as the sole criterion for testing all social activities. We should uphold the four basic principles, and oppose bourgeois liberalization. We should serve the general task and aim of the party, and train socialist new people who have ideals and morality and who observe discipline.

This is the starting point and the end-result of our ideological and political work in the new period. Spiritual production should take social benefit as its sole criterion. This is determined by the nature of our party and socialist system, and is independent of man's subjective will. We should use our achievement in work to encourage people to go all out to make progress, and kindle their enthusiasm for the four modernizations so that they have a lofty moral character and mental outlook. We should on no account let feudal and capitalist decadent ideology corrupt our people and poison our youth. The four basic principles are incompatible with bourgeois liberalization. To uphold the four basic principles, we should resolutely oppose the propaganda of bourgeois liberalization, namely the propaganda of the capitalist road. Our departments in charge of propaganda, culture, education, public health, and publication should on no account regard money as everything, or forget all moral principles at the sight of profits. We should acquire correct guiding thinking for our vocational work, produce first-rate products, do first-rate work, and strive to achieve first-rate effects in the course of strengthening the building of spiritual civilization.

SHANXI LEADERS MEET WITH LOCAL PLA LEADERS

HK010201 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 31 January, the provincial CPC Committee and government invited responsible comrades of the provincial military district and PLA units stationed in Shanxi to a forum to express the close feelings between Army and people and discuss plans for developing Shanxi. Governor Wang Senhao spoke on the province's achievements in 1985 and work arrangements for 1986.

Li Ligong and Wang Senhao presented brocade banners to the provincial military district and PLA units stationed in Shanxi.

Present at the forum were other leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, Advisory Commission, People's Congress, and government Wang Jiangong, Ruan Boshe , Bai Qingcai, Zhang Changzhen, Jia Jun, and (Zhang Yemin); and leading comrades oi the provincial military district and PLA units stationed in Shanxi (Luo Jihui), (Qi Lianyin), (Li Zhong), (Mei Xizngsheng), (Li Wensheng), (Han Ruizhi), (Wen Gang), (Ehen Kengjun), (Lin Gengqir), (Li Akun), (Wu Xuetong), (Jia Huatang), (Hu Weiyi), and (Zhou Qingfu).

SUN WEIBEN AT CLOSING OF HEILONGJIANG CONFERENCE

[Text] The provincial rural work conference ended on 29 January. The conference put forth general demands for the province's rural work, calling for efforts to conscientiously implement the guidelines of the 1986 Central Document No 1 and the province's stipulated rural policies, to consolidate and digest the existing reform achievements, to further readjust the rural production structure, to strengthen agricultural capital construction, to promote agricultural technical transformation, to boldly develop the commodity economy, and strive to realize the fighting goal of restoring production following a year of disasters.

At the 5-day provincial rural work conference the participants studied and discussed the 1986 Central Document No 1 and the speeches of the central leading comrades at the national rural work conference, analyzed the province's rural situation, and in line with the guidelines of the provincial CPC Committee work conference held last year, worked out plans for this year's rural work.

The conference commended and awarded the counties, plants, bureaus, and advanced agriculture-oriented units which made remarkable achievements in developing the rural commodity economy in 1985. Chen Yunlin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a work report at the conference.

The conference pointed out: Rural reform has moved from a period of sharp change into a stage of consolidated, deep and perfect development. To cope with such a change, this year we should prominently grasp the following four tasks well:

1. We should continue to improve the contract purchase system. All localities should grasp well grain and hog contract purchases. The vegetable planting acreage in the outskirts of cities should account for some 60 percent of the total planted acreage. The sales of vegetables by the state vegetable departments must account for more than 60 percent of the total amount of vegetables on the markets. Governments at all levels should implement the contract purchase system in places where necessary before the spring plowing begins.

2. We should conscientiously solve the problem that the circulation channels are not smooth enough. We should do a good job in reforming the supply and marketing cooperatives and credit cooperatives and open up some new commodity circulation channels and new forms of commercial activities.

3. We should improve and develop the cooperative economic units. At present, the most practical and pressing demand of peasants is to do a good job in all kinds of socialized services throughout the whole course of production. First of all, we should further improve regional cooperative organizations, and improve the dual-operational system of integrating unified operation with decentralized operation. We should grasp the prominent links in commodity production and actively develop all kinds of new-type cooperative service and economic organizations. We should also attend to reforming grass-roots agricultural units and establishments. The direction of reform is to consider service as our sole purpose instead of profits.

4. We should continue to readjust the rural production structure, adopt various measures to ensure a stable increase in grain production, guard against a new downward trend in animal husbandry, and continue to healthily develop the township enterprises.

At the conference Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, gave a speech on building spiritual civilization in the rural areas.

Sun Weiben said: In developing the rural commodity economy and the agricultural productive forces, we should closely integrate them with the building of spiritual civilization in the rural areas. In building the rural spiritual civilization, at present we should prominently grasp education on the current situation and policies among the broad masses of peasants and the rural grass-roots cadres. Last year our provincial agricultural front suffered disasters, which brought great difficulties to the people. We should urge the people to see clearly the main trend of the current situation, proceed from the actual local situations, actively analyze the unfavorable factors and the favorable conditions, promote the spirit of the foolish old man, rely on their own efforts, and strengthen their confidence in winning victory.

Sun Weiben pointed out: In building the rural spiritual civilization, we should focus our attention on achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social conduct. The rural leading comrades at all levels should serve as examples and do a good job in passing through the five barriers -- namely the money barrier, power barrier, the employment barrier, the human relationship barrier, and the honesty barrier -- and play an exemplary role in areas within their juristictions.

Sun Weiben emphatically pointed out: In building the rural grass-roots organizations, we should first grasp the building of grass-roots party organizations. Prior to spring plowing, all localities should concentratedly train the rural grass-roots cadres in the course of conducting party rectification and help them master more skills for doing their work well under the new situation in order to meet the needs of developing the rural commodity economy.

SUN WEIBEN AT HEILONGJIANG NATIONALITIES CONFERENCE

SK300647 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] The provincial nationalities work conference, which ended on 29 January, called on all minority areas in the province to vigorously develop the economy during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period with an aim to effecting a sustained and steady increase in their total industrial and agricultural output value and to make their industrial and agricultural output value increase at a yearly average rate slightly higher than the average provincial one. The advanced minority areas should basically popularize 9-year compulsory education and strive to lower the incidence of tuberculosis to the average provincial rate of 0.6 percent. Thirty percent of the minority villages and cultural, educational, and public health departments at the grass-roots level in the province should build themselves into civilized villages or departments.

Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and He Shoulun, vice governor of the province, attended and successively addressed the conference.

CHANGCHUN CITY CRACKS CASE INVOLVING SWINDLING

SK250446 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Text] Changchun City recently cracked an extraordinarily appalling case involving swindling. The group of swindlers headed by (Cui Changjiang) fraudulently obtained nearly 18 million yuan in renminbi during the past year. Of this sum, some 8 million yuan was already spent or divided up among themselves. (Cui Changjiang), (Wang Guangyi), and seven other swindlers were arrested by judicial organs according to law.

In January last year the manager of a trading company of Liaoning Province came to Changchun to buy rolled steel, and signed a purchase-marketing contract with (Cui Changjiang). Instaed of sending rolled steel to the other contracting party, (Cui Changjiang) regarded the 1 million yuan paid in advance as his own and spent it. During this period, a first-level station of the China Electric and Machinery Equip- Company intended to assemble cars in Changchun. (Cui Changjiang) forged numerous documents to cheat and fraudulently obtain another 10 million yuan of car assembly funds. (Cui Changjiang) and other people also signed a group of rolled steel purchase-marketing contracts with more than 10 units in and outside the province to swindle them out of their advance payments, totaling more than 5.5 million yuan. The major reasons why (Cui Changjiang) and other persons were able to swindle people out of so much money are that some party and government leading cadres were intent on nothing but profit, were weak-willed, and departed from principles. (Wang Guangyi), former deputy director of the second commercial sub-bureau of the (Nanguan) District of Changchun City; (Xing Huimin), former responsible person of the general office of the provincial court, and some personnel of the Changchun City notarial office all once gained benefits from (Cui Changjiang) and gave the green light to his swindling activities. Now (Wang Guangyi) has been arrested and is due to be punished according to law, and (Xing Humin) has been expelled from the party and handed over to judicial organs. Possible criminal charges against other persons implicated will also be investigated.

JILIN'S GAO DI ATTENDS CPC RURAL WORK CONFERENCE

SK291030 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] At the provincial rural work conference which ended on 28 January, the provincial CPC Committee put forward the following major tasks for the 1986 rural work: Penetratingly carry out rural economic reform, strive to restore the 1986 grain output to that before the natural disasters, and greatly develop animal husbandry and town and township enterprises.

Held by the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial rural work conference was devoted to implementing the guidelines of the central rural work conference and the provincial CPC Committee work conference, discussing matters concerning rural reform, and making arrangements for work in 1986. Attending the conference were comrades in charge of agricultural work in various cities, prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and counties; and responsible comrades of pertinent departments at the provincial level. Comrades Gao Di, Wang Xianjin, and Wang Jinshan spoke at the conference.

The conference made arrangements for 1986 work on the basis of comprehensively summing up the 1985 rural work and fully affirming the good rural situation in our province. The conference emphatically pointed out: The CPC Central Committee and the State Council have attached great importance and placed many hopes on our province's grain production, and have demanded that our province restore agricultural production in 1986 to that before the natural disasters and strive to top 30 billion jin in grain output this year. Because our province has many favorable conditions, it is completely possible for us to fulfill this task. We must clearly note, however, the task for restoring the 1986 grain output to that before the natural disasters will be very arduous. We must adopt feasible measures in the fields of ideology, work, and policy and strive to restore the grain output to that before natural disasters in 1 year.

The measures adopted by the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial prople's government are as follows:

1. We should stabilize the grain-growing acreage and maintain the proportion of high-yield crops.

This year we should rationalize the distribution of grain crops in line with the demand of ensuring grain output at 30 billion jin. Corn is one of the advantages of our province. We should retain this advantage. If possible, all localities should appropriately expand corn-growing acreage, strive to increase the per-unit yield and stabilize the gross yield, vigorously develop rice production, and appropriately increase the acreage devoted to soybeans. In terms of paddy rice, the growth rate of last year should be maintained. This year the paddy fields should be increased by 650,000 mu.

2. We should formulate policies to encourage and mobilize the peasants' initiative in growing grain, perfect the grain-ordering contracts, and publish as early as possible the amount, varieties, and prices of grains to be purchased by order. The amount of grains to be purchased by order should be maintained at the 1985 figure -- 12 billion jin -- and this amount will remain unchanged for another 2 years. Corn, paddy rice, soybeans, and wheat will be purchased by order, but sorghum and millet will not. The basic amount of rice to be purchased by order will be cut appropriately, that of corn will be increased, and that of soybeans and wheat will remain unchanged. As for the portion covered by ordering contracts, the price of corn should be calculated at a 70:30 ratio, that of rice and wheat by a 80:20 ratio, and that of soybeans should be restored to the original purchasing price. As for the portion not covered by contracts, the prices of corn, rice and wheat can be changed according to market demand. When market prices are high, these grains will be purchased on a negotiated basis at prices higher than the previous planned purchase prices; when market prices are low, they will be purchased at prices not higher than the previous planned purchase prices. The price of soybeans not convered by contracts can be changed according to market demand, but no protective prices will be given.

As for villages along the Sino-Soviet border areas, their grain will be purchased without limit at above-quota prices. The policy of linking grain with fertilizer will be implemented. Fairly priced quality chemical fertilizers will be distributed by the province in line with the basic amount of grain to be purchased by order. In purchasing corn which can be exported, subsidies will be given to sellers in addition to the contracted prices. Grain departments should vigorously expand their grain storage capacity and try every possible means to reduce the amount of grain stored by peansants for the state on a commission basis. Beginning this year, remuneration to peasants who have stored grain for the state on a commission basis should increase to the proper extent. Those areas that develop town and township enterprises in a relatively quick manner and gain fairly high income from sideline occupations should release some money to subsidize grain production. Efforts will be made to lighten the peasants' burden and change the method of apportioning the burden according to field acreage. From now on, except for the agricultural tax which should be paid according to the land, all other burdens should be reasonably apportioned in line with the labor force, number of persons, and income. Peasants loans for grain production should be ensured, and restrictions on granting loans should be appropriately reduced for poverty-stricken and disaster-afflicted households.

3. We should depend on science to increase incomes and popularize the technologies of reasisting low temperatures and promoting early maturing.

4. We should attend to building farmland water conservancy projects, focusing on water-logging control projects.

The conference pointed out: Agriculture is the foundation, but animal husbandry is also included in agriculture. Leaders at all levels in all localities should pay attention to animal husbandry, just like they do in grasping agriculture.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period our province should build four livestock commodity bases. In the course of building the livestock bases, we should vigorously develop animal husbandry specialized households in order to give impetus to tens of thousands of other households. This year in developing animal husbandry we should vigorously raise cattle and sheep on the premise of continually paying attention to hog and poultry growing. Hogs should be purchased on a contract basis. Hog prices can be adjusted according to seasonal differences, on the condition that the annual general price will not change; but price fluctuations between peak and off seasons cannot exceed 10 percent. To increase the slaughter rate of hogs and raise more lean-meat hogs, we will implement new procurement and price calculating methods beginning from 1 April this year.

The conference pointed out: We should pay attention to town and township enterprises, just like we do in grasping urban industry. This year we should top 5 billion yuan in the total output value of town and township enterprises, and 450 million yuan in profits. In developing town and township enterprises, we should mainly develop the production of agricultural products, the processing industry, the storage trade, the packaging trade, and the transport industry in line with the principles of basing ourselves upon agriculture and serving agriculture. We should vigorously develop township and village enterprises in the course of encouraging individuals to combine in association. Beginning from this year, the bonus taxes paid by town and township enterprises should be turned over to township financial department, and should be spent on developing town and township enterprises. The supply of raw and semifinished materials needed by town and township enterprises should be brought into line with the plan, and the supply quotas for these materials should be increased gradually.

The conference pointed out: This year we will penetratingly carry out rural reform, with the focus on reforms in the circulation and service systems, will perfect commodity purchase and selling contracts and the output-related contracted responsibilities system, will improve the duel management system of combining the unified management with separate management, and will vigorously develope the specialized and cooperative economic organizations. The conference also discussed ways to support poverty-stricken households and areas.

GAO DI ATTENDS JILIN SPRING FESTIVAL PARTY

SK310550 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Text] A Spring Festival party was held this afternoon at the auditorium of the organ of the provincial CPC Committee for the Taiwan compatriots and the family members of our compatriots residing in Taiwan. Attending the party were leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial people's government, and the provincial CPPCC Committee, including Gao Di, Wang Xianjin, Wang Zhongyu, Wang Daren, Liu Jingzhi, Dong Su, Gao Wen, Zhang Fengqi, Geng Yuelun, and Cai Qiyun. Also attending were Li Diping and Yu Lin, retired veteran cadres, and responsible comrades of the provincial federation and league of Taiwan compatriots.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, Comrade Wag Zhongyu extended festive greetings to the Taiwan compatriots and their family members participating in the party. Then, he said: During the past year, CPC committees at all levels in the province have further implemented the policies toward Taiwan compatriots and the family members of our compatriots residing in Taiwan, thus kindling and mobilizing their patriotic zeal. Moreover, an increasing number of Taiwan compatriots have come to our province to visit relatives, sightsee, give lectures, and engage in trade.

In his speech, Comrade Wang Zhongyu called on the Taiwan compatriots in our province and the family members of our compatriots residing in Taiwan to continually carry forward the patriotic spirit, take advantage of all favorable conditions to expand contacts with their relatives and friends residing in Taiwan and abroad, and encourage their relatives and friends residing abroad and in Taiwan to return to their homeland -- Jilin -- to join the construction cause.

At the party, the (Changying) orchestra staged a brilliant performance.

LI GUIXIAN MAKES REPORT AT LIAONING CPC PLENUM

SK280835 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Jan86

[Text] The sixth provincial CPC Committee held its second plenary session to study and discuss the speeches made by leading comrades among the central authorities at the central office cadres' meeting, and to study and plan for the province's work in 1986.

At the plenary session, Li Guixian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made a report entitled "Clearly Understand the Current Situation, Adhere to Reform, and Strive for New Victories in Building the Two Civilizations." In his report, Comrade Li Guixian analyzed the good political and economic situations of our province. He pointed out: The Sixth 5-Year Plan period has already ended. During the past 5 years, under the guidance of the Marxist line since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the vast number of party members, cadres, and the masses throughout the province have united to work hard, and thus created a new situation in which political stability goes hand in hand with economic prosperity. In 1985 we took an important step in building the spiritual and material civilizations, and the people throughout the province surmounted the difficulties caused by floods and waterlogging. Last year our grain output declined. But thanks to the readjustment of the production setup, the rural economy still developed steadily; the livelihood of the people in disaster-afflicted areas was stable; industrial production developed in a sustained, steady, and coordinated manner; the pace of technological transformation was accelerated; simultaneous increases were realized in the growth rate and economic results; fresh headway was made in the economic structural reform and in opening ourselves to the outside world; and progress was made in education, scientific and technological, cultural, public health, and sports undertakings. All of this has laid a good foundation for the economic and social development of our province during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Meanwhile, the situation on the ideological and political fronts was good, too. The ideological and political work focusing on the education of having lofty ideals, moral integrity, knowledge, and a sense of discipline developed continually and penetratingly; the atmosphere of stressing ideals and abiding by discipline prevailed in society; some results were achieved in rectifying party style; some improvements were made in social order and public security; and, in the course of combating floods and carrying out rescue work, in particular, the majority of party members and cadres took the lead in sacrificing themselves for the sake of others and fought bravely together with the people in disaster areas. This shows that our party has taken root among the masses and is combat-worthy, and the main train of the party contingent is good.

Having analyzed the current situation, Comrade Li Guixian set forth the tasks for 1986. He said: In this new year, we should lead the vast number of party members, cadres and the masses throughout the province to penetratingly implement the guidelines of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, the National Conference of Party Delegates, and the speeches made by leading comrades of the central authorities at the central office cadres' meeting; to continually adhere to the principles of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy; to vigorously built the spiritual civilization in the course of attending to the economic construction; and to achieve success in reforming the urban and rural economic structure, carrying out technological transformation of the existing enterprises, straightening out party style, effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social atmosphere, and building leading bodies. He emphatically stressed: In straightening out party style, we should pay attention to the exemplary role of the organs at the provincial level, and vigorously strengthen the political and ideological work.

Comrade Li Guixian said: In this new year, we should ensure that the new habits, atmosphere, standards and achievements are widely popularized in Liaoning, strive to further improve party style and social practice, and make great efforts to score outstanding achievements in the fields of reform, open policy, renovation, and development.

The plenary session endorsed the report of Comrade Li Guixian. Veteran Comrades Dai Suli and Xu Shaofu spoke at the session. They offered some valuable suggestions for building the leading bodies and straightening out party style.

The plenary session was held from 22 to 26 January.

LIAONING BANS COLLECTION OF UNWARRANTED FEES

SK281112 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 9 Jan 86 p 1

[Text] During the past few years, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have repeatedly issued injunctions to prohibit the extraction of unwarranted fees from enterprises and grass-roots units. Thus far, however, some localities, departments, and units have still turned a deaf ear to these injunctions, and refused to implement orders and prohibitions. These localities, departments, and units, proceeding from partial and local interests and from the interests of small groups, have taken advantage of their powers and positions to collect unwarranted levies from enterprises and grass-roots units. Worse still, such a malpractice is becoming ever more serious and runs so rampant that enterprises and grass-roots units cannot endure it. If this malpractice is not checked immediately, it will certainly disturb the progress of reform, sabotage production, corrupt party style and cadres, and discredit the lofty reputation of the party and the government among the people. To check this malpractice, the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government have issued the following stipulations:

1. Except for those legal charges that should be collected from enterprises and grass-roots units as explicitly stipulated by the State Council and the provincial people's government, no departments are allowed to levy any fees or goods from any units or individuals. Those departments that are doing so must stop doing it.

2. All kinds of financial support should be controlled strictly. As for those projects that must be financially supported by enterprises and grass-roots units, approvals by the provincial or city people's governments are necessary.

3. All advisory instituions should be consolidated, and all unwarranted collection and division of advisory charges is strictly prohibited. When providing services for enterprises and grass-roots units, all state organs and the state-financed institutions should not collect any fees on the pretext of rendering services and offering advice. Those state organs and institutions that have already levied unwarranted frees from enterprises and grass-roots units should compensate for the fees with their professional allocations, return the money to the units from which it was collected, or deliver the money to the financial department.

Those that have already spent such fees on buying houses and other assets should sell the houses and assets and then return the money to the units from which it was collected. The fees that have already been divided up privately should also be returned. (Except for those units and individuals that professionally engage in advisory work), all the advisory services units should give advisory services to others during their sparetime after fulfilling the tasks assigned to them by the state and higher authorities. Such practices as abusing one's powers to serve one's own interests, taking advantage of one's position to seek personal gain, rendering fewer services but collecting more fees, and collecting fees even after not rendering any services should be prohibited.

4. Presumptuously drawing up rules and regulations to wantonly collect fees and impose fines is strictly prohibited. The fees and penalties that are collected according to stipulations should not be connected with the economic interests of various departments, units, and individuals. Those who have already connected the former with the latter must separate them.

5. The fees collected in accordance with stipulations should all be regarded as extra-budgetary funds, and these funds should be earmarked for specified purposes. It is forbidden to privately change the use of such funds; still less should the funds be used wantonly on the pretext of improving the welfare facilities for workers and staff members. All the surplus funds should be delivered to the financial departments.

6. The financial, auditing, banking, price, and industrial and commercial administration departments are strictly prohibited from joining with or supporting other units to fix excessive service charges and collect unwarranted extra fees. These departments are strictly forbidden to take advantage of their powers and positions to render paid services.

7. Enterprises and grass-roots units are entitled to resist unauthorized apportionment, fees, and penalties. As for those who put pressure on and create difficulties for the units that resist the unreasonable levies, their leaders should be held to account.

8. Leading organs must take the lead, and adopt resolute measures to actually check and solve the problems of collecting unwarranted extra fees from enterprises and grass-roots units.

SHENYANG RALLY SENTENCES 14 CRIMINALS TO DEATH

SK011127 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Excerpts] This morning, the Shenyang City Intermediate People's Court held a rally at the provincial gymnasium to publicly pronounce judgment. Twenty-one criminals who seriously endangered public security were strictly punished according to law. A total of 200,000 people throughout the city listened to the live relay of the rally at 150 assembly sites. Recently, some criminals in Shenyang City, in particular those released after serving their terms of imprisonment or released from reeducation who were not transformed well, seriously damaged social order and endangered the safety of the people's lives and property by committing murder and robbery and devastating women.

At the rally, 14 criminals were sentenced to death, and 7 were sentenced to death with a 2-year reprieve, life imprisonment, or fixed-term imprisonment.

LANZHOU MEETING ON BUILDING, DEFENDING NORTHWEST

HK270600 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Jan 86

[Text] Principal party, government, and Army leaders of five provinces and regions in northwest China gathered in Lanzhou to discuss a great plan for exploiting, building and defending the great northwest. The meeting, approved by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council and the CPC Central Committee's Military Commission, was sponsored by the Lanzhou Military Region CPC Committee.

At the meeting, responsible comrades of the Lanzhou Military Region; of the Xinjiang Military District, all provincial military districts, and all group armies under the military region; and of the Lanzhou Military Region Air Force reported and briefed on how local party committees and governments care for and support the Army in reforming the Army structure and streamlining armed forces and on how they supported the Army and gave preferential treatment to families of revolutionary armymen and martyrs. They expressed heartfelt thanks to local party committees, people's governments, and people of various nationalities for their deep love for the Army.

In their speeches the leading comrades of local authorities warmly praised the people's own Army for its great achievements in conscientiously serving the overall situation, in dealing with emergencies and providing disaster relief, in supporting local construction, in the drive of armymen and civilians jointly building spiritual civilization and cultivating talented people for both Army and civil use, and in greening and defending the great northwest. They said that the PLA is worthy of the title of heroes in defending the motherland and vanguards in building the two civilizations.

At the meeting the principal party, government and Army leading comrades enthusiastically and sincerely exchanged their thoughts on implementing the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates and carrying out the several important instructions issued by central leading comrades on exploiting, building, and defending the great northwest. The comrades from the Army said that they will have regard and respect for themselves, double their efforts, and use their practical action of building and defending the great northwest to repay the care and support for the military region, military districts, and Armed Forces expressed by party committees, governments, and people of various nationalities in the five provinces and regions in northwest China.

Party and government leading comrades of the five provinces and regions said that they will express more care and support for the people's own Army, help the Army on their own initiative to solve various difficult problems, and give whatever assistance that the Armed Forces may need in solving their practical problems.

Amid an enthusiastic and friendly atmosphere, both the Army and local comrades, proceeding from the overall situation of jointly exploiting, building, and defending the great northwest, discussed the problems of putting people's Armed Forces departments under local administration; armymen and civilians jointly building spiritual civilization and training people for both Army and civilian use; Armed Forces support for construction of some key local projects; and greening the great northwest. They said that through the meeting Army and local comrades exchanged information, learned more about each other, coordinated their work, and cemented their relations. As a result, many problems can be solved more smoothly in the future.

Attending the meeting were principal leading comrades from the Lanzhou Military Region, Shaanxi Province, Ningxia Autonomous Region, Qinghai Province, Xingjiang Autonomous Region, and Gansu Province, including Zhao Xianshun, Li Xuanhua, Li Xipu, Li Xuezhi, Hei Boli, Yin Kesheng, Gabulong, Amudong Niyazi, (Jin Yunhui), Li Ziqi, and Chen Guangyi. The meeting opened on 20 January and ended on the morning of 22 January.

QINGHAI CIRCULAR ON STUDYING LEADERS' SPEECHES

HK291442 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 25 Jan 86

[Text] On 20 January, the provincial CPC Committee issued a circular urging all party members and cadres, particularly the leading cadres, to study, and act in an in-depth way on the spirit of the central leaders' speeches at the meeting of central organ cadres. They should do better in working and studying hard and in handling matters efficiently and in a down-to-earth manner. They should take a new look and set examples for the province.

The circular urged: Party and government organs at and above the city level must concentrate their efforts during the Spring Festival on organizing party members and cadres, particularly members of the leading groups, to seriously study the central leaders' speeches. They should seek a common understanding by using the spirit of the speeches. Focusing on reforms and opening-up, they should correctly understand the present situation and further do well in the province's tasks. At present, we should strive to do well in helping ourselves by engaging in production, in extricating the poor from their poverty-stricken state, and in reforming the economic structure and building the socialist spiritual civilization. We should strive for new breakthroughs and to create a new situation.

The circular said: Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the province has constantly improved its party work style and general mood of society. Most of the party members and cadres roused themselves and worked hard. However, there are still problems in the party and organ work style. Some people have had their thinking about serving the people blunted. For the sake of their personal interests, they are often preoccupied with their personal gains and losses and always bargain. Some pursue undeserved reputations, go in for ostentation and extravagance, and do not have the thinking of struggling hard. Some units know nothing about the situation, engage in bureaucratism, and are inefficient. Some people indulge in liberalism and pay no attention to principles, the overall situation, or unity. Moreover, they do no work but are fastidious about the mistakes of their industrious colleagues. They are keen on hearsay but do not observe discipline. Also, the situation of extravagant spending and violating discipline is very serious in some areas.

The circular urged: Starting with the leading organs and leading cadres to the grass roots, we must resolutely investigate and correct mistakes while studying and discussing the documents. We must promptly correct the problems found. Leaders who are responsible for the problems should be bold in assuming their responsibilities. We must uphold the principle of handling major cases resolutely and continuously. In particular, we must be bold in tackling the tough cases of violating discipline concerning cadres at and above the county level. We must really strengthen our leadership and introduce the responsibility system for the work concerning party work style. In this study of the central leaders' speeches and correction of party and organ work style, the party committees and party organizations must make joint arrangements and the leading cadres must personally handle the work. They should do more work and speak less. Through the improvement of party work style, they should promote the building of a united, civilized, and rich Qinghai.

BEIJING URGES ESTABLISHMENT OF TIES WITH TAIWAN

[Commentary by station commentator (Zhong Ming): "What Is Wrong With Establishing Postal, Transport, and Trade Relations?"]

[Text] The Taiwan authorities have avoided an exchange of postal, transport, and trade services with the mainland, which is an inevitable trend of the times. They have taken great pains to delay the process of establishing postal, transport, and trade relations, including a recently issued ban on advocating so-called illusions in such relations.

What is wrong with an exchange of postal, transport, and trade services. Will it bring natural or man-made calamities? No. It will only allow the people on the two sides of the Strait to exchange postal, transport, and trade services. It is a long-cherished aspiration of the hundreds of millions of compatriots on both sides of the Strait. What is wrong with allowing relatives and old friends on both sides of the Strait -- whose ability to communicate with each other has been obstructed because of this unfortunate separation -- to correspond with each other again to revive their friendship to their hearts content and alleviate the pains of separation they have suffered for several decades? What is wrong with allowing compartiots on the two sides of the Strait, who are flesh and blood to each other, to freely exchange visits and happily tour various places on the good earth of the motherland so as to dispel the shadow of long separation in their hearts and foster close feelings between compatriots of the same nation? Again, what is wrong with allowing the economies on both sides of the Strait to exchange commodities to help supply each other's needs and enliven the market, which would be beneficial to both sides and harmful to neither side? Why are the Taiwan authorities uneasy and fearful of all these exchanges aimed at making the nation strong and prosperous and realizing the motherland's reunification as quickly as possible? Why do they want to become the [word indistinct] of the people?

As a matter of fact, there have been indirect postal, transport, and trade exchanges between the two sides of the Strait over the past few years. Exchanges of letters and trade through other countries and regions, and frequent contacts overseas are open secrets to everyone. Indirect exchanges at the present are establishing the conditions for direct exchanges in the future; these indirect exchanges represent a transitional period for direct exchanges. It is only a matter of time. Therefore, the Taiwan authorities should face up to that establishing postal, transport, and trade relations is a trend of the times.

Under such circumstances, the ban on advocating the so-called illusions in establishing such relations cannot obstruct the process of establishing such relations. The ban will certainly invite aversion from the people and be branded as ignorant of reality. Honestly, no matter in what area the exchange is made, it essentially facilitates the exchange of feelings, the close feelings between relatives and friends, as well as long-standing feelings of the same nation. The ban on establishing postal, transport, and trade relations is unerasonable and cannot be tolerated by human feelings. Those in power in Taiwan should clearly realize that an exchange of postal, transport, and trade services is a product of the times, and the will of the people, which cannot be impeded by any force.

CONCERN ABOUT S. KOREAN RECOGNITION OF PRC NOTED

OW311457 Taipei CNA in English 1434 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Taipei, Jan 31 (CNA) -- The Government of the Republic of China is very much concerned about foreign wire service reports that the South Korean Government hopes to restore diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and Communist China through cross recognition between the United States, Japan, the Soviet Union and Red China and North and South Koreas, Cheyne C.Y. Chiu, spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, said Friday. He added that his ministry, through the ROC Embassy in Seoul, is checking on these reports.

Chiu made the statement in a press conference held at the Government Information Office in the morning when asked about the cross recognition announcement reportedly made by South Korean Foreign Minister Yi Won-kyong. According to the spokesman, the Seoul Government has repeatedly mentioned the idea of cross recognition in recent years. "The Foreign Ministry is very much concerned about this and is contacting our embassy in Seoul, trying to check on the reports and understand the facts," he said.

Foreign wire service reports said earlier this week that South Korean Foreign Minister Yi when interviewed, publicly stated that to assure peace in the Korean peninsula, South Korea hopes that diplomatic relations between the United States, Japan and North Korea and those between the Soviet Union, Communist China and South Korea will be restored through cross recognitions among the six nations.

PREMIER YU REAFFIRMS ANTICOMMUNIST POLICY

OW040351 Taipei CNA in English 0232 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 3 (CNA) -- The Republic of China will never change, under any situation, its basic stand of "no compromise, no contacts and no talks" with the Chinese Communists, Premier Yu Kuo-hwa said Monday. Meeting domestic and foreign reporters Monday at the Executive Yuan auditorium, Premier Yu pointed out that the ROC's political and economic achievements in implementing the three principles of the people in the national bastion on Taiwan have not only been acknowledged by the international community, but also become the ideal to which mainland compatriots aspire. This broadly held aspiration of the mainland people has become a strong pressure on the Chinese Communist rulers, Yu said.

Facing the pressure, the communist authorities are attempting to win back the people's support, Yu said, by either adopting the surface forms or shallow examples of what has been successful in the ROC. The Chinese Communists will never drop their ideology's political and social systems although they have been forced to adopt some changes, Yu pointed out.

He said, therefore, the totally different standards of living on the two sides of Taiwan Strait will cause the people on the mainland to finally rise against the communist rulers.

On the problem of Hong Kong, Yu said the government, if necessary, will take flexible measures to help Overseas Chinese specialists, such as lawyers, doctors and engineers, in Hong Kong and Kowloon to come to Taiwan to join the national recovery mission. He said the Executive Yuan's ad hoc Hong Kong group has studied various possible steps to help Chinese people in Hong Kong and Kowloon to return to settle, to work and restart their businesses here.

TAIWAN NOT TO ACCEPT CHANGE OF NAME AT ADB

OW031051 Taipei CNA in English 1035 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 3 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hwa restated Monday the Republic of China will not accept change of its name in the Asian Development Bank [ADB]. If ADB admits the Peiping regime at the price of changing the ROC name in the organization, Yu said, "we will solemnly protest to ADB that this nation will absolutely not accept the change, so as to protect the nation's interest in the organization."

At a news conference Monday, Yu said ADB is a non-political regional banking organization. Its charter prohibits political interference with any of its policies; any new application for the ADB membership should not carry additional conditions, and a current member's interest and rights should not be affected by the admission of a new member, he stated.

The Republic of China is one of the founding members of ADB. Since then, the nation has been a loyal member and has had a good record in carrying out its duties, the premier said. Over the past years, there is no change in the nation's relations with ADB and its other members, he said. Therefore, he added, there is totally no reason for ADB to change the status and name of ROC membership.

Premier Yu also described as untrue a press report that Uruguay is planning to establish diplomatic relations with the Chinese Communists next year. Relations between the Republic of China and Uruguay have been always cordial, their cooperation is expanding, he said. Since the inauguration of the new Uruguayan Government, the cooperative programs have been positively underway, Yu said. Leading Uruguayan officials have visited this nation in the recent months to reflect the growing ROC-Uruguayan relations, he pointed out.

U.S. CONGRESSIONAL TRIPS, PRC ISSUES VIEWED

OW011621 Taipei CNA in English 0331 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Jan 31 (CNA) -- The recent visits by several American lawmakers to the Republic of China signified U.S. congressional efforts to establish a consensus on the future development of cooperation between the two countries, Foreign Ministry spokesman Cheyne J.Y. Chiu said Friday. "The visits will certainly have important influence on the development of ROC-U.S. relations," the spokesman said in a press conference at the government information office.

Chiu said that several influential U.S. senators and congressmen have visited Taipei since the beginning of this year. The American lawmakers conveyed to the ROC Government U.S. congressional support for further expansion of Sino-American ties. They also brought back to the U.S. information about ROC's stances and expectations on the promotion of bilateral relations, Chiu pointed out.

On the demonstrations against nuclear weapon tests in Sinkiang staged by students of ethnic nationalities on the mainland late last year, Chiu said the protests reflected the ethnic groups' dissatisfaction with the Peiping regime's suppressive rule and military buildup policy. He noted that minority-group students staged a series of protest demonstrations in such major cities as Peiping, Shanghai and Urumchi last December, asking the communist regime to immediately stop nuclear weapon tests. They also asked Peiping authorities to relax birth control policy as well as implement democracy and free enterprise system. "The demonstrations signify failure of Peiping's minority policy," Chiu asserted.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

Vietnamese Cease-Fire Proposal

OW051220 Beijing XINHUA in English 1212 GMT 5 Feb 86

["China Prepared To Punish Vietnamese Invaders, Says Foreign Ministry Spokesman" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today that China is well-prepared to mete out punishment to any Vietnamese invaders. He made this statement here this afternoon in response to questions whether there would be fierce fighting along the Sino-Vietnamese border during the Spring Festival and whether China still reserves the right to teach Vietnam a lesson.

The spokesman said the fact is that Vietnam is continuing its military provocations against Chinese border areas and is preparing a larger military adventure. Under such circumstances, he said, "The Chinese frontier guards are on alert and well-prepared to mete out punishment to any invaders." "As for when and on what scale China will counterattack," he said, "it will depend on the time and scale of Vietnam's intrusion and provocation."

Commenting on a proposal of cease-fire during the Spring Festival by Vietnamese authorities, the spokesman said: "It is void of practical significance. The fact is that Vietnam never stops its military provocation against China."

Condemns Israeli Interception

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government today strongly condemned Israeli authorities for dispatching jet fighters to intercept and force-land a Libyan passenger plane en route to Syria yesterday.

The Chinese government regarded this as "a terrorist act which wantonly tramples upon the basic norms of international law". This was stated by a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman at the weekly press briefing here this afternoon.

Gu Mu to Visit Singapore

OW050954 Beijing XINHUA in English 0945 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu will pay a working visit to Singapore in mid-February to discuss matters concerning cooperation between the two countries in the fields of tourism and civil aviation and will study Singapore's economic construction. This was announced by a Foreign Ministry spokesman at the weekly press briefing here this afternoon.

The spokesman also confirmed that State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian will visit Japan this year at the invitation of Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe. The visit was agreed upon during Abe's visit to China last year, he said. Specific itinerary is under discussion.

Finnish, Norwegian Visits

OW051148 Beijing XINHUA in English 1122 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister of the Republic of Finland, Mr. Kalevi Sorsa, will pay an official visit to China in September at the invitation of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said at a weekly news briefing here today. He said, since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Finland in 1950, the two countries have enjoyed good relations. In 1984, the total value of trade between the two countries exceeded 100 million U.S. dollars for the first time and an agreement on investment protection was signed in the same year.

He also announced that Foreign Minister Svenn Stray of the Kingdom of Norway will pay an official visit to China from February 24 to March 1 at the invitation of the Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian. In recent years the cooperation between China and Norway in the fields of economy, trade, science and technology has been further developed, he added. During Foreign Minister Stray's visit, China and Norway will officially sign an agreement on avoiding double taxation.

XINHUA REPORTS SOVIET CRUISE MISSILES ON ETOROFU

HK051114 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0852 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, 5 Feb (XINHUA) -- SANKEI SHIMBUN reports today that since October 1985 the Soviet Union has begun deploying cruise missiles with nuclear warheads on Etorofu, north of Japan.

It is reported that surface-to-ship and surface-to-surface offensive SSC-1 cruise missiles, with a range of about 450 km, have been deployed on Etorofu. If the missiles are launched from Etorofu, the Senzai base in Hokkaido and the Misawa base in Aomori Prefecture would be within the range of its attack.

NO INCREASE PLANNED IN PRC OIL EXPORT IN 1986

OW041200 Beijing XINHUA in English 1155 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 4 (XINHUA) -- China will not increase its total volume of oil export this year to help stabilize oil price on the world market, announced a Chinese official here today.

Zheng Dunxun, president of China National Chemicals Import and Export Corporation, said the move is designed to promote the dialogue and negotiations between the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and non-oil exporting countries on the basis of taking each other's interest into account. He said that China has made progress in its oil industry, but its oil is mainly for domestic consumption and only a limited amount of oil is exported. He expressed his concern for the drastic drop in oil price on the world market, and said that China appreciates and supports the efforts made by OPEC to stabilize the oil price through negotiations with other oil producers.

EC READY TO RESUME TALKS WITH COMECON

[Text] Brussels, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The European Commission (EC) said today that it is ready to resume talks with the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon). The readiness was expressed in letters which European External Relations Commissioner Willy de Clercq handed over today to Romanian Ambassador to EC Julian Vacarel, a commission spokeswoman said.

The letters -- one to Comecon secretariat-general in Moscow and one to the Romanian Government as the current Comecon president -- said the EC was willing to consider ways of establishing "formal relations" with Comecon which groups the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Germany, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Mongolia, Cuba and Vietnam.

The ties between EC and Comecon were suspended in 1980 amid growing East-West tensions over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The EC also wanted to "normalize ties with each of Comecon's European member states" in parallel with the proposed new contracts with Comecon's secretariat-general. Today's letters were a reply to a letter from Comecon Secretary Vyacheslav Sychev last September inviting EC officials to visit the Soviet Union to work out a joint statement of intent on improving relations between EC and Comecon.

SOVIET UNION, ANGOLA SIGN ECONOMIC AGREEMENTS

[Text] Moscow, January 30 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union and Angola have signed several documents broadening economic cooperation between the two countries, the Soviet news agency TASS reported here today. The documents stipulated a number of projects including a meat-processing complex and several farm machine and tractor stations. The Soviet Union will supply Angola with motorcars and other products. The documents were signed during Angolan Planning Minister Lopo do Nascimento's visit to Moscow.

A report said that trade between the Soviet Union and Angola has primarily consisted of USSR economic aid to Angola. Angola has experienced an unfavourable balance in bilateral trade during these years. The trade volume reached 149 million roubles (186 million U.S. dollars) in 1984, with the Soviet exports totalling 146 million roubles (183 million U.S. dollars) and importing worth 3.1 million roubles (3.88 million U.S. dollars).

REAGAN ISSUES STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE

[Text] Washington, February 4 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said tonight, "Keeping America strong is as vital to the national security. as controlling federal spending is to our economic security." In this fifth State of the Union address to the Congress, Reagan devoted most of his speech to domestic problems, especially to reducing budget deficits, the number one controversial issue his administration and the Congress face this year. The U.S. President made it clear that he has no intention to cut the military spendings, although he said that the passage of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings act in the Congress last year "gives us an historic opportunity to achieve what has eluded our national leadership for decades, forcing the federal government to live within its means." He said that the budget for fiscal 1987 he is going to submit to the Congress would "meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target for deficit reductions" Without sacrifices in defense, tax hike or hurting the "truly less fortunate." Reagan promised that he will achieve the target through economic growth and through cuts in nonessential domestic spending. For this purpose, he asked the Congress to give him a line-item veto this year so that he can have "the authority to veto the waste." The so-called "line-item veto" would empower the President to veto selective items within a bill without vetoing the whole bill. In the case of an annual budget passec by the Congress, he could retain what items he likes and kill what items he dislikes.

In other fields of domestic problems, Reagan revealed his intention to revise the current welfare and medical insurance systems, saying that he is charging the White House domestic council to present him by December 1, 1986, an evaluation of the welfare programs and a "strategy for immediate actions" in this respect. He said that he has also directed secretary of health and human services to report him by the end of the year with recommendations "on how the private and government can work together to address the problems of affordable insurance for those whose life savings would otherwise be threatened when a catastrophic illness strikes."

In his message, Reagan stressed the importance of enhancing the military strength, saying that the U.S. must be kept strong. "We have devoted five years trying to narrow a dangerous gap born of illusion and neglect. And we have made important gains." However, he said, "the threat from Soviet forces, conventional and strategic, from the Soviet drive for domination, from the increase in espionage and state terror remains great." "This is reality," he said, adding that "Closing our eyes will not make it disappear." The president called for support for his Strategic Defense Initiative, the so-called "star wars" program, saying that "a security shield can one day render nuclear weapons obsolete and free mankind from the prison of nuclear terror."

On the U.S.-Soviet relations, Reagan said: "It is my hope that our fireside summit in Geneva and Mr. Gorbachev's upcoming visit to America can lead to a more stable relationship." However, he stressed, "we cannot stroll into the future with child-like faith... Logic and history compel us to accept that our relationship be guided by realism -- rockhard, clear-eyed, steady, and sure." "If the Soviet Government wants an agreement that truly reduces nuclear arms, there will be an agreement," headded. On the record huge trade deficits facing the country, Reagan pledged he will continue to counter unfair trading practices, pry open closed foreign markets to U.S. goods and oppose protectionist legislation. "We have begun coordinating economic and monetary policy among our major trading partners," he said, adding that he has asked Treasury Secretary James Baker to undertake a study of a possible world currency conference and report to him by the end of the year.

NAKASONE SAYS GORBACHEV SHOULD VISIT JAPAN FIRST

[Text] Tokyo, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, who has received an invitation from Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to visit Moscow, said today that Gorbachev should visit Japan first.

Nakasone made the remarks in replying to question raised by the opposition Japan Socialist Party during a debate in the House of Representatives. He said Gorbachev must come to Tokyo before he will go to Moscow because four Japanese premier have visited the Soviet Union and no Soviet head of Government has ever visited Japan. This time, he said, the Soviet Union should send its leader to Japan. During the Soviet-Japanese foreign ministerial talks held here last January, an agreement was reached to exchange summit visits.

JAPAN TRADE BALANCE FAVORABLE WITH PRC, OTHERS

OW311702 Beijing XINHUA in English 1444 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Tokyo, January 31 (XINHUA) -- Japan registered a record surplus of 56 billion U.S. dollars in trade with the rest of the world in 1985, according to a statistics released by the Finance Ministry here today. The statistics showed that Japan's exports last year totalled 173.9 billion U.S. dollars, an increase of 3.4 percent over 1984, while its imports totalled 117.9 billion dollars, 4.9 percent less than the previous year. The country also scored a favorable balance in trade with the United States, the European Economic Community and China.

XINHUA ROUNDUP VIEWS PHILIPPINES BEFORE ELECTION

OW041634 Beijing XINHUA in English 1620 GMT 4 Feb 86

["Round-up: Philippines, Prior to Election " (by Chen Jiayong) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Manila, February 4 (XINHUA) -- With the February 7 presidential election of the Philippines only 3 days away, both candidates of the ruling party and the opposition have entered into the homestretch and are preparing for the last spurt. The question of primary concern is undoubtedly who will be the winner. Observers here, however, feel it's still too early to predict the result of the election.

President of the Philippines since 1966, Ferdinand Marcos was reelected as head of the country in June 1981. His office term, as the Constitution stipulates, is due to expire in June, 1987, but the president decided to cut it short in response to the growing domestic and foreign pressure and submitted himself to the snap election. The election campaign, which began December 11, 1985, has so far brought the president to 20 of the country's 74 provinces. His challenger, Corazon Aquino, widow of the assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino Jr., has toured 66 provinces, something that the president has been unable to do because of his health.

Marcos could have expected an easy victory had the opposition remained a divided force. However, the many fractions in the past have been united at present and have succeeded in filing one unified ticket at the last minute to constitute a real threat to the president's 20-year-old rule. Mrs. Aquino, though inexperienced as a politician, is by no means weak. The 53-year-old presidential candidate has drawn big and eager crowds wherever she campaigned. People want a change that she represents, she said. Observers here believe that many of the intellectuals, businessmen and professionals, and urban residents are likely to vote for her. The influential Catholic Church is also widely perceived to have been supporting the opposition.

On the other side, Marcos, with his almost unlimited campaign chest, is still strong in many aspects. The president has the mighty political machinery and controls the country's one million government employees, and the Armed Forces in particular. People believe that he will resort to all possible means to ensure his victory. Early this month, election-related deaths rose to 40 despite the strongly worded pastoral letter issued by the Catholic Bishops' Conference a week before, expressing "grave concern and great sadness" over electoral violence that "is threatening to escalate to a level never experienced before."

To make sure that no massive frauds will be conducted in the election, the National Citizens Movement for Free Elections, an organization officially credited as a citizens' arm, has mobilized some 500,000 people to monitor the polls and to conduct an advance count of ballots. Meanwhile, the United States has sent hundreds of observers and reporters to the country where Washington maintains two of its biggest military bases in Asia. One senior member of the American observer delegation disclosed that his government may even encourage a military takeover, if election frauds trigger social turmoils, the local press reported. The U.S. 7th Fleet came in the Philippine waters last week amidst the fear that any American interference in the internal affairs of the Philippines will increase the complexity of the country's troublesome situation.

People here have every reason to worry about the country's future to be marred possibly by more continued disturbances even after the February 7 election.

CAMBODIAN TROOPS MUTINY, KILL 30 SRV SOLDIERS

OW041011 Beijing XINHUA in English 0718 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Some 30 Vietnamese soldiers were killed and 20 others wounded in the city of Takev in Kampuchea between January 25 and 27 when some 300 Heng Samrin troops in Phnom Penh opened fire against the Vietnamese, radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today. No detail about the fighting has so far been disclosed. The clash between the Heng Samrin and Vietnamese troops is continuing, the radio said.

On December 25 of last year when the Democratic Kampuchean National Army attacked the Vietnamese troops stationed in the city, some 200 Heng Samrin soldiers in Phnom Penh also joined the attack. As a result, a large number of Vietnamese troops were killed. The radio called on the National Army and guerrillas around the city to give material and moral support to the Heng Samrin troops in their just action. It was the fourth such reported mutiny by Phnom Penh troops in less than two months.

SRV INTRUDERS DRIVEN OUT OF EAST THAILAND

[Text] Bangkok, February 4 (XINHUA) -- All Vietnamese intruders in Thailand's eastern Ubon Ratchathani Province have been driven out of Thai territory, local press reported today. Quoting Army spokesman Major General Narudon Detpradiyut as saying yesterday, the report said that the Thai Army suffered substantial losses during the action. Narudon did not state when the intruders were expelled.

The Vietnamese intruded into Nam Yun District of the province on January 25 and occupied some hilly areas. The Thai Army launched a counterattack against the intruders on February 1. Despite the fact that the Vietnamese have been driven out of Thai territory, Narudon said, the Thai Army has to maintain vigilance as Vietnamese troops are occupying favorable terrains on the other side of the Thai-Kampuchean border.

U.S. CUTS MILITARY AID TO THAILAND FOR 1986

OW041125 Beijing XINHUA in English 0715 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 4 (XINHUA) -- U.S. military aid to Thailand for fiscal year 1986 will amount to 92.5 million U.S. dollars, 14.3 million U.S. dollars less than the previous year, it was learned here today. The U.S. military assistance to Thailand falls into four categories, namely, military assistance program, foreign military sales, international military education and training and economic support fund. Only training and economic support funds survived the cut this year. Last month the United States provided five million U.S. dollars worth of assistance to Thai villagers affected by the influx of Indochinese refugees.
